Retroactive Revision of Temporary Child Support Order: When the parties separated, the District Court entered a temporary child support order directing the husband to pay $300 a month in spousal maintenance and $200 a month for each child in support. That temporary order was later modified to require the husband to pay a total of $800 a month in temporary maintenance and support. The final decree directed the husband to pay child support of $190 a month for each child, retroactive to the time of separation, and did not award any spousal maintenance. The wife alleged error in the retroactive modification of support, arguing that there was no change in circumstances that would allow a downward modification. The Supreme Court affirmed the modification, noting that the District Court was revising a temporary order, not modifying a final decree as specified in 40-4-208(1). It is clearly within the District Court's authority to make the maintenance and support awards retroactive (see In re Marriage of Wersland, 249 M 169, 814 P2d 991 (1991)), and the revision of the order did not constitute an abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Stoneman, 2000 MT 274, 302 M 107, 14 P3d 12, 57 St. Rep. 1145 (2000).

Temporary Modification Requiring Supervised Visitation — Supervision Not "Restriction" Requiring Special Procedure: Following Tamara's divorce from Robert, Tamara moved for an ex parte order modifying Robert's visitation rights to require that Robert's visitation with the parties' daughter be supervised. The basis for the motion was that Robert had secretly sexually assaulted other women, including Tamara's sisters. The motion was made on the basis of 40-4-220(2)(a)(ii). The District Court granted the motion without following the procedure provided in subsections (3) and (6) of this section. The Supreme Court upheld the granting of the ex parte order, citing In re Marriage of Hickey, 213 M 38, 689 P2d 1222 (1984), and the commissioners' note to this section and noting that the imposition of supervision is not a "restriction" within the meaning of subsection (3) of this section. In re Marriage of Njos/Allard, 270 M 54, 889 P2d 1192, 52 St. Rep. 74 (1995).

Primary Custodial Parent as Noncustodial Parent During Summer Months — Visitation Entitlement: Mother had primary custody of children during school months, and father had visitation rights during summer months, on weekends and alternating holidays, and at other reasonable times. No corresponding visitation allowance was made for mother during summer months. The Supreme Court held that father's visitation rights for 3 summer months amounted to custody of the children and that mother, who was the noncustodial parent during those months, was entitled to reasonable visitation because there was no evidence that visitation would in any way endanger the children. In re Marriage of Corey, 266 M 304, 880 P2d 824, 51 St. Rep. 859 (1994), distinguishing Meyer v. Meyer, 204 M 177, 663 P2d 328 (1983).

Order to Provide Visitation Information Not Abuse of Discretion: Father expressed a desire to share in decisionmaking regarding his children's activities but refused to communicate with the children's mother except through third-party intermediaries, which was found by the trial court to be an unsatisfactory method of communication in such matters. Because it was in the children's best interests, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in requiring father to provide information concerning the children's whereabouts when they spent time with father and in ordering that priority be given to the children's scheduled activities. In re Marriage of Hunt, 264 M 159, 870 P2d 720, 51 St. Rep. 209 (1994).

Visitation Contingent on Child Support Payments Being Current — Visitation and Support Not Interdependent: While recognizing that visitation and child support are not interdependent, under the unique circumstances of this case, the Supreme Court nevertheless affirmed the trial court's intention to ensure that child support would be current before visitation could be exercised, based on the wife's continuing problems in receiving support and a stipulation by the parties at trial that support be current before visitation would be allowed. In re Marriage of Erler, 261 M 65, 862 P2d 12, 50 St. Rep. 1195 (1993).

Error to Limit Visitation When Evidence That Liberal Visitation in Best Interest of Child: The trial court reduced the father's visitation, apparently on the basis that the father had moved away and would not be able to visit his daughter on weekends during the school year. The Supreme Court held that it was error to deny the husband weekend visitation that had been granted in a previous order, particularly when uncontroverted evidence indicated that the frequent visitation was in the child's best interest. In re Marriage of Anderson, 260 M 246, 859 P2d 451, 50 St. Rep. 1028 (1993).

Conditional Exercise of Grandparent Visitation: It was not an abuse of District Court discretion to grant grandparents the right of visitation only if the visitation was simultaneous with that of the father. In re Marriage of Kovash, 260 M 44, 858 P2d 351, 50 St. Rep. 934 (1993).

Effort to Curb Parental Behavior Through Visitation Conditions Not Abuse of Discretion: Father's contact with his children was suspended with conditions. He was allowed to visit but was required to meet specific conditions regarding weekly telephone calls. If he complied with those conditions, he was given the opportunity to visit the children during Christmas holidays. If the Christmas visits were successful, he was allowed 1 month of summer visitation. If he did not meet the conditions, the court would terminate his visitation rights. Placing conditions on visitation in an effort to curb the father's behavior toward the children and foster a more healthy relationship did not amount to a termination of visitation rights or constitute an abuse of court discretion. In re Marriage of Kovash, 260 M 44, 855 P2d 351, 50 St. Rep. 934 (1993). See also In re Marriage of Hunt, 264 M 159, 870 P2d 720, 51 St. Rep. 209 (1994).

Restrictions on Travel Improper: As part of its visitation order, the District Court restrained father from going to Coeur D'Alene, Idaho, where the mother and children resided, on the grounds that his past travel to the city had resulted in harassment. While maintaining that other portions of the order intended to keep the father away from the mother and children, the Supreme Court struck the travel restrictions as overly broad, considering that the father might travel through the city or have other business there. In re Marriage of Kovash, 260 M 44, 858 P2d 351, 50 St. Rep. 934 (1993).

Visitation More Reasonable Than Standard Set in In Re Marriage of Alt: The Supreme Court held that the burden was on the father to show that a visitation schedule was unreasonable since it was more generous than the schedule of alternate weekends, alternate holidays, 1 evening per week, and 2 weeks in the summer found to be reasonable in In re Marriage of Alt, 218 M 327, 708 P2d 258 (1985). In re Marriage of Tahija, 253 M 505, 833 P2d 1095, 49 St. Rep. 571 (1992).

Visitation Dependent on Mental Health Evaluation: The father was granted reasonable visitation dependent upon his obtaining a mental health evaluation and meeting with a psychologist to discuss how to create a nondestructive relationship with his children. He appealed, arguing that the lower court had not made a finding of endangerment, as required by statute. The Supreme Court held that it would not construe the statute so narrowly that a lower court would be unable to design visitation to reflect the children's best interests. In re Marriage of Reininghaus, 250 M 86, 817 P2d 1159, 48 St. Rep. 868 (1991), followed in Romo v. Hickok, 264 M 341, 871 P2d 894, 51 St. Rep. 320 (1994). See also In re Marriage of Njos/Allard, 270 M 54, 889 P2d 1192, 52 St. Rep. 74 (1995).

Sole Custody Awarded Father — Mother's Mental Health a Factor in Granting Supervised Visitation — No Abuse of Discretion: Mother appealed from the District Court child custody order in a dissolution of marriage granting the father sole custody of their son and granting the mother supervised visitation rights. The Supreme Court ruled that because mental health is a factor used in determining the best interests of the child, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in relying upon the opinion of experts that the mother was in need of treatment and in granting sole custody to the father and ordering supervised visitation by the mother. In re Marriage of Cook, 250 M 210, 819 P2d 180, 48 St. Rep. 795 (1991).

Superior Rights Not Given Stepmother: The original divorce decree did not give the mother the right to visit the children when they were in the sole custody of the father's new wife. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had not abused its discretion in placing that restriction on the mother's visitation rights and that the decree did not create superior rights for the new wife. In re Marriage of Smith & Foley, 242 M 378, 791 P2d 51, 47 St. Rep. 814 (1990).

No Evidence That Father Posed Threat to His Children — No Limitations on Visitation: In the wife's proposed findings adopted by the trial court, there were allegations that the father had physically abused the children. The Supreme Court ruled that the lower court had erred in placing restrictions on the father's visitation rights with no evidence to support the allegations that he constituted a threat to the well-being of his children. In re Marriage of Gebhardt, 240 M 165, 783 P2d 400, 46 St. Rep. 2026 (1989).

Limitation Upon Evidence of Drug Involvement: Findings of past but extensive involvement with illegal drugs, a comparatively affluent lifestyle without employment, and failure to successfully complete inpatient treatment for chemical dependency constituted sufficient credible evidence to warrant limitation of a parent's overnight visitation rights. In re Marriage of B.H.J. & D.J., 233 M 461, 760 P2d 753, 45 St. Rep. 1636 (1988).

Liberal Visitation Contingent on Establishment of Relationship: A District Court's decision to require that a man determined to be the father in paternity proceedings, who was a complete stranger to the child, establish a relationship with the child before beginning more liberal visitation did not violate this section. State ex rel. Sorenson v. Roske, 229 M 151, 745 P2d 365, 44 St. Rep. 1854 (1987).

Child's Health as Factor in Limiting Visitation — Arrangements to Suit Child, Not Parents: The trial court noted that the child appeared to suffer some emotional problems as a result of visitation with the father and had suffered a physical injury as a result of the father's carelessness. The court was also concerned about the father's potential for chemical abuse. These health concerns were properly considered in limiting the father's visitation. Further, visitation rights should be arranged to suit the best interests of the child, not the parents. In re Marriage of Jacobson, 228 M 458, 743 P2d 1025, 44 St. Rep. 1678 (1987).

Joint Custody Visitation Limitations Proper: It was within the court's discretion to award parents joint custody while limiting the father's visitation to alternate weekends, alternate holidays, an alternate week night, Father's Day, and 3 nonconsecutive weeks in the summer. In re Marriage of Tonne, 226 M 1, 733 P2d 1280, 44 St. Rep. 411 (1987), followed in In re Marriage of Fitzhugh, 248 M 306, 811 P2d 1273, 48 St. Rep. 438 (1991).

Fifty-Mile Radius Visitation Limit Upheld: It was reasonable and in the children's best interests for trial court to put a 50-mile radius limitation in its order that when husband and wife were within a 50-mile radius of each other they had the privilege of visitation for alternating weekends. The husband lived in Havre and the wife in Billings. Constant travel by the children between those two cities would be too much of a hardship in view of the 250-mile distance (by road) between them. Furthermore, the court also allowed the parties to work out any visitation agreement they wished, and they could thus modify the 50-mile radius limit by mutual consent. In re Marriage of Nalivka, 222 M 84, 720 P2d 683, 43 St. Rep. 1079 (1986).

Court Not in Error in Denying Joint Custody and Limiting Summer Visitation: Appellant husband appealed judgment denying joint custody and limiting summer visitation to 2 weeks each summer. Appellant sought joint custody and summer visitation of 6 to 10 weeks. The District Court detailed to an extraordinary degree its concerns on the children's best interests. Furthermore, it left the door open for modification and for appellant to demonstrate, in the future, his capacity for joint custody or a longer period of visitation. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion and that its judgment was supported by substantial credible evidence. In re Marriage of Shelton, 219 M 456, 712 P2d 782, 43 St. Rep. 89 (1986).

Visitation Under Supervision of Director of Family Court Services: The District Court did not abuse its discretion by awarding custody to wife with reasonable rights of visitation remaining with husband under the supervision of the Director of Family Court services. The parties' welfare and the moral, physical, and emotional well-being of the two minor children must remain the primary consideration of the court. The court refused to interpret 40-4-217 so narrowly as to prevent the trial court from overseeing the visitation arrangements between the parties who exhibit emotions of aggression, anger, and violence. In re Marriage of Hickey, 213 M 38, 689 P2d 1222, 41 St. Rep. 1931 (1984).

Restricting Visitation — Same Standard as Modifying Custody Decree: The District Court modified custody and limited the mother's visitation rights. The District Court's restriction of mother's visitation is governed by 40-4-217, which is the same standard used to judge modification of a custody decree in 40-4-219. Since the modification is supported by the court's finding, there is no error in restricting the mother's visitation rights. R.L.S. & T.L.S v. Barkhoff, 207 M 199, 674 P2d 1082, 40 St. Rep. 1982 (1983).

Modification

Denial of Visitation — Expansion of Visitation Supported by Substantial Evidence: The record revealed substantial, credible evidence that the father was denied reasonable or liberal visitation and that it was in the child's best interests to expand the father's visitation schedule. Both parties presented evidence regarding visitation, and the court found the father's evidence more credible. Having considered all the evidence relating to visitation and the child's best interests, the court's finding that visitation was denied and its decision that visitation be expanded were affirmed. In re Marriage of Pearson, 1998 MT 236, 291 M 101, 965 P2d 268, 55 St. Rep. 992 (1998).

Modification Resulting in Reduction of Visitation Properly Denied: Gail and Tom Boyer had two children during their marriage. Their dissolution decree established joint custody, with physical custody awarded to Gail and visitation to Tom, including 6 weeks in the summer. Karleen and Stanley Overman had two children during their marriage. Their dissolution decree established joint custody, with physical custody awarded to Karleen and visitation to Stanley, including 4 weeks in the summer. After entry of the final dissolution decrees in each case, Gail married Stanley and Karleen married Tom, and the children of each marriage began residing with their mothers, with visitation arrangements worked out between the parties that respected each father's decreed rights. About 5 years later, the Overmans proposed a modified visitation plan to equalize the amount of time the children spent with their fathers by allowing each father 4 weeks of visitation. The District Court properly found that modification was not in the children's best interests because: (1) the proposed plan would require Tom to relinquish time with his children, to their detriment; (2) the proposed plan was more confusing than the existing plan and would alter a Christmas visitation that was previously agreed upon; (3) the plans in existence were workable and reasonable; and (4) the parties had accommodated each other's requests for visitation alterations in the past and a new plan would not make the parties cooperate any more than they had previously. In re Marriages of Boyer & Overman, 261 M 179, 862 P2d 384, 50 St. Rep. 1277 (1993).

Motion for Sole Custody — Change in Visitation Not Considered Change in Joint Custody: Parents were awarded joint custody, with mother as the primary caretaker. Father subsequently petitioned for sole custody based on changed circumstances, and a temporary modification to sole custody was granted. Later, the District Court quashed the temporary order and requested a custody evaluation and chemical dependency evaluation of the mother. After considering the evaluation results and interviewing the children, the court continued joint custody but amended the visitation schedule. Mother contended error in modification of the schedule because a change in visitation was not the issue before the court. However, when the parties retain joint custody, a change in visitation does not constitute a change in custody requiring a finding of serious endangerment. Therefore, denying the motion for sole custody but modifying the existing visitation schedule was not an abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Cogar, 252 M 272, 828 P2d 1361, 49 St. Rep. 247 (1992).

Motion Filed for Modification: Wife filed for modification of a child custody order, and the subsequent order issued by the court affected only the terms of the original custody decree that relate to the notice required prior to visitation and to allocation of transportation costs. In response to husband's argument that wife's motion for modification should be denied because it was not properly filed under the time limitations established in either Rule 59 or 60, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), the court held that the motion was filed under this section, which contains no time limitations. In re Marriage of Chase, 237 M 224, 772 P2d 1264, 46 St. Rep. 754 (1989), replacing previous opinion at 46 St. Rep. 540 (1989).

Unclear Whether Modification Affected Best Interest: Husband appealed from a modification order that altered only the terms of the original child custody order relating to the notice required prior to visitation and allocation of transportation costs. In response to husband's argument that the matter should be returned for further consideration of the best interests of the children, the court held that although there is not an adequate record to review the issue of best interests, the record does not disclose that the modification affected the best interests of the children. Therefore, the matter will not be reopened. In re Marriage of Chase, 237 M 224, 772 P2d 1264, 46 St. Rep. 754 (1989), replacing previous opinion at 46 St. Rep. 540 (1989).

Reasonable Visitation Provision Replaced by Fixed Visitation Schedule — No Abuse of Discretion: Following dissolution of marriage, mother was granted custody of two minor children with reasonable visitation awarded to father. In the ensuing months, the father was permitted to visit the children only once and further attempts to arrange visitation were not successful since the mother had no phone and would not respond to messages. The father petitioned the District Court to grant a fixed visitation schedule, and the petition was granted. Although not required under Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), the order contained findings and conclusions, including evidence that the District Court Judge considered the best interests of the children and the conclusion that the mother's suggested graduated basis visitation schedule required reasonableness that was lacking in both parties. The Supreme Court held that the District Court's aid was necessary to clarify the meaning of "reasonable visitation" and found no abuse of discretion in the District Court Judge's conclusion. In re Marriage of Vinecke, 221 M 58, 716 P2d 638, 43 St. Rep. 633 (1986). See also In re Marriage of Jensen, 223 M 434, 727 P2d 512, 43 St. Rep. 1891 (1986).

Modification of Visitation Rights — Finding Required by District Court: District Court may restrict a parent's visitation rights only if it finds the existing visitation arrangement seriously endangers the child's physical, mental, moral, or emotional health. Such a finding must appear in the record. This case was remanded for the lower court to enter such a finding in the record. In re Marriage of Robbins, 219 M 130, 711 P2d 1347, 42 St. Rep. 1897 (1985).

Prerequisites to Modification of Visitation Rights Order: Before order setting visitation rights could be modified, the court had to hold a visitation hearing on the matter, find that modification was in the best interests of the child, and support that finding with findings and conclusions. A modification order made without any of those steps, after the court held a contempt hearing to determine if the wife, who had custody, had denied the husband visitation, was vacated. Strong v. Weaver, 211 M 320, 683 P2d 1330, 41 St. Rep. 1386 (1984), followed in In re Marriage of Cox, 266 M 67, 878 P2d 903, 51 St. Rep. 672 (1994). See also In re Marriage of Nevin, 284 M 468, 945 P2d 58, 54 St. Rep. 981 (1997).

Modification — Restriction of Previous Rights: The District Court abused its discretion in issuing a judgment modifying a dissolution decree to restrict the petitioner's prior visitation rights without a finding that the existing visitation arrangement seriously endangered the child's physical, mental, moral, or emotional health. Furthermore, the record indicates no substantial credible evidence that would support such a finding. In re Marriage of Firman, 187 M 465, 610 P2d 178 (1980). Distinguished from case where amount of visitation time has not been reduced, but rather is merely to be exercised under guidance and supervision of Family Court services. Grounds for Modifying Visitation Decree: When visitation can be accomplished only by physically taking the boy against his will and forcing the visitation, grounds for modification of visitation exist. Lehman v. Billman, 178 M 367, 584 P2d 662 (1978).

Time Limit for Modification: The 2-year prohibition on motions to modify custody does not apply to motions for modification of visitation rights. Olson v. Olson, 175 M 444, 574 P2d 1004 (1978).

Moral Judgment of Parental Behavior — Modification of Visitation: The standard of physical, moral, mental, or emotional health used in the Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act does not introduce any new concepts into the law as it has existed for many years. The Supreme Court does not make a moral judgment of the particular litigant. Here, no abuse of discretion or mistake of law was found in order reducing father's visitation rights. Solie v. Solie, 172 M 132, 561 P2d 443 (1977).

Reduction of Visitation Right: The District Court did not make a mistake of law or abuse its discretion by concluding that the interest of a minor child, so that there would be no mental or emotional detriment, would be best served by reduction of the father's visitation right. Solie v. Solie, 172 M 132, 561 P2d 443 (1977).

Movement of Residence

Right of Interstate Travel as Basic Constitutional Freedom — Custodial Designation Improperly Revised: The District Court ordered that a mother who had relocated out of state must forfeit her status as primary custodian unless she moved back to Montana with the children. However, the right of interstate travel, which includes the right to migrate, resettle, find a new job, and start a new life, is a basic constitutional freedom recognized in Memorial Hosp. v. Maricopa County, 415 US 250, 39 L Ed 2d 306, 94 S Ct 1076 (1974), and described in Shapiro v. Thompson, 394 US 618, 22 L Ed 2d 600, 89 S Ct 1322 (1969), and Dunn v. Blumstein, 405 US 330, 31 L Ed 2d 274, 92 S Ct 995 (1972). A classification that operates to penalize persons who exercise this right must be justified by a compelling state interest, and the government's burden to justify this compelling interest is heavy. Absent legitimate, case-specific reasons and evidence pertaining to the particular child, there is no compelling state interest that justifies a court ordering a custodial parent to live in a state other than the state in which the parent freely chooses to reside. In the present case, the father failed in his burden to provide sufficient proof that the children's best interests would be most appropriately served by requiring the mother to move back to Montana or lose her status as primary physical custodian. The trial court erred in failing to apply the former rebuttable statutory presumption in 40-4-212(3)(a) (deleted 1997) regarding a grant of custody to the parent who has provided most of the primary care during the child's life and in ordering that custody be alternated between the parents every 2 years. In re Custody of D.M.G. & T.J.G., 1998 MT 1, 287 M 120, 951 P2d 1377, 55 St. Rep. 1 (1998), following In re Marriage of Cole, Custodial Parent in Joint Custody Moving to Another State — Entitled to Presumption: A parent, under a joint custody arrangement of 6 months' custody to each parent, is presumptively entitled under former law to move with the child and settle in a new home; such moving and resultant school change do not constitute grounds for modification of the terms of the joint custody by the other parent. In re Marriage of Paradis, 213 M 177, 689 P2d 1263, 41 St. Rep. 2041 (1984).

Right of Custodial Parent to Fix Residence of Children: Oregon court had jurisdiction to award custody of children where both parties in divorce action were before court, although father then left state with children before decree was rendered. Under 40-6-231 (now repealed), mother who was awarded custody of children had right to fix their residence, and their residence could not be changed except by her. Application of Butts, 129 M 440, 289 P2d 949 (1955).

Custodial Parent Moving From Jurisdiction Granting Divorce to Montana — Child's Domicile Changed Causing Out-of-State Divorce Court to Lose Jurisdiction: Where mother received a California divorce and custody of minor children with permission of California divorce court to move to Montana, children became domiciliaries of Montana and California court lost jurisdiction to modify decree so as to increase father's visitation rights. (Dissent by Chief Justice Adair.) Application of Enke, 129 M 353, 287 P2d 19 (1955), certiorari denied 350 US 923, 100 L Ed 808, 76 S Ct 212 (1955).

Custodial Parent Authorized to Change Residence of Minor Child: Under 40-6-231 (now repealed), a divorced wife to whom custody of minor child had been awarded was authorized to fix child's place of residence. In re Metcalf's Estate, 93 M 542, 19 P2d 905 (1933).

Commissioners' Note

This section states an important rule designed to promote family privacy and to prevent intrusions upon the prerogatives of the custodial parent at the request of the noncustodial parent. In general, the custodial parent should be, and in this section is designated as, the person responsible for post-divorce decisions concerning the upbringing of the child. If the parents agree in writing about a particular problem such as the child's religious upbringing, the court may enforce the agreement subject to constitutional constraints, Lynch v. Uhlenhopp, 78 N.W.2d 491, 248 Iowa 68 (1956). But in the absence of parental agreement, the court should not intervene solely because a choice made by the custodial parent is thought by the noncustodial parent (or by the judge) to be contrary to the child's best interest. To justify such an intervention, the judge must find that the custodial parent's decision would "endanger the child's physical health or significantly impair his emotional development"—a standard patently more onerous than the "best interest" test. The standard would leave to the custodial parent such decisions as whether the child should go to private or public school, whether the child should have music lessons, what church the child should attend. The court could intervene in the decision of grave behavioral or social problems such as refusal by a custodian to provide medical care for a sick child. [Annotator's note: See 1997 parenting plan provisions in 40-4-233 and 40-4-234.]

Subsection (b) [(2)] pursues the family privacy theme by significantly limiting the judge's authority to order supervision of the child and the custodial parent. To be sure, there are situations in which an objective umpire is needed to facilitate post-divorce adjustment to the custody and visitation decree. But in these situations both parents will usually recognize the need and agree to supervision. If the parents cannot agree to supervision, however, it should not be ordered unless the judge finds some extraordinary need for it. Thus, the provision adopts a more stringent standard than the normal "best interest" standard.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 514 in (2), at end of first sentence, inserted "supervised visitation by the noncustodial parent" and at beginning of second sentence inserted "The court may not order the" and at end substituted "to supervise the visitation" for "to exercise continuing supervision over the case to assure that the custodial or visitation terms of the decree are carried out". Amendment effective May 2, 1997.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 546 in (2) substituted "department of public health and human services" for "department of family services"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Saving Clause: Section 571, Ch. 546, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

1987 Amendment: Substituted "department of family services" for "county welfare department".

Case Notes

Best Interests of Child in Determining Custody for Purposes of Religious Education: A question of religious education must be strictly limited to the context of the best interests of the child. Courts will not debate the merits of different religions or show partiality to any religious faith, but courts will examine religious practices that interfere with a child's general welfare. In re Marriage of Gersovitz & Siegner, 238 M 506, 779 P2d 883, 46 St. Rep. 1455 (1989).

Management of Children's Accounts: District Court did not abuse its discretion when it allowed husband to manage financial accounts of the children that were to be kept separate from accounts of the husband and wife. In re Marriage of Williams, 220 M 232, 714 P2d 548, 43 St. Rep. 319 (1986).

Continuing Jurisdiction of the Court: Under the Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act, as under prior law, the District Court's jurisdiction in matters of custody is continuing. Foss v. Leifer, 170 M 97, 550 P2d 1309 (1976); Erhardt v. Erhardt, 171 M 49, 554 P2d 758 (1976).

Right of Custodial Parent to Fix Residence of Children: Oregon court had jurisdiction to award custody of children where both parties in divorce action were before court, although father then left state with children before decree was rendered. Mother who was awarded custody of children had right to fix their residence, and their residence could not be changed except by her. Application of Butts, 129 M 440, 289 P2d 949 (1955).

Custodial Parent Moving From Jurisdiction Granting Divorce to Montana — Child's Domicile Changed Causing Out-of-State Divorce Court to Lose Jurisdiction: Where mother received a California divorce and custody of minor children with permission of California divorce court to move to Montana, children became domiciliaries of Montana and California court lost jurisdiction to modify decree so as to increase father's visitation rights. (Dissent by Chief Justice Adair.) Application of Enke, 129 M 353, 287 P2d 19 (1955), certiorari denied 350 US 923, 100 L Ed 808, 76 S Ct 212 (1955).

Custodial Parent Authorized to Change Residence of Minor Child: Under this section a divorced wife to whom custody of minor child had been awarded was authorized to fix child's place of residence. In re Metcalf's Estate, 93 M 542, 19 P2d 905 (1933).

Commissioners' Note

Most experts who have spoken to the problems of post-divorce adjustment of children believe that insuring the decree's finality is more important than determining which parent should be the custodian. See Watson, The Children of Armageddon: Problems of Custody Following Divorce, 21 Syracuse L.Rev. 55 (1969). This section is designed to maximize finality (and thus assure continuity for the child) without jeopardizing the child's interest. Because any emergency which poses an immediate threat to the child's physical safety usually can be handled by the juvenile court, subsection (a) [(omitted in Montana)] prohibits modification petitions until at least two years have passed following the initial decree, with a "safety valve" for emergency situations. To discourage the noncustodial parent who tries to punish a former spouse by frequent motions to modify, the subsection includes a two-year waiting period following each modification decree. During that two-year period, a contestant can get a hearing only if he can make an initial showing, by affidavit only, that there is some greater urgency for the change than that the child's "best interest" requires it. During the two-year period the judge should deny a motion to modify, without a hearing, unless the moving party carries the onerous burden of showing that the child's present environment may endanger his physical, mental, moral, or emotional health.

Subsection (b) [(1)] in effect asserts a presumption that the present custodian is entitled to continue as the child's custodian. It does authorize modifications which serve the child's "best interest;" but this standard is to be applied under the principle that modification should be made only in three situations: where the custodian agrees to the change; where the child, although formally in the custody of one parent, has in fact been integrated into the family of the petitioning parent (to avoid encouraging noncustodial kidnapping, this ground requires the consent of the custodial parent); or where the noncustodial parent can prove both that the child's present environment is dangerous to physical, mental, moral, or emotional health and that the risks of harm from change of environment are outweighed by the advantage of such a change to the child. The last phrase of subsection (b) (3) [(1) (c), now deleted] is especially important because it compels attention to the real issue in modification cases. Any change in the child's environment may have an adverse effect, even if the noncustodial parent would better serve the child's interest. Subsection (b) (3) [(1) (c), now deleted] focuses the issue clearly and demands the presentation of evidence relevant to the resolution of that issue.

Subsection (c) [(5)] provides an additional sanction against vexatious and harassing attempts to relitigate custody.

Chapter 405 In (3), at end, inserted reference to subsection (8); and inserted (8) establishing procedure whereby parent or person granted custody may file objection to current custody right of parent convicted of certain serious crimes and placing burden on convicted parent to prove custody by convicted parent does not seriously endanger child's health and modification of custody is not in child's best interest.

1987 Amendment: Inserted (1)(e) and (1)(f) providing as a basis for modification of a custody decree a custodial parent's attempts to prevent contact or visitation between the child and noncustodial parent or a change of a child's residence to another state; inserted (2) creating presumption based on subsection (1)(e); and inserted (3) providing for a new visitation schedule under subsection (1)(f) and apportionment of transportation costs.

GENERAL

Failure to Raise Constitutional Parenting Rights at Earliest Opportunity Resulting in Waiver of Issues: Nelson argued for the first time on appeal that the District Court's substantial modification of his parenting rights violated his constitutional rights to due process and equal protection. Because parenting rights are fundamental, Nelson contended that the hearing and findings of the District Court must undergo constitutional analysis. However, Nelson never objected at the hearing or in any posthearing motions to the District Court that the hearing violated his constitutional rights. A constitutional issue is waived if not presented at the earliest opportunity, and Nelson's failure to raise the questions until appeal resulted in waiver of those issues. In re Custody of Arneson-Nelson, 2001 MT 242, 307 M 60, 36 P3d 874 (2001). See also Dodd v. East Helena, 180 M 518, 591 P2d 241 (1979), and Billings Deaconess Hosp. v. Angel, 219 M 490, 712 P2d 1323 (1986).

Motion to Modify Custody Considered at Hearing on Ex Parte Temporary Custody — Abuse of Discretion: Father filed two motions, one to modify custody pursuant to this section and one to continue a temporary ex parte custody order pursuant to 40-4-220. At the hearing held for the sole purpose of determining whether the temporary custody order should be continued, the District Court also resolved father's motion to modify custody, concluding that the requirements for modification were not met. However well intentioned, the procedure used by the District Court in considering both motions at the same hearing was an abuse of discretion and deprived father of notice and the opportunity to be heard on the modification motion. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded for further proceedings on the motion to modify. In re Marriage of Huotari, 284 M 285, 943 P2d 1295, 54 St. Rep. 884 (1997).

Modification of Custody Order Required by Substantial Change in Circumstances — Application of In Re Marriage of Johnson Required — Jurisdictional Prerequisites — Absurd Application of Statute Avoided: After making an agreement for child custody as part of the dissolution of her marriage, Kimberly determined to attend college and moved from Lewistown to Billings with her children. On a remand from the Supreme Court, the District Court held that In re Marriage of Johnson, 266 M 158, 879 P2d 689 (1994), did not apply because custody was not being transferred from the primary custodian to the secondary custodian. The Supreme Court held that contrary to the District Court's interpretation, Johnson did apply to the case and that Johnson applied to any case in which a custody modification would have the effect of substantially changing the children's primary residence, requiring that the District Court must first meet the jurisdictional requirements of this section. However, the Supreme Court found that a literal application of that statute would cause an absurd result by its application only to movement of a child to another state and not to instances in which the child is moved from one end of the state to another or to another country. For this reason, the Supreme Court held that if a change has occurred in the circumstances of the child or the child's custodian, causing the children to move from one location to another in a manner that would hinder the effectiveness of the custody arrangement, then the jurisdictional requirements of this section have been met and the District Court may modify the custody arrangement pursuant to 40-4-212. The Supreme Court then applied the rule to the case before it and concluded that the modification of the custody arrangement changing the custody of Kimberly's ex-husband from 160 days to 75 days annually was in the best interests of the children, as demonstrated in the record. In re Marriage of Syverson, 281 M 1, 931 P2d 691, 54 St. Rep. 32 (1997).

Denial of Motion for Temporary Change of Custody Not Appealable: The Supreme Court held that although the denial of Shupe's motion for a temporary change of custody was not appealable under appellate rules, the District Court also denied Shupe's petition to modify custody and that order was appealable. In re Marriage of Shupe, 276 M 409, 916 P2d 744, 53 St. Rep. 447 (1996).

Modification Limited to Older Child: The divorce decree gave sole custody of all children to the wife. The husband subsequently moved to modify the decree to change the custody status of the older child. In its order, the District Court changed the custody of all children from sole to joint. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, ruling that because the issue of two children was not properly before the court and because the court failed to comply with the statutory requirements, the court lacked jurisdiction to modify the existing custody of the two younger children. In re Marriage of Boyer, 274 M 282, 908 P2d 665, 52 St. Rep. 1233 (1995).

Modification of Custody Based on Best Interests of Children — Affirmed Despite Application of Wrong Statute: The lower court granted the father's motion to modify the joint custody provisions of the divorce decree to allow him to have primary custody of three of the parties' five children. The Supreme Court noted that the lower court should have applied this section because the modification had the effect of substantially changing the primary residence of the three children. However, because the mother had not objected to the application of the wrong statute, the Supreme Court stated that it would review the lower court's action based upon its application of 40-4-212. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had not erred in finding that the best interests of the three children were served by a change in custody even if it resulted in splitting up the five children. In re Marriage of Lockman, 266 M 194, 879 P2d 710, 51 St. Rep. 726 (1994).

Petition Resulting in Change of Primary Residence of Children in Joint Custody Construed as Petition to Terminate Joint Custody — Jurisdictional Requirements Applicable — Best Interest Standard Applicable on Petition Not Resulting in Change of Primary Residence: A motion or petition to modify a sole custody provision or to terminate a joint custody provision must satisfy the jurisdictional prerequisites set out in this section. Likewise, a motion or petition to modify child custody provisions in a dissolution decree that have the effect of substantially changing the primary residence of the parties' children, even though the formal joint custody designation is retained, is to be construed as a motion or petition to terminate joint custody and must also satisfy the jurisdictional prerequisites set out in this section. Any effort to modify the physical custody arrangement in a decree that provides for joint custody but that does not seek a substantial change in the children's primary residence may be considered according to the best interest standard set out in 40-4-212. In this case, because the mother sought a modification of the children's physical custody arrangement, the District Court erred in modifying physical custody without finding substantial endangerment as required by this section. In re Marriage of Johnson, 266 M 158, 879 P2d 689, 51 St. Rep. 703 (1994), followed in In re Marriage of Gallagher, 266 M 358, 880 P2d 1303, 51 St. Rep. 840 (1994), In re Marriage of Ansell/Elser, 271 M 265, 895 P2d 619, 52 St. Rep. 434 (1995), and In re Marriage of Syverson, 281 M 1, 931 P2d 691, 54 St. Rep. 32 (1997).

Appointment of Attorney for Children Not Necessary — Children's Position Adequately Developed: In a change of custody proceeding, mother's motion that the court appoint an attorney for the children was not ruled on and the court did not state why an appointment was not made. The Supreme Court carefully reviewed the record to determine if an attorney was required for the children. The court found substantial expert and other evidence, largely uncontradicted, that stepfather subjected the children to ritual satanic sexual abuse, that the boy had expressed suicidal wishes, that the father and his subsequent wife were better suited to have custody, that the children were progressing well in the father's custody and had not progressed well in the mother's custody, and that the mother behaved erratically toward the children and sometimes acted contrary to the children's best interests. The Supreme Court found that the lower court did not err in failing to appoint an attorney for the children because the issues as to their best interests were well-developed. The court also expressly overruled the holding in In re Gullette, 173 M 132, 566 P2d 396 (1977), that in a contested guardianship proceeding in which custody is in serious dispute, the court must appoint independent counsel for the child or make a finding stating why the appointment was not necessary. McDowell v. McDowell, 263 M 252, 868 P2d 1250, 51 St. Rep. 42 (1994).

Evidentiary Objections Raised for First Time on Appeal: The lower court made a finding based on hospital reports that were not a part of the record. Objection on appeal could not be considered because no objection was made in the lower court. McDowell v. McDowell, 263 M 252, 868 P2d 1250, 51 St. Rep. 42 (1994).

Refusal to Allow Children to Testify Not Error: The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's decision to refuse to require the parties' children to testify in a custody modification action. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had considered the children's wishes, as reflected in a doctor's notes, but was not required to allow them to testify and further noted that the children were under 14 years of age. In re Marriage of Weis, 254 M 266, 837 P2d 407, 49 St. Rep. 800 (1992).

Motion for Sole Custody — Change in Visitation Not Considered Change in Joint Custody: Parents were awarded joint custody, with mother as the primary caretaker. Father subsequently petitioned for sole custody based on changed circumstances, and a temporary modification to sole custody was granted. Later, the District Court quashed the temporary order and requested a custody evaluation and chemical dependency evaluation of the mother. After considering the evaluation results and interviewing the children, the court continued joint custody but amended the visitation schedule. Mother contended error in modification of the schedule because a change in visitation was not the issue before the court. However, when the parties retain joint custody, a change in visitation does not constitute a change in custody requiring a finding of serious endangerment. Therefore, denying the motion for sole custody but modifying the existing visitation schedule was not an abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Cogar, 252 M 272, 828 P2d 1361, 49 St. Rep. 247 (1992).

Apprehension and Potential for Abuse in Home Environment Sufficient to Satisfy Serious Endangerment Standard: Mother remarried and moved her children to the home of their stepfather. The District Court found that the stepfather created a "hostile, siege-like" environment, partially because of his alcohol consumption, and that he had threatened to hit the children, verbally abused them, and mistreated the children's dog. The Supreme Court found that the children's fear of their stepfather, heightened by his drinking problem, the hostile home environment, and the potential for physical abuse, was sufficient to meet the standard of serious endangerment, warranting modification of the custody decree. In re Marriage of Anderson, 240 M 316, 783 P2d 1372, 46 St. Rep. 2155 (1989).

Changed Circumstances Rule Applicable to Modification of De Facto Custody Arrangement: The changed circumstances rule and the best interests test applicable to modification of judicial custody decrees, as set forth in this section, are to be applied in modifying a child custody arrangement where there has been no previous judicial supervision or decree. The best interests test of 40-4-212 does not apply. (See subsequent 1989 amendment.) In re Custody of Pierre Daniel Andre, 234 M 80, 761 P2d 809, 45 St. Rep 1745 (1988).

Repeated Custody Challenges — Attorney Fees Proper — Meritless Appeal Warranting Sanctions: The District Court's determination that the father's repeated actions for sole custody were intended to harass, obstruct, and delay the mother's right to joint custody and were an abuse of process highly detrimental to the best interests of the children was sufficient to trigger the award of attorney fees and costs against the father under this section. Appeal of the custody question to the Supreme Court was meritless, and sanctions were proper under Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21). In re Marriage of West, 233 M 47, 758 P2d 282, 45 St. Rep. 1281 (1988).

Judgment on Matters Outside Pleadings Void: A judgment or final order adjudging matters outside the issues raised by the pleadings is void as to the matters outside the pleadings. In re Custody of C.S.F., 232 M 204, 755 P2d 578, 45 St. Rep. 992 (1988), following Welch v. All Persons, 78 M 370, 254 P 179 (1927).

Continuing Court Jurisdiction Regarding Maintenance, Support, Property Disposition, and Child Custody — New Judge: Since under Montana law a court has continuing jurisdiction in matters of maintenance, support, property disposition, and child custody, a newly appointed judge may make findings in a case he or she has not heard, may need to hear new evidence, and is entitled to rely on the record established in the case. In re Marriage of Ensign, 227 M 357, 739 P2d 479, 44 St. Rep. 1146 (1987).

Petition to Terminate Joint Custody — Standard: A husband petitioned for modification of a joint custody arrangement. He sought permanent custody of the children, with limited visitation rights for the wife. The District Court denied the petition, finding that husband failed to establish that the children's present environment seriously endangered their physical, mental, moral, or emotional health. On appeal, the husband contended that the District Court should have applied the best interest of the children as the standard for the petition to modify joint custody. The Supreme Court held that under 40-4-224 (now repealed) the appropriate standard was serious endangerment, as applied by District Court under 40-4-219, since the husband's petition was one to actually terminate the wife's custody. In re Marriage of Gahm & Henson, 222 M 300, 722 P2d 1138, 43 St. Rep. 1281 (1986), followed in In re Marriage of Frydenlund, 255 M 474, 844 P2d 58, 49 St. Rep. 1074 (1992), distinguishing In re Custody of J.H., 231 M 301, 752 P2d 194 (1988), and In re Marriage of Johnson, 238 M 153, 777 P2d 305 (1989).

Reasonable Visitation Provision Replaced by Fixed Visitation Schedule — No Abuse of Discretion: Following dissolution of marriage, mother was granted custody of two minor children with reasonable visitation awarded to father. In the ensuing months, the father was permitted to visit the children only once and further attempts to arrange visitation were not successful since the mother had no phone and would not respond to messages. The father petitioned the District Court to grant a fixed visitation schedule, and the petition was granted. Although not required under Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), the order contained findings and conclusions, including evidence that the District Court Judge considered the best interests of the children and the conclusion that the mother's suggested graduated basis visitation schedule required reasonableness that was lacking in both parties. The Supreme Court held that the District Court's aid was necessary to clarify the meaning of "reasonable visitation" and found no abuse of discretion in the District Court Judge's conclusion. In re Marriage of Vinecke, 221 M 58, 716 P2d 638, 43 St. Rep. 633 (1986).

Exclusion of Evidence on Child Abuse Proceeding Concerning Father — Harmless Error: It was harmless error, in a child custody modification proceeding, for a District Court Judge to exclude evidence that a petition for temporary investigative authority, alleging sexual abuse by the father, had been filed under Title 41, ch. 3, and dismissed for lack of evidence after being heard by the same judge who made the custody modification determination. In re Marriage of Stout, 216 M 342, 701 P2d 729, 42 St. Rep. 856 (1985).

Joint Custody — Section for Termination Not Modification of Terms or Times: Based upon the terms of the uniform marriage and divorce law, 40-4-219 primarily addresses the traditional sole custody/visitation situation. However, in Montana, under 40-4-222 through 40-4-224 (all now repealed), joint custody is encouraged and provides shared rights and responsibilities for child rearing. Pursuant to 40-4-224(3) (now repealed), any modification of joint custody under 40-4-219 is for the termination of joint custody, not for the resolution of a dispute over the times or terms of physical custody. In re Marriage of Paradis, 213 M 177, 689 P2d 1263, 41 St. Rep. 2041 (1984).

When "Continuing Jurisdiction" Applicable: The Supreme Court held that the father's reliance on the doctrine of "continuing jurisdiction" as being the sole jurisdictional test in interstate custody disputes is misplaced. That doctrine is linked to 40-4-219 regarding jurisdiction to modify prior custody decrees. In those custody cases where a state other than Montana has a possible interest, the jurisdictional requirements of 40-4-211 must be met before a court may assert "continuing jurisdiction" under 40-4-219. In this custody dispute, the issue is one of overcoming the premier jurisdictional hurdle by establishing one of the disjunctive requirements of 40-4-211. The father established that both he and the child have a significant connection with Montana and there is substantial pertinent evidence here. Bolton v. Bolton, 212 M 212, 690 P2d 401, 41 St. Rep. 1698 (1984), followed in In re Marriage of Harper, 235 M 41, 764 P2d 1283, 45 St. Rep. 2145 (1988).

Change in Custody From Temporary Order — Not Modification of "Prior Custody Decree": In 1981, the District Court awarded the wife custody of the minor children during the pendency of an action for dissolution of marriage. The court specifically stated that this order was made without prejudice to the rights of the parties or their children. Two years later, the court entered the final custody order and in it awarded custody of one child to the father. The wife appealed, claiming that the District Court had erroneously modified an existing custody decree and had disturbed custodial continuity. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that although custody should be determined without delay and 2 years had elapsed prior to the final custody award, modification of the temporary custody order was proper. In re Marriage of Beitz, 211 M 111, 683 P2d 485, 41 St. Rep. 1247 (1984).

Admission of Opinion Testimony Not Based on Personal Observation — Not Reversible Error: In a custody dispute, when a social worker testified on the children's environment in their mother's home even though the social worker had not been to the home, the Supreme Court ruled that this was not reversible error because there was no evidence that the trial judge had relied on the social worker's testimony on this matter since there was other similar evidence in the record. Connolly v. Connolly, 209 M 298, 680 P2d 568, 41 St. Rep. 720 (1984).

Grounds for Modification: The marriage of the parents was dissolved in 1980 in Helena, Montana. Custody of the two older children was awarded to the father and that of the two younger children, aged 5 and 6, to the mother. The father and the older children remained in Helena, and the mother moved to Wyoming. In 1983, the father filed in District Court for a modification of the custody decree under the dangerous environment provision of this section, requesting that he be given custody of all four children. The District Court granted the father's request, and the mother appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that because testimony in the District Court indicated that: (1) on numerous occasions, the mother had left the younger children entirely unattended or in the care of their older siblings, the elder of whom was 10 years old, and the mother did not believe this to be a dangerous practice although expert testimony indicated that it was a dangerous practice; (2) the mother was having an intimate relationship with a married man who spent five nights a week with her and used obscene and abusive language in front of the children; and (3) it would be in the best interests of the children to grow up together, the District Court's decision was correct. Connolly v. Connolly, 209 M 298, 680 P2d 568, 41 St. Rep. 720 (1984), distinguished in In re Marriage of Youngs, 215 M 330, 698 P2d 404, 42 St. Rep. 405 (1985).

Hostility and Lack of Cooperation by Custodial Parent — Modification Granted: In proceeding relating to father's child visitation rights the mother testified, and the evidence showed, that she did not and would not encourage the child to have a relationship with child's father or father's parents. The mother was hostile toward all three and influenced the child against them. Various attempts at visitation agreements had all required the three to travel from California to Montana, where the mother and child resided. The court found a material change of circumstances threatening the emotional health and welfare of the child. Order giving the father custody for 3 weeks in California each August until further order of the court was affirmed. In re Custody of Ericka M., 208 M 201, 676 P2d 231, 41 St. Rep. 267 (1984).

Restricting Visitation — Same Standard as Modifying Custody Decree: The District Court modified custody and limited the mother's visitation rights. The District Court's restriction of mother's visitation is governed by 40-4-217, which is the same standard used to judge modification of a custody decree in 40-4-219. Since the modification is supported by the court's finding, there is no error in restricting the mother's visitation rights. R.L.S. & T.L.S v. Barkhoff, 207 M 199, 674 P2d 1082, 40 St. Rep. 1982 (1983).

Pre-Decree Facts to Be Considered — Best Interests of Child to Be Determined: Where the husband petitioned the court to modify its prior custody decree and, after the initial hearing on the petition, the wife sought to introduce evidence of the husband's unfitness as a parent, the District Court erred in refusing to admit that evidence. The statute requires the court to consider pre-decree facts unknown to the court, and even if the fitness of the husband was not challenged at the first hearing after which a custody order was issued, the court must still determine the best interests of the child. The court may therefore not exclude any testimony bearing on that issue which constitutes "facts . . . unknown to the court" at the time the decree was issued. Sarsfield v. Sarsfield, 206 M 397, 671 P2d 595, 40 St. Rep. 1736 (1983), distinguished in In re Marriage of Starks, 259 M 138, 855 P2d 527, 50 St. Rep. 719 (1993), and followed in In re Marriage of Johansen, 261 M 451, 863 P2d 407, 50 St. Rep. 1403 (1993).

Motion to Enforce Decree — Clarification of Visitation Provisions: Divorce decree gave wife custody of the minor children and gave husband reasonable visitation rights and certain periods of time during the summer and holidays. On wife's motion for enforcement of the decree, husband was clearly shown to have abused his visitation rights. The evidence warranted court's clarification of the rights by granting each party alternate weekends with the children, setting a specific 40-day summer visitation, and providing for the manner in which the husband was to arrange visitations. There was clearly no abuse of discretion. Baker v. Baker, 198 M 371, 646 P2d 522, 39 St. Rep. 1031 (1982).

Clarification of Visitation Rights Not Decree Modification: In a dissolution of marriage action, the wife was granted custody of the child and the husband had reasonable visitation rights. After the wife moved 600 miles away, the husband petitioned for specification of his visiting rights and was granted the right of clarification of his rights after appeal. The specification of visitation was not a modification of decree because the rights were not expanded but clarified. Sanderson v. Sanderson, 191 M 316, 623 P2d 1388, 38 St. Rep. 277 (1981).

Prior Custody Not Modified: Upon a petition for habeas corpus filed by a natural father for transfer of his child out of the temporary custody of the child's grandparents back to the father, who was initially awarded custody, the District Court erred in awarding custody to a third party who had not even sought custody, and the court erred in dismissing the father's petition. A District Court is without authority to award custody to a nonpetitioning party under ordinary circumstances. Moreover, where, as here, grandparents are seeking to modify a custody decree awarded to a natural parent, the District Court was bound to follow the law as set out in Schiele v. Sager, 174 M 533, 571 P2d 1142 (1977), Holm v. Holm, 172 M 81, 560 P2d 905 (1977), Groves v. Groves, 173 M 291, 567 P2d 459 (1977), and Easton v. Easton, 175 M 416, 574 P2d 989 (1978), that 40-4-211 through 40-4-221 are designed to favor custodial continuity over the rights of the custodians. In re Marriage of Korol, 188 M 351, 613 P2d 1016 (1980).

Custody Modification Denied — Elements of Section Not Established: The District Court did not err in failing to modify a custody decree since the elements of this section were not established to the satisfaction of the District Court, whose judgment remains undisturbed absent abuse of discretion. Weber v. Weber, 176 M 144, 576 P2d 1102 (1978).

Determining Custody Distinguished From Modification: The court did not err by failing to interview a minor child and order that an investigation and report concerning custodial arrangements be made, since the only issue before the court was whether to modify a custody decree, determination of custody already having been made. Easton v. Easton, 175 M 416, 574 P2d 989 (1978).

Jurisdictional Prerequisites: Subsections (1)(a) through (1)(c) are jurisdictional prerequisites to modification that were placed there to serve the basic policy behind the entire section, the policy of custodial continuity. To allow these crucial issues to be resolved merely by references to the best interests of the children would seriously weaken the statute. In re Custody of Dallenger, 173 M 530, 568 P2d 169 (1977).

Discretion of Court — Denial of Custody to and Limitation of Visitation Rights of Father: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in failing to modify the decree of divorce to award custody to the father in agreeing to modify the decree to limit his visitation rights in the best interests of the children. However, the mother's request for attorney fees was denied because the father's modification petition was not vexatious. Lee v. Gebhardt, 173 M 305, 567 P2d 466 (1977).

"Seize and Run" of Minor Children as Not Conferring Jurisdiction in Custody Modification Cases: District Court erred in assuming jurisdiction to award custody of minor children to father living in Montana based on children's physical presence before court where divorce and custody had been previously awarded to mother in State of Washington. Mere fact father seized children from mother living in Washington and brought them before Montana court is insufficient to establish jurisdiction over mother who has no "contacts" with State of Montana, and any attempt by Montana to exercise jurisdiction over her would be in violation of the Due Process Clause of 14th amendment to the United States Constitution. Therefore, any custody decree rendered by Montana court would not be entitled to full faith and credit, and the interstate custody battle would continue, and whatever chance the children have for stability and happiness would be lost amidst the din of warring parents. State ex rel. Muirhead v. District Court, 169 M 535, 550 P2d 1304 (1976).

Requirement of Procedural Due Process: In custody hearings one must receive notice, and therefore it was improper to terminate custody at a hearing on contempt for nonsupport when respondent had not been given notice that custody would be at issue. State ex rel. Shelhamer v. District Court, 159 M 11, 494 P2d 928 (1972).

SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE, FINDINGS

Primary Caretaker Presumption Rebutted — Modification of Joint Custody Affirmed: Michael and Michelle entered a joint child custody arrangement with physical custody shared equally, alternating weekly. One year after the dissolution, Michelle was accepted at a Billings university and sought a custody modification that would designate her as primary custodian and that would allow her to move with the child to Billings from the family's hometown of Glasgow. Michael testified as to the child's ties to home, school, community, and family in Glasgow, while Michelle stressed the importance of consistency of herself as primary physical custodial parent, having provided the primary care for the child during the 3 years prior to dissolution. After considering all the factors in 40-4-212, the District Court granted Michael primary residential custody during the school year and Michelle during the summer, with 9 days a month visitation for Michelle during the school year and Michael one weekend visitation a month during the summer. Michelle appealed, contending that the court failed to properly apply the primary care presumption in 40-4-212(3) (deleted 1997) because the court considered that both parents shared primary care equally since their divorce rather than considering that she had provided most of the primary care during the child's life. The Supreme Court, noting that there was no initial designation of primary caregiver or custodian in this case, held that a proper determination of the child's best interests was sufficient to rebut the primary care presumption. In re Marriage of Hlad, 282 M 449, 938 P2d 673, 54 St. Rep. 426 (1997), distinguishing In re Marriage of Abrahamson, 278 M 336, 924 P2d 1334 (1996).

Return of Custody to Primary Residential Parent Following Temporary Change in Residence: Following a period of change in residential custody from mother to father after allegations of neglect and abuse were raised by the father, mother sought a reinstatement of her residential custody. Following a number of hearings over 2 years, the District Court found that: (1) there had been no significant change in circumstances of either the children or the mother; (2) it was in the best interests of the children to return to the mother; and (3) none of the six factors in subsection

(1) of this section merited a permanent change in residential custody. The court further found that the father had denied and frustrated and likely would continue to deny and frustrate contact between the mother and the children. Because the court made a determination on each of the statutory factors and because the findings and conclusions were supported by substantial credible evidence, the court did not err in returning residential custody to the mother. In re Marriage of Allison, 269 M 250, 887 P2d 1217, 51 St. Rep. 1502 (1994), followed in In re J.J.G., 1998 MT 28, 287 M 313, 954 P2d 1120, 55 St. Rep. 100 (1998).

Verbatim Adoption of One Party's Findings, Conclusions, and Order Not Error: The mother asserted that the lower court erred in adopting verbatim the father's proposed findings of fact, conclusions of law, and proposed order modifying custody. The Supreme Court held that it was not error so long as the proposed findings, conclusions, and order were comprehensive, detailed, and supported by the evidence. In re Marriage of Lockman, 266 M 194, 879 P2d 710, 51 St. Rep. 726 (1994).

Necessity of Determining Child's Preference When Record Clearly Shows Change Is Necessary: Although it would have been preferable for the judge to interview the children in a change of custody proceeding to determine which parent they wanted to live with, such a determination is not required in every case. Here, failure to make the determination was not error because the record clearly showed that the best interests of the children required a change of custody from the mother to the father. McDowell v. McDowell, 263 M 252, 868 P2d 1250, 51 St. Rep. 42 (1994).

Evidence of Frustration or Denial of Visitation Rights — Modification Proper: The following evidence showed a willful and continuous attempt to frustrate visitation sufficient to warrant a modification of joint custody to sole custody by mother: (1) father denied visitation on consecutive Christmases, requiring mother to contact the court and her attorney to receive visitation; (2) father obstructed mother's ability to have telephone contact with the children by refusing to give her his unlisted phone number; (3) father failed to notify mother of one child's tonsillectomy; and (4) father neglected to communicate regarding the children's progress in school. In re Marriage of Moseman, 253 M 28, 830 P2d 1304, 49 St. Rep. 349 (1992).

Evidence of Serious Endangerment Sufficient to Warrant Modification: Modification of a joint custody order to grant physical custody to father was warranted based on the following evidence of serious endangerment: (1) a Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) agent testified that the children's best interests would be served and physical, emotional, and educational endangerment avoided by the change in custody; (2) mother was consistently uncooperative, antagonistic, and intimidating toward the children's teachers and school authorities; (3) mother arbitrarily refused when assistance was urged, available, and offered in providing special help for one of the children; (4) mother abused alcohol; (5) mother moved frequently; (6) mother refused to allow visitation; (7) mother did not exhibit a stable lifestyle or living situation; (8) school authorities and neighbors noted that the children were happier, more open, and more relaxed with father; and (9) children made remarkable educational progress when living with father. In re Marriage of Miller, 251 M 300, 825 P2d 189, 49 St. Rep. 36 (1992), criteria clarified in In re Marriage of Ansell/Elser, 271 M 265, 895 P2d 619, 52 St. Rep. 434 (1995).

Modification of Custody — Applicability of Best Interest Standard: In resolving whether modification of custody will be allowed, a court need merely make a "best interest" determination pursuant to 40-4-224(2) (now repealed) rather than deciding whether the more stringent requirements of this section are satisfied. As long as a court correctly complies with 40-4-224 (now repealed), consideration of this section is harmless and does not constitute reversible error. In re Marriage of Ferguson, 246 M 344, 805 P2d 1334, 47 St. Rep. 2142 (1990).

Standard of Review — "Clearly Erroneous" Standard: As set out in In re Marriage of Johnson, 238 M 153, 777 P2d 305, 46 St. Rep. 1164 (1989), when reviewing a District Court's findings regarding modification of custody and whether a party has met the custody criteria in this section, the Supreme Court will not reverse the findings unless they are clearly erroneous. In re Marriage of Arbuckle, 243 M 10, 792 P2d 1123, 47 St. Rep. 1150 (1990).

Affidavits Insufficient to Warrant Hearing on Custody Modification — Determination in Discretion of District Court: It was within the discretion of the District Court to determine that affidavits filed by the mother relating to a psychologist's report on the adverse effects of the custody litigation on the child did not constitute the necessary factual basis to warrant a hearing on the modification of custody. In re Marriage of Cox, 226 M 176, 736 P2d 97, 44 St. Rep. 567 (1987).

Sufficient Grounds for Modification — Parental Interference — Children's Requests: The District Court's decision to modify custody was clearly supported by evidence that: (1) the children requested they be allowed to live with the father; (2) the mother had removed one of the children to Utah despite her knowledge of a court order restraining her from doing so; (3) the relationship among the children, father, and stepmother was extremely close and loving; (4) the mother impaired, frustrated, and attempted to stifle the children's relationship with their father and interfered with the children's communications with each other while they were separated; (5) the mother monitored and tape-recorded calls to and from the father and children; (6) the mother delayed or intercepted letters and photographs sent through the mail; and (7) the mother discouraged the children's desire to spend time with the father and threatened to sell the children's toys and move to another country and never see them again should custody be changed at their request. In re Marriage of Cook, 223 M 293, 725 P2d 562, 43 St. Rep. 1732 (1986).

Court Not in Error in Denying Joint Custody and Limiting Summer Visitation: Appellant husband appealed judgment denying joint custody and limiting summer visitation to 2 weeks each summer. Appellant sought joint custody and summer visitation of 6 to 10 weeks. The District Court detailed to an extraordinary degree its concerns on the children's best interests. Furthermore, it left the door open for modification and for appellant to demonstrate, in the future, his capacity for joint custody or a longer period of visitation. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion and that its judgment was supported by substantial credible evidence. In re Marriage of Shelton, 219 M 456, 712 P2d 782, 43 St. Rep. 89 (1986).

Modification of Custody — Sufficiency of Evidence: The primary duty of deciding proper custody of children is the task of the District Court. On appeal, all reasonable presumptions as to the correctness of the determination of the District Court will be made, and that determination will not be disturbed unless there is a mistake of law or finding of fact not supported by credible evidence which would amount to a clear abuse of discretion. The finding must be clearly erroneous. In re Marriage of Robbins, 219 M 130, 711 P2d 1347, 42 St. Rep. 1897 (1985).

Allowable Evidence — Events Since Original Decree or Last Petition: Under this section, a judge should hear only facts and evidence arising since or that were unknown to tne court at the time of the original decree, or since the last petition to modify it, whichever is later. A purpose of this section is to prevent repeated attempts by a noncustodial parent to modify custody. In this case, counsel for both sides were admonished for repeated references at the District Court level and on appeal to evidence before the District Court on the prior petition to modify, references made solely in an attempt to unduly prejudice the court. In re Custody of Holm, 215 M 413, 698 P2d 414, 42 St. Rep. 504 (1985).

Evidence — Supported, Almost Uncontradicted, Social Worker Testimony: District Court's decision not to change child's custody from the mother to the father was supported by the almost uncontradicted testimony of a social worker familiar with the mother and child, which was itself supported by several witnesses. Father's assertion that the child was integrated into the father's new family, because the child spent most of the time between March and September (the month of his petition) with that family, was erroneous. In re Custody of Holm, 215 M 413, 698 P2d 414, 42 St. Rep. 504 (1985).

Substantial Evidence Found to Support Change of Custody — Potential for Child Abuse: Where the wife's former husband petitioned for a change in the custody of the parties' children, alleging that the boyfriend and future husband of his former wife was an admitted child molester and posed a substantial risk to the welfare of his children, the District Court did not err in modifying its original custody decree and awarding custody to the husband. Although the evidence was conflicting, there was substantial record evidence to support the theory that the wife's boyfriend posed a risk to the children and the custody decree was therefore correctly modified. Sarsfield v. Sarsfield, 206 M 397, 671 P2d 595, 40 St. Rep. 1736 (1983), followed in In re Marriage of Starks, 259 M 138, 855 P2d 527, 50 St. Rep. 719 (1993).

Contradictory Evidence in Custody Dispute — Findings Supported by Substantial Evidence: Where there was contradictory evidence introduced by the parties to a custody dispute, the Supreme Court held that the findings of fact, while lacking in detail, were sufficiently supported by record evidence, especially that of a county social worker, to support the District Court's findings that the welfare of the parties' children was endangered by being in their mother's custody. C.C.W. v. H.M.W., 205 M 498, 668 P2d 1065, 40 St. Rep. 1455 (1983).

Change of Custody — Factual Determination Required: The parents were granted a dissolution of marriage in 1977, and the mother was awarded custody of the two children. The mother was in an automobile accident in 1969 and has been subject to periodic epileptic seizures. The father petitioned for change of custody after the children had been with him during the summer and after the mother's new husband had called him saying the mother was unfit. Evidence was presented that the mother frequently left the children unattended, that several times she had seizures involving automobile accidents while the children were with her, and that she had a problem with alcohol abuse. The District Court granted custody to the father, and the mother appealed. The Supreme Court found that the District Court had correctly determined under 40-4-219(1)(c), upon the basis of the facts presented, that there had been a change of circumstances since the original decree and that the change in custody was necessary in the best interests of the children. Corbett v. Corbett, 195 M 279, 635 P2d 1319, 38 St. Rep. 1852 (1981).

Facts Unknown to Court at Time of Prior Decree — Error to Limit Testimony to Period Following Decree: The initial custody decree ratified and incorporated an agreement executed by the parties. Appellant later petitioned for a modification of the original decree. During trial the District Court limited the testimony to the period following the original decree. The Supreme Court found that it was reversible error to limit the evidence to postdecree facts. The statute requires the court to examine all relevant facts unknown to the court at the time of entry of the prior decree. When the original decree is based on an agreement, the court's inquiry is not limited to changed circumstances. The court is required to consider facts which existed at the time of the original decree. In re Custody of R.L.S. & T.L.S., 193 M 469, 632 P2d 703, 38 St. Rep. 1328 (1981).

Disregard for Provisions of Act: The court erred in relying on the "best interest of the child" test without making a specific finding that there had been a change in circumstances which seriously endangered the children's physical, mental, moral, or emotional health, and that the harm likely to be caused by a change of environment was outweighed by its advantages to the children. Schiele v. Sager, 174 M 533, 571 P2d 1142 (1977).

Temporary Custody Order — Ex Parte: To prevent ping-pong custody litigation, this section places a heavy burden on the person seeking to modify a prior custody decree. Plaintiff did not meet this burden and could not shift it to defendant by an ex parte temporary order of custody. Groves v. Groves, 173 M 291, 567 P2d 459 (1977), followed in In re Custody & Support of H.Q. & T.Q., 218 M 308, 709 P2d 154, 42 St. Rep. 1604 (1985), as to burden of proof.

CHANGE IN CIRCUMSTANCES; DANGER TO CHILD

Implied Finding of Changed Circumstances Warranting Revision of Parenting Plan Absent Showing of Abuse of Discretion: A District Court may, in its discretion, amend a parenting plan if it finds that there has been a change in circumstances of the child and that a change is necessary for the child's best interests. In making the determination, the court relies on facts that arose after the prior parenting plan or that the court was unaware of at the time of the prior plan. Here, the court did not make a specific finding of changed circumstances, but such a finding was implied, and the court's failure to specifically cite the words "a change in circumstances" was at most harmless error. The trial court is in the best position to resolve child custody issues, and it is that court's duty to resolve conflicts regarding evidence and to determine the qualifications and competency of expert witnesses. The court's decisions in regard to these duties will not be disturbed absent a showing of an abuse of discretion. In re Custody of Arneson-Nelson, 2001 MT 242, 307 M 60, 36 P3d 874 (2001).

Petition Resulting in Change of Primary Residence of Children in Joint Custody Construed as Petition to Terminate Joint Custody — Jurisdictional Requirements Applicable — Best Interest Standard Applicable on Petition Not Resulting in Change of Primary Residence: A motion or petition to modify a sole custody provision or to terminate a joint custody provision must satisfy the jurisdictional prerequisites set out in this section. Likewise, a motion or petition to modify child custody provisions in a dissolution decree that have the effect of substantially changing the primary residence of the parties' children, even though the formal joint custody designation is retained, is to be construed as a motion or petition to terminate joint custody and must also satisfy the jurisdictional prerequisites set out in this section. Any effort to modify the physical custody arrangement in a decree that provides for joint custody but that does not seek a substantial change in the children's primary residence may be considered according to the best interest standard set out in 40-4-212. In this case, because the mother sought a modification of the children's physical custody arrangement, the District Court erred in modifying physical custody without finding substantial endangerment as required by this section. In re Marriage of Johnson, 266 M 158, 879 P2d 689, 51 St. Rep. 703 (1994), followed in In re Marriage of Gallagher, 266 M 358, 880 P2d 1303, 51 St. Rep. 840 (1994), In re Marriage of Ansell/Elser, 271 M 265, 895 P2d 619, 52 St. Rep. 434 (1995), and In re Marriage of Syverson, 281 M 1, 931 P2d 691, 54 St. Rep. 32 (1997).

Frequent Moves and Lack of Stable Lifestyle — Modification Warranted: Following dissolution, mother moved some 13 times, affording the child little opportunity for a stable home environment. She removed the child from school in the middle of the year on at least two occasions and testified at trial that she planned to change schools again the following year. Citing her lack of a stable lifestyle and living situation, while noting that the father resided permanently in Missoula in a stable environment, the District Court's findings met the criteria of this section for modification of custody to the father on the basis of facts that arose subsequent to the prior decree. In re Marriage of Klose, 243 M 211, 793 P2d 1311, 47 St. Rep. 1156 (1990).

Joint Custody Award Proper: For a period of time after the wife filed for divorce, she and her child continued to live with the husband. After the couple separated, the wife moved out of state with the child. The Supreme Court stated that a custody arrangement had never been agreed upon and remained at issue pending resolution of the action; therefore, de facto custody had not been established. The court went on to hold that because no de facto custody existed, then this section, which provides that a court may modify a prior custody decree, did not apply to the case before it because there was no decree or informal arrangement to modify. In re Marriage of Hoffmaster, 239 M 84, 780 P2d 177, 46 St. Rep. 1531 (1989).

Instability of Mother's Lifestyle Justifies Custody Modification: The District Court had sufficient reason to find that family circumstances had changed since the original award of custody to the mother. The changed circumstances show that the physical, mental, moral, and emotional health of the children would be seriously endangered if they remained with her. The mother's lifestyle for several years showed an inability to maintain a stable environment for her children. The advantages to the children under their father's custody outweigh any harm that would accompany a change in their environment. He has a stable job and home life and has exhibited concern for their well-being. In re Marriage of Morazan, 237 M 294, 772 P2d 872, 46 St. Rep. 814 (1989).

Alteration of Temporary Custody Order — Showing of Changed Circumstances Not Required: Wife was awarded custody on an ex parte motion and at a later hearing was granted temporary custody pending final resolution of the action. Although the temporary order did not specifically state that the rights of the noncustodial parent would not be prejudiced, the Supreme Court held that the temporary order did not require a showing of changed circumstances before the final custody order could alter the terms of the temporary order. It would be inherently unfair to require a noncustodial parent to make a higher threshold showing of changed circumstances before a custody order may deviate from a temporary order. In re Marriage of Allen, 237 M 64, 771 P2d 578, 46 St. Rep. 624 (1989), distinguishing In re Custody of Andre, 234 M 80, 761 P2d 809, 45 St. Rep. 1745 (1988).

Petition to Modify Joint Custody — Standard — Change of Residence of Custodial Spouse: Wife appealed a District Court order that modified a joint custody decree by changing the physical custody of the children from the wife to the husband after the wife had requested that the husband assume custody for 1 ½ years because of her difficult financial circumstances. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the District Court properly applied the best interest of children standard, rather than serious endangerment, which may be relied on only to terminate a joint custody arrangement. Furthermore, the husband was denied custody not because the wife moved to Texas but because the children's interests would best be served by allowing them to remain in the same family, school, and community they have enjoyed for several years. In re Marriage of Bergner & Owens, 222 M 305, 722 P2d 1141, 43 St. Rep. 1285 (1986).

Father's Fitness as Parent — Scope of Authority on Remand: Noncustodial father filed a petition to modify custody decree. In the original proceeding, the District Court held that mother's proposed marriage to admitted child molester was sufficient change of circumstances to warrant grant of custody to father. On appeal, Supreme Court affirmed the finding of changed circumstances, but remanded to District Court for findings regarding father's fitness as a parent. On remand, the District Court found the father to be fit to have custody of his children, but concluded that mother's decision to break off relations with child molester created a lack of changed circumstances preventing modification of custody. The Supreme Court reversed District Court decision and awarded custody to father. On remand, a District Court must abide by the Supreme Court mandate; in this case, the District Court was bound by prior finding of changed circumstances and the court erred in reconsidering the question of changed circumstances. In re Marriage of Sarsfield, 215 M 123, 695 P2d 473, 42 St. Rep. 231 (1985).

Custodial Parent in Joint Custody Moving to Another State — Entitled to Presumption: A parent, under a joint custody arrangement of 6 months' custody to each parent, is presumptively entitled under former law to move with the child and settle in a new home; such moving and resultant school change do not constitute grounds for modification of the terms of the joint custody by the other parent. In re Marriage of Paradis, 213 M 177, 689 P2d 1263, 41 St. Rep. 2041 (1984).

Modification of Joint Custody Based on Avoiding Change of School — Error: The District Court decision to modify joint custody was apparently based on the requirement that under the existing custody arrangement the child would be required to change schools to one not in Montana. The Supreme Court held that it disapproves favoring institutions in our state over those in another and further held that, as provided in 40-6-231 (now repealed), a parent is presumptively entitled to move with a child and settle in a new home. In re Marriage of Paradis, 213 M 177, 689 P2d 1263, 41 St. Rep. 2041 (1984).

Two-Part Test for Modification:

Under this section (prior to 1983 and 1997 amendments), a finding that the child has been integrated into the noncustodial parent's home merely satisfies the jurisdictional prerequisite of modification. Once jurisdiction to modify is established, in order to modify the custody decree the court must also find that a change has occurred in the child's circumstances and that the effect of the change is that the child's best interests would be best served by a modification in custody. Hardy v. Hans, 212 M 25, 685 P2d 372, 41 St. Rep. 1566 (1984).

Section 40-4-219 sets out a two-part test to judge whether to modify a prior custody decree. The first part of the test contains two subparts. There must be a change of circumstances, and the change must be significant enough in relation to the best interests of the child that those interests are no longer served by the decree in force as judged by the criteria of 40-4-212. The second part of the test is that the primary custodian may not be changed unless the court finds the enumerated dangers exist and that the advantages of change outweigh the disadvantages. The facts of this case support the modification. R.L.S. & T.L.S. v. Barkhoff, 207 M 199, 674 P2d 1082, 40 St. Rep. 1982 (1983).

Grounds for Modification:

The marriage of the parents was dissolved in 1980 in Helena, Montana. Custody of the two older children was awarded to the father and that of the two younger children, aged 5 and 6, to the mother. The father and the older children remained in Helena, and the mother moved to Wyoming. In 1983, the father filed in District Court for a modification of the custody decree under the dangerous environment provision of this section, requesting that he be given custody of all four children. The District Court granted the father's request, and the mother appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that because testimony in the District Court indicated that: (1) on numerous occasions, the mother had left the younger children entirely unattended or in the care of their older siblings, the elder of whom was 10 years old, and the mother did not believe this to be a dangerous practice although expert testimony indicated that it was a dangerous practice; (2) the mother was having an intimate relationship with a married man who spent five nights a week with her and used obscene and abusive language in front of the children; and (3) it would be in the best interests of the children to grow up together, the District Court's decision was correct. Connolly v. Connolly, 209 M 298, 680 P2d 568, 41 St. Rep. 720 (1984), distinguished in In re Marriage of Youngs, 215 M 330, 698 P2d 404, 42 St. Rep. 405 (1985).

A District Court may not exercise its discretionary power to modify a custody decree unless new facts or facts unknown to the court at the time of the original decree demonstrate that a change has occurred in the circumstances of the child or his custodian and such change is sufficient to warrant modification of the decree in order to promote the child's best interest. Foss v. Leifer, 170 M 97, 550 P2d 1309 (1976); Erhardt v. Erhardt, 171 M 49, 554 P2d 758 (1976).

Lack of Proper Care Constituting Change in Circumstances and Danger to Health: Where the District Court, in a custody dispute, found that since the entry of a prior decree by the court, changes occurred in the circumstances of the mother in that she did not properly care for the parties' children and that their physical and emotional health had been endangered, there was a sufficient change of circumstances shown to satisfy the statutory requirement. C.C.W. v. H.M.W., 205 M 498, 668 P2d 1065, 40 St. Rep. 1455 (1983).

Circumstances Changed to Detriment of Children: The parties were married and divorced twice. After the second divorce, custody of the oldest child was awarded to the father and the younger two children to the mother. The father petitioned for a change of custody so that he would be custodian of all the children. Evidence was presented that the mother had not been steadily employed since the divorce and her primary source of income was welfare. She was living with her father and was away for substantial periods of time. The grandfather and his wife had difficulty caring for the children. The boy had disciplinary, hygiene, and school problems that greatly improved when he was with the father. The children living with the mother were often dirty, and the baby had severe diaper rash. The evidence supported findings that circumstances had changed to the detriment of the children and that custody should be awarded to the father. In re Marriage of A.R.C. v. C.K.C., 203 M 353, 661 P2d 459, 40 St. Rep. 499 (1983).

Court Order to Give Notice of Change of Residence — Enforcement: The parties to this action were divorced and custody of their minor daughter was awarded to the mother. The decree provided that if the mother intended to establish residence in another state, she first obtain permission from the District Court. The mother moved to North Carolina in order to remarry, without informing the court. The father brought suit for a change of custody on the grounds that the mother had changed her residence within the state several times and had lived with men prior to her remarriage. The father did not prove that the mother's actions adversely affected the child's welfare so as to require a change of custody. The Supreme Court noted that because the mother had left the state without informing the trial court, she had effectively nullified the father's visitation rights. The change of custody action was the only meaningful option the father had to change visitation to reflect the geographical change in circumstances. The court suggested that District Courts could compel compliance with their orders concerning removal of children from the state by requiring a bond, security, or by holding the removing parent in contempt. In re Marriage of Winn, 190 M 73, 618 P2d 870, 37 St. Rep. 1734 (1980).

Best Interests of Child — Mother's Behavior: The welfare of the child is the paramount consideration in awarding custody. Mother's behavior was sufficient for court to award custody to father by modification. Brooks v. Brooks, 171 M 132, 556 P2d 901 (1976).

"Change of Circumstances" Construed:

The fact that the mother and custodian of the child in question permitted her paramour to take up residence in her home for a short time before their marriage did not constitute a "change in circumstances" sufficient to support a modification of the custody decree when it did not appear that this conduct caused any "moral decline" in the home, or in any way affected the physical, mental, or emotional well-being of the child. Foss v. Leifer, 170 M 97, 550 P2d 1309 (1976).

The phrase "change of circumstances" as used in this section with respect to modifications of custody orders is a term of art meaning circumstances changed so substantially that the best interests and general welfare of the child can best be promoted by alteration of the decree. Foss v. Leifer, 170 M 97, 550 P2d 1309 (1976).

Insufficient Change of Circumstance — Litigation to Be Minimized:

Changed circumstances or conditions are based on the principle that stability of home life of children is a vital factor to their well-being, and the turmoil of litigation must be minimized and sometime brought to an end. Gilbert v. Gilbert, 166 M 312, 533 P2d 1079 (1975).

Mother's restored mental health and remarriage was not a change in circumstances sufficient to change custody where all witnesses, including the mother, agreed that the father was a fit parent and that the children were well cared for. The crucial factor is the children's welfare, both material and psychological, considering in particular the ties of affection the children have formed and the consequences of breaking those ties based on the reason for the requirement of a change of circumstances. The principal concern is not only that the stability of the homelife of the children is an important factor, but also that the turmoil of litigation must somewhere end. Gilmore v. Gilmore, 166 M 47, 530 P2d 480 (1975).

Change in Circumstances or Unfitness of Custodial Parent — Prerequisite to Modification: If the court, in an uncontested hearing, has made any award or adjudication of custody, the issue of custody has been heard and may not be changed without a showing of justifiable grounds occurring after the custody award, testimony relating back to and prior to time of divorce being inadmissible, to protect the person who has custody from the harassment of further litigation. Svennungsen v. Svennungsen, 165 M 161, 527 P2d 640 (1974).

Remarriage of Custodial Parent: When father is custodial parent his remarriage is not sufficient change of circumstance to require change of custody without evidence that this remarriage was detrimental to the welfare of the child. Svennungsen v. Svennungsen, 165 M 161, 527 P2d 640 (1974).

Mother's Positive Development as Sufficient Change of Circumstances: Evidence the mother had, since time of divorce, remarried, overcome previous emotional difficulties, and quit her job in order to provide for time and attention needed to raise child supported modification of divorce decree, in best interest of child, so as to grant custody to mother. McCullough v. McCullough, 159 M 419, 498 P2d 1189 (1972).

CASES UNDER FORMER PROVISION REGARDING SERIOUS ENDANGERMENT

Judicial Notice of Disputable Fact Regarding Safety of Kerosene Heater Not Basis of Custody Decision — Harmless Error: Wife argued that the trial court improperly took judicial notice of a disputable fact regarding the safety of a kerosene heater used in the wife's home and that by permitting its personal views to become part of its decision, the court became an advocate for the husband. The court did make statements concerning the safety of using a kerosene heater in the home but stated that it did not base its decision on those statements; therefore, any error was harmless. In re Marriage of Gallagher, 266 M 358, 880 P2d 1303, 51 St. Rep. 840 (1994).

Petition Resulting in Change of Primary Residence of Children in Joint Custody Construed as Petition to Terminate Joint Custody — Jurisdictional Requirements Applicable — Best Interest Standard Applicable on Petition Not Resulting in Change of Primary Residence: A motion or petition to modify a sole custody provision or to terminate a joint custody provision must satisfy the jurisdictional prerequisites set out in this section. Likewise, a motion or petition to modify child custody provisions in a dissolution decree that have the effect of substantially changing the primary residence of the parties' children, even though the formal joint custody designation is retained, is to be construed as a motion or petition to terminate joint custody and must also satisfy the jurisdictional prerequisites set out in this section. Any effort to modify the physical custody arrangement in a decree that provides for joint custody but that does not seek a substantial change in the children's primary residence may be considered according to the best interest standard set out in 40-4-212. In this case, because the mother sought a modification of the children's physical custody arrangement, the District Court erred in modifying physical custody without finding substantial endangerment as required by this section. In re Marriage of Johnson, 266 M 158, 879 P2d 689, 51 St. Rep. 703 (1994), followed in In re Marriage of Gallagher, 266 M 358, 880 P2d 1303, 51 St. Rep. 840 (1994), In re Marriage of Ansell/Elser, 271 M 265, 895 P2d 619, 52 St. Rep. 434 (1995), and In re Marriage of Syverson, 281 M 1, 931 P2d 691, 54 St. Rep. 32 (1997).

Joint Custody Allowed Despite Abuse and Neglect Investigation: A father appealed from the District Court's denial of a motion to modify the joint custody agreement to award the father sole custody of an older daughter and primary physical custody of a younger daughter after the state removed the children from the mother's custody as a result of an abuse and neglect investigation. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the father failed to establish that modification would serve the best interest of the children. In re Marriage of McClain, 257 M 371, 849 P2d 194, 50 St. Rep. 314 (1993).

Mother's Contribution to Dangerous Environment Not Bar to Obtaining Custody: The parties' divorce decree awarded child custody and the family ranch to the father. The mother continued to reside at the ranch, refusing to leave. On several occasions, the situation resulted in physical violence between the parties. The mother sought modification on the basis that the environment endangered the parties' child. The Supreme Court ruled that there was a change in circumstances and that the mother's contribution to the dangerous environment did not bar her from obtaining a change in custody. In re Marriage of Hay, 241 M 372, 786 P2d 1195, 47 St. Rep. 361 (1990).

Poor Hygiene Practices Not Danger to Children: The petitioner moved for a change of custody on the basis that a court-ordered home study indicated that the custodial parent did not provide a clean home for the children. The Supreme Court upheld the lower court's decision that the custodial parent's housekeeping standards did not seriously endanger the children in any way. In re Marriage of Hoodenpyle, 241 M 345, 787 P2d 326, 47 St. Rep. 340 (1990).

Instability of Mother's Lifestyle Justifies Custody Modification: The District Court had sufficient reason to find that family circumstances had changed since the original award of custody to the mother. The changed circumstances show that the physical, mental, moral, and emotional health of the children would be seriously endangered if they remained with her. The mother's lifestyle for several years showed an inability to maintain a stable environment for her children. The advantages to the children under their father's custody outweigh any harm that would accompany a change in their environment. He has a stable job and home life and has exhibited concern for their well-being. In re Marriage of Morazan, 237 M 294, 772 P2d 872, 46 St. Rep. 814 (1989).

Father's Poor Home Environment — Children's Stress and Fear of Father: Substantial credible evidence supported the finding that custody of the children should be switched from father to mother because father has proved himself incapable of maintaining or portraying a loving, affectionate home environment free of stress and abuse. Testimony of mother's witnesses refuted that of father. The children testified that they feared their father and that they were extremely unhappy living with him. This was supported by testimony of a psychologist and the judicial district's director of family services. In re Marriage of Ostrem, 234 M 324, 763 P2d 35, 45 St. Rep. 1943 (1988).

Failure to Consider Children's Present Environment: On appeal by wife from modification of child custody, the Supreme Court held it was error for the District Court to fail to address the children's present environment and to adequately consider the harmful effects of a change in that environment. In re Marriage of Stephenson, 230 M 439, 750 P2d 1073, 45 St. Rep. 335 (1988).

Sexual Abuse of Daughters as Witnessed by Sons — Sufficient Grounds for Modification: In affirming an order modifying custody, the Supreme Court upheld as substantially credible the evidence, based on the children's statements, of sexual abuse by the father of the daughters that was observed by the sons, and psychologists' testimony that the boys were at high risk to begin acting out sexually (citing In re Marriage of Sarsfield, 206 M 397, 671 P2d 595, 40 St. Rep. 1736 (1983)). The court followed its decision in In re T.Y.K., 183 M 91, 598 P2d 593 (1979), that 41-3-101, et seq., grants the District Court the ability to make a determination of abuse and neglect as to all children in a family based on the policy that abuse of one child may have a detrimental effect on the other children's development. In re B.T., B.T., M.T., & M.T., 223 M 287, 725 P2d 230, 43 St. Rep. 1728 (1986).

Custody Modification Denied — Equivalent Vague Testimony as to Other's Wrongs: Divorced parents had joint custody of their two children, with residential custody in the mother. It was not an abuse of discretion to refuse to grant father's request for a custody modification. The father claimed the mother drank too much, neglected the children, and persistently violated the spirit and intent of the custody decree. The mother claimed the father was uncooperative, inconsiderate, and not prompt on visits. Each testified and had witnesses testify as to his respective parenting skills and the other's specific wrongdoings. The lower court found that neither was an unfit parent but that each attempted to use the children to aggravate the other. In re Custody & Support of H.Q. & T.Q., 218 M 308, 709 P2d 154, 42 St. Rep. 1604 (1985).

Custodial Parent Found Unstable and Alcoholic — Modification Granted: The Supreme Court refused to set aside, as not supported by evidence, a District Court order granting a change of a child's custody from the mother to the father when evidence indicated that: (1) the mother's lifestyle and living situation lacked stability; (2) the mother had been arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol with the child in her vehicle; (3) the mother had attended a residential alcoholism treatment center but had failed to stop drinking or follow up on her problem after her discharge; and (4) the father was able and willing to provide a more stable environment for the child. In re Marriage of Stout, 216 M 342, 701 P2d 729, 42 St. Rep. 856 (1985).

Itinerant Lifestyle and Physical Abuse — Modification Granted: The District Court did not err in transferring custody of a child from mother to father when court found: (1) that mother's remarriage resulted in an itinerant lifestyle with crowded and substandard housing conditions; (2) that the child was subjected to harsh, repeated, inappropriate, and excessive physical discipline and showed signs of abuse and fear of his stepfather; and (3) that the father had superior child raising and discipline practices and stability and security over that to which the child had been subject. The District Court's findings were supported by substantial evidence. The father met his required burden of proof to support his contention that modification of the decree was necessary to serve the best interests of the child. In re Custody of Dumont, 216 M 118, 700 P2d 167, 42 St. Rep. 687 (1985).

Potential for Serious Harm Sufficient for Jurisdiction — Best Interests of Children — Modification Granted: There was a sufficient change of circumstances in children's environment to justify change in custody when custodial father of four married mother of four minor children, became a member of a nondenominational religious group advocating rigid religious beliefs, and adopted a strict child-rearing philosophy involving physical punishment and a prohibition against school activities or extracurricular activities until high school. Fact that father had inflicted severe disciplinary practices only on the older children was sufficient to establish jurisdiction to consider modification. District Court awarded custody to the mother, who had remarried and had stable employment and a home in town that could provide children with opportunity for interaction with peers. Supreme Court found substantial credible evidence to support finding of District Court that change in custody was in best interests of children. Reinoehl v. Perry, 213 M 479, 691 P2d 1384, 41 St. Rep. 2269 (1984).

Finding of Serious Danger as Jurisdictional Prerequisite:

Where a psychologist, a witness for the husband in a custody dispute, testified that a child molester like the boyfriend of the wife could pose a substantial risk to the children of the parties in the setting of the wife's home, the District Court did not err in refusing to dismiss the husband's petition for a change of custody. Under this section, the petitioner must show only a potential for or probability of serious harm to a child in order to invoke the court's jurisdiction to amend a previous custody award. The probability of harm was sufficiently demonstrated in the husband's case in chief, and the petition for modification of custody was therefore properly heard. Sarsfield v. Sarsfield, 206 M 397, 671 P2d 595, 40 St. Rep. 1736 (1983), followed in In re Marriage of Starks, 259 M 138, 855 P2d 527, 50 St. Rep. 719 (1993).

A finding that the present custody arrangement "endangers seriously" the welfare of the children is the threshold to any court-ordered change of custody and, as such, is jurisdictional. "Welfare" and "best interests" of the children may not be considered until jurisdiction is established. Gianotti v. McCracken, 174 M 209, 569 P2d 929 (1977). See also In re Marriage of Starks, 259 M 138, 855 P2d 527, 50 St. Rep. 719 (1993).

Lack of Proper Care Constituting Change in Circumstances and Danger to Health: Where the District Court, in a custody dispute, found that since the entry of a prior decree by the court, changes occurred in the circumstances of the mother in that she did not properly care for the parties' children and that their physical and emotional health had been endangered, there was a sufficient change of circumstances shown to satisfy the statutory requirement. C.C.W. v. H.M.W., 205 M 498, 668 P2d 1065, 40 St. Rep. 1455 (1983).

Circumstances Changed to Detriment of Children: The parties were married and divorced twice. After the second divorce, custody of the oldest child was awarded to the father and the younger two children to the mother. The father petitioned for a change of custody so that he would be custodian of all the children. Evidence was presented that the mother had not been steadily employed since the divorce and her primary source of income was welfare. She was living with her father and was away for substantial periods of time. The grandfather and his wife had difficulty caring for the children. The boy had disciplinary, hygiene, and school problems that greatly improved when he was with the father. The children living with the mother were often dirty, and the baby had severe diaper rash. The evidence supported findings that circumstances had changed to the detriment of the children and that custody should be awarded to the father. In re Marriage of A.R.C. v. C.K.C., 203 M 353, 661 P2d 459, 40 St. Rep. 499 (1983).

Modification of a Custody Award Not Pending — No Finding That Child Is Endangered: Respondent's contention that denial of a petition for Writ of Habeas Corpus to obtain custody of a child is not appealable on the ground that a motion for modification of the custody decree filed against appellant by a third party was still pending cannot stand because under the governing provision then in effect, section 48-339, R.C.M. 1947, as amended [now as amended 40-4-219], the petition was not actually pending. Section 48-339, R.C.M. 1947, is jurisdictional and requires the District Court to find that the child is seriously endangered if a motion for a change of custody is brought within 2 years of entry of a divorce decree. Strouf v. Strouf, 176 M 406, 578 P2d 746 (1978); Olson v. Olson, 175 M 444, 574 P2d 1004 (1978). Here, the motion to modify custody was brought within the 2-year limitation, and the District Court failed to find that the child's health was seriously endangered or that the child would be endangered in the custody of his father. Thus there is no jurisdictional basis for the court to consider the parent's petition for change of custody and no petition is pending. In re Marriage of Korol, 188 M 351, 613 P2d 1016 (1980).

FAMILY INTEGRATION

Family Integration — Not Grounds for Modifying Joint Custody Decree: The divorce decree between the parties provided for joint custody, and a subsequent modification gave primary physical custody to the mother. When the mother decided to move out of state, the father brought a motion to modify custody to give him primary physical custody on the basis that the child was integrated into his family and the Butte community. The Supreme Court held that the integration rationale only applied to proceedings to terminate joint custody and was inapplicable to modification actions. In re Marriage of Johnson, 238 M 153, 777 P2d 305, 46 St. Rep. 1164 (1989), distinguished, in implementing a prior order, in In re Marriage of Zuelke, 274 M 362, 909 P2d 684, 52 St. Rep. 1225 (1995).

Joint Custody — No Modification Based Upon Family Integration: The family integration standard of this section recognizes the need for continuity and stability where a custodial parent has freely relinquished his right to custody for a considerable length of time; however, under the joint custody provisions set forth in 40-4-222 through 40-4-224 (all now repealed), it was intended that the child be integrated into both homes of his parents and that this dual integration not be used as grounds for modification of a joint custody decree. In re Marriage of Paradis, 213 M 177, 689 P2d 1263, 41 St. Rep. 2041 (1984).

Voluntary Transfer of Custody Implied: The findings of the District Court that the mother acquiesced to the child's integration into the father's home are supported by substantial credible evidence. There were a voluntary transfer of the child's physical custody from the custodial to the noncustodial parent to avoid the atmosphere of grief following an unexpected family death and a subsequent transfer with knowledge of the child's integration into the father's home. Bolton v. Bolton, 212 M 212, 690 P2d 401, 41 St. Rep. 1698 (1984).

ATTORNEY FEES AND COSTS

Lack of Evidence of Vexatiousness or Harassment Precluding Award of Attorney Fees: The award of attorney fees and costs was inappropriate when the record was void of any facts to support a finding that a modification action was vexatious or constituted harassment. In re Marriage of Miller, 251 M 300, 825 P2d 189, 49 St. Rep. 36 (1992).

Attorney Fees Awarded for Past Actions, Not Modification Action: As part of a modification order awarding physical custody of a child to the father, the court awarded attorney fees to the mother. The father contended that no fees should have been assessed because the action was for modification. The Supreme Court affirmed after noting that the award was for fees necessitated by the father's past legal actions and not by the modification action. In re Marriage of Arbuckle, 243 M 10, 792 P2d 1123, 47 St. Rep. 1150 (1990).

Child Custody to Be in Issue — Award of Attorney Fees: Because the wife's petition to hold the husband in contempt of the dissolution decree was so unfounded as to constitute harassment, the trial court awarded attorney fees to the husband. Trial court did not have authority to award attorney fees under 40-4-219 because child custody was not in issue. The Supreme Court nevertheless upheld the award, stating that the trial court did not abuse its discretion under general powers of equity. In re Marriage of Hereford, 223 M 31, 723 P2d 960, 43 St. Rep. 1508 (1986).

Attorney Fees: The Supreme Court affirmed a trial court award of attorney fees based on a finding that the modification of custody action was vexatious and constituted harassment. Easton v. Easton, 175 M 416, 574 P2d 989 (1978).

CASES UNDER FORMER PROVISION PROHIBITING MODIFICATION WITHIN TWO YEARS

Affidavit Requirement: Prior to amendment in 1979, 40-4-219 required a motion for change of custody, filed within 2 years of the decree of dissolution, to be accompanied by an affidavit establishing that "there is reason to believe the child's present environment may endanger seriously his physical, mental, moral, or emotional health". This affidavit was also a jurisdictional prerequisite to a court's modification of its custody decree. The finding that the affidavit sufficiently established jurisdiction did not entail a finding that it also sufficiently established a motion to modify. McLean v. Seright, 187 M 194, 609 P2d 282 (1980).

Modification of Custody Award Within Two Years of Decree: Custody of the child was awarded to the father following a divorce, but the child remained with the mother while the father was in the Navy. Even after the father received a hardship discharge from the Navy, ostensibly to care for his daughter, the mother continued to have physical custody until the daughter was taken, without the mother's knowledge or consent, to Indiana by the father. The mother filed for modification of the custody decree but was within the former 2-year prohibition period (now deleted) of 40-4-219. The court found, however, that the actions of the father in removing the child from the only environment she had ever known since birth seriously endangered her physical, mental, moral, and emotional health. Such a finding was prerequisite to a court order changing custody within the 2-year period, and custody was accordingly changed to the mother. Mikkelson v. Mikkelson, 184 M 314, 602 P2d 984 (1979).

Allegation Regarding Environment Absent: The Supreme Court vacated an earlier order which stayed the District Court's judgment ordering return of custody of a child to the mother because the father was petitioning to modify custody within 2 years of the custody decree (restriction now deleted) with no allegation concerning what kind of environment the mother would provide in another state. Hamilton v. Hamilton, 176 M 488, 580 P2d 104 (1978).

Findings Required: The District Court did not have jurisdiction to modify a prior custody award made less than 2 years prior (restriction now deleted) when the court made no finding that the child's present environment seriously endangers his physical, mental, moral, or emotional health. The court also lacked jurisdiction to issue an order to show cause under 40-4-220 or to modify the custody decree under 40-4-211. Strouf v. Strouf, 176 M 406, 578 P2d 746 (1978).

Circumvention of Custody Modification Procedure: An order covering child custody, support, and visitation rights entered pursuant to a motion to set aside default judgment in the original divorce proceeding was issued in circumvention of the former 2-year prohibition against modification of custody decrees (now deleted) since it granted custody for 2 months each year to the noncustodial parent under the guise of modifying visitation rights. Olson v. Olson, 175 M 444, 574 P2d 1004 (1978).

Lack of Compliance — Two-Year Limitation: Defendant failed to meet the requirements imposed by this section when a petition for modification of a custody decree was brought within 2 years of its date of entry (which provision is now deleted). Easton v. Easton, 175 M 416, 574 P2d 989 (1978).

Temporary Order: A temporary custody order is not equivalent to a custody decree within the meaning of this section, thus defendant's petition for custody was not barred by the former 2-year limitation (now deleted). Groves v. Groves, 173 M 291, 567 P2d 459 (1977).

Computation of Time: When the prior District Court action dealt only with clarification of visitation rights and not with child custody, it was properly disregarded in computing the time elapsed from date of the custody decree sought to be modified. Ronchetto v. Ronchetto, 173 M 285, 567 P2d 456 (1977).

Jurisdiction: Court lacked jurisdiction for modification petition when filed earlier than 2 years from date of decree (restriction now deleted). The fact that original petition was filed prior to effective date of Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act was to no avail in avoiding application of Act. Holm v. Holm, 172 M 81, 560 P2d 905 (1977).

Attorney General's Opinions

Fee for Filing Petition for Contested Amendment of Parenting Plan Not Applicable to Petition to Modify Child Support: Modification of child support pursuant to 40-4-208 is a separate procedure that does not necessarily entail amendment of a parenting plan pursuant to this section. Therefore, for filing purposes, a petition to modify child support is not considered a petition for amendment of a parenting plan, and it is inappropriate for a Clerk of Court to collect the $120 statutory fee for filing a petition for a contested amendment of a parenting plan under 25-1-201(1)(a) upon the filing of a petition to modify child support in an existing cause. 47 A.G. Op. 14 (1998).

Commencement Filing Fee Not Chargeable for Certain Postdissolution Proceedings: The Attorney General relied on the holding in In re Marriage of Billings, 189 M 520, 616 P2d 1104 (1980), in finding that a District Court Clerk may not charge a commencement filing fee for postdissolution of marriage action that is brought under the same cause number as the marital dissolution proceeding and that remains under the continuing jurisdiction of the District Court. 43 A.G. Op. 72 (1990).

Commissioners' Note

This section establishes a procedure for seeking temporary custody or a modification of a custody decree by motion supported with affidavits. The procedure is designed to result in denial of the motion without a hearing unless the court finds that the affidavits establish adequate cause for holding a hearing. The procedure will thus tend to discourage contests over temporary custody and prevent repeated or insubstantial motions for modification.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 541 in two places in section substituted "endangers the child's physical, mental, or emotional health" for "is detrimental to the child's best interests"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 29, 1999.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 343 in (1), at beginning of first sentence, substituted "Unless the parties agree to an interim parenting plan or an amended parenting plan, the moving party seeking an interim parenting plan or amendment of a final parenting plan" for "A party seeking a temporary custody order or modification of a custody decree", near middle of first sentence and near end of second sentence, after "requested", substituted "plan or amendment" for "order or modification", and near middle of second sentence, after "affidavits", inserted "based on the best interests of the child"; in (2)(a), in first sentence after "seeking", substituted "an interim parenting plan" for "a temporary custody order" and near end, after "temporary", substituted "order providing for living arrangements for the child" for "assignment of custody"; near beginning of (2)(a)(i) and (2)(a)(ii) substituted "parenting plan" for "determination of custody"; near end of (2)(a)(i), after "temporary", substituted "living arrangements for the child were as proposed" for "custody were placed with the person designated"; in (2)(a)(ii), near beginning after "has been", substituted "ordered" for "made" and substituted language concerning emergency situations detrimental to a child's best interests for former language that read: "the child's present environment endangers his physical or emotional health and an immediate change of custody would serve to protect the child's physical or emotional health"; in (2)(b), in first sentence near beginning before "would be", substituted "the interim parenting plan proposed by the moving party" for "a temporary assignment of custody" and near middle, after "the child's", substituted language requiring the court to implement an interim parenting plan if the child's present environment is detrimental for former language that read: "physical or emotional health is endangered and would be protected by a temporary assignment of custody, the court shall make an order placing temporary custody with the person designated by the moving party or with some other person designated by the court" and in second sentence, near middle before "why", substituted "interim parenting plan" for "order", before "should not" substituted "the interim parenting plan" for "in the case of a temporary order issued under subsection (2)(a)(i) the temporary order", and at end, after "court", deleted "or, in the case of a temporary order issued under subsection (2)(a)(ii), the court should not restore the child to the custodian from whom the child was removed by the temporary order"; and made minor changes in style.

DECISIONS AFTER 1997 REVISION

Lay Person May Be Guardian Ad Litem in Child Custody Proceeding: Generally, in a child custody proceeding, the court may appoint as a guardian ad litem for the child any person who does not have interests adverse to those of the child. The Supreme Court rejected the father's claim that the lower court should not have appointed a lay person, who the father likened to an expert witness and claimed was unqualified and had no known or disclosed experience or qualifications. In re Custody of Krause, 2001 MT 37, 304 M 202, 19 P3d 811 (2001).

DECISIONS PRIOR TO 1997 REVISION

Failure to File Motion or Affidavit Requesting Custody Modification — Adoption of Special Master Report Improper When Jurisdiction Lacking: Both the father and the mother filed motions for contempt of court, claiming failure by the other party to abide by past court orders regarding custody and visitation. A special master was appointed to make a final report concerning all pending custody, visitation, child support, medical expenses, and contempt issues between the parties. The special master submitted a report recommending changing primary physical custody from the mother to the father, and the report was adopted. However, the only pending issue was the question of contempt. Neither party moved for or filed an affidavit requesting a custody modification. Under Rule 53, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), a special master's authority is limited to the issues or acts stated in the order of reference to the special master. Thus, the District Court erred in adopting the special master's report recommending a custody change because the court lacked jurisdiction to do so absent a motion or affidavit for modification. In re Marriage of Lundby, 1998 MT 122, 289 M 74, 959 P2d 485, 55 St. Rep. 486 (1998), distinguishing In re Marriage of Stout, 216 M 342, 701 P2d 729 (1985).

Failure to Extend Ex Parte Temporary Custody Order — Statutory Requirements: The father submitted the affidavit required under this section in seeking a temporary assignment of custody ex parte when a determination of custody had been previously made. The District Court entered the temporary custody order and scheduled a show cause hearing. The burden was on the father to support a continuation of the temporary change in custody that he had obtained ex parte. Following the hearing, the District Court ordered that the temporary custody order remain in effect, allowing the father to retain temporary custody until the final order was entered. Noting that 40-4-217 and 40-4-219 did not apply under the circumstances, the Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion with regard to the temporary custody situation. In re Marriage of Huotari, 284 M 285, 943 P2d 1295, 54 St. Rep. 884 (1997), distinguishing In re Marriage of Morazan, 237 M 294, 772 P2d 872 (1989).

Motion to Modify Custody Considered at Hearing on Ex Parte Temporary Custody — Abuse of Discretion: Father filed two motions, one to modify custody pursuant to 40-4-219 and one to continue a temporary ex parte custody order pursuant to this section. At the hearing held for the sole purpose of determining whether the temporary custody order should be continued, the District Court also resolved father's motion to modify custody, concluding that the requirements for modification were not met. However well intentioned, the procedure used by the District Court in considering both motions at the same hearing was an abuse of discretion and deprived father of notice and the opportunity to be heard on the modification motion. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded for further proceedings on the motion to modify. In re Marriage of Huotari, 284 M 285, 943 P2d 1295, 54 St. Rep. 884 (1997).

Temporary Modification Requiring Supervised Visitation — Supervision Not "Restriction" Requiring Special Procedure: Following Tamara's divorce from Robert, Tamara moved for an ex parte order modifying Robert's visitation rights to require that Robert's visitation with the parties' daughter be supervised. The basis for the motion was that Robert had secretly sexually assaulted other women, including Tamara's sisters. The motion was made on the basis of subsection (2)(a)(ii) of this section. The District Court granted the motion without following the procedure provided in 40-4-217(3) and (6). The Supreme Court upheld the granting of the ex parte order, citing In re Marriage of Hickey, 213 M 38, 689 P2d 1222 (1984), and the commissioners' note to 40-4-217 and noting that the imposition of supervision is not a "restriction" within the meaning of 40-4-217(3). In re Marriage of Njos/Allard, 270 M 54, 889 P2d 1192, 52 St. Rep. 74 (1995).

Motion Required to Be Supported by Affidavits: This section establishes a procedure for seeking temporary custody or a modification of a custody decree by motion supported by affidavits. There is no exception to the affidavit requirement; thus, failure to file supporting affidavits with a motion to change custody properly resulted in denial of the motion. In re Marriage of Allison, 269 M 250, 887 P2d 1217, 51 St. Rep. 1502 (1994).

Averred Facts and Allegations Sufficient to Constitute Adequate Cause for Hearing: Father's affidavit seeking modification of custody stated that: (1) his children had always expressed a desire to live with him; (2) the children had repeatedly expressed a lack of "feeling at home" in their mother's house, possibly as a result of strained relations with their new stepfather; (3) the boys perceived their homelife as "uncomfortable"; and (4) the children had cousins their age in North Dakota. The affidavit stated facts constituting adequate cause for a hearing, and the District Court properly assumed jurisdiction. In re Marriage of Anderson, 240 M 316, 783 P2d 1372, 46 St. Rep. 2155 (1989).

Sworn Statement Concerning Mother's Threat Sufficient for Temporary Restraining Order: The sworn statement of the natural father that the mother had threatened to remove their children from the court's jurisdiction pending a determination of custody modification was sufficient grounds for issuing a temporary restraining order to prevent their removal. In re Marriage of Morazan, 237 M 294, 772 P2d 872, 46 St. Rep. 814 (1989).

Opposing Affidavit Required Prior to Custody Modification: Mother, an enrolled member of the Chippewa Cree Tribe, appealed from an order that modified original dissolution decree of joint custody and which swapped custody schedules, effectively granting primary custody of son to non-Indian father. Subsequently, facts indicated that the father's affidavit, upon which the modification was based, contained inaccurate information and failed to reveal the father's custodial interference conviction. Likewise, irregularities in service provided mother no opportunity to file opposing affidavit. The Supreme Court remanded the lower court modification, holding the lower court may act on a motion to modify custody only after the adverse party has had an opportunity to file an opposing affidavit. Joint custody may be modified only to terminate the custody rights of one of the parties. In re Custody of A.L.S., 229 M 297, 747 P2d 192, 44 St. Rep. 1979 (1987).

Affidavits Insufficient to Warrant Hearing on Custody Modification — Determination in Discretion of District Court: It was within the discretion of the District Court to determine that affidavits filed by the mother relating to a psychologist's report on the adverse effects of the custody litigation on the child did not constitute the necessary factual basis to warrant a hearing on the modification of custody. In re Marriage of Cox, 226 M 176, 736 P2d 97, 44 St. Rep. 567 (1987).

Verified Petition — Adequate Substitute for Affidavit: The affidavit requirement of subsection (1) of this section may be satisfied by a verified petition. In re Marriage of Stout, 216 M 342, 701 P2d 729, 42 St. Rep. 856 (1985).

Affidavit Practice — Attorney's Fees: In applying for a contempt citation, a mother filed an affidavit alleging the father's failure to provide the beef required by the decree. The father's attorney countered by asking for custody of two of the children. No affidavit was filed by the father. For that reason the order granting modification of custody was set aside even though the issue was not raised on appeal. The trial court was also ordered to enter an order compelling the father to comply with the accrued beef support obligations. The trial court had no right to excuse support arrearages. In addition, due to errors of counsel, they were urged not to charge their clients for future services rendered in proceedings relating to these matters. Knowlton v. Knowlton, 193 M 448, 632 P2d 336, 38 St. Rep. 1304 (1981).

Section Not Applicable to Change of Visitation Rights: This section applies only to change of custody actions and not to change of visitation rights, which is controlled by 40-4-217. Therefore the lack of affidavits by husband in a change of visitation action did not affect the jurisdiction of the District Court. Gall v. Gall, 187 M 17, 608 P2d 496 (1980).

Modification of Custody Award Within Two Years of Decree: Custody of the child was awarded to the father following a divorce, but the child remained with the mother while the father was in the Navy. Even after the father received a hardship discharge from the Navy, ostensibly to care for his daughter, the mother continued to have physical custody until the daughter was taken, without the mother's knowledge or consent, to Indiana by the father. The mother filed for modification of the custody decree but was within the former 2-year prohibition period (now deleted) of 40-4-219. The court found, however, that the actions of the father in removing the child from the only environment she had ever known since birth seriously endangered her physical, mental, moral, and emotional health. Such a finding was prerequisite to a court order changing custody within the 2-year period, and custody was accordingly changed to the mother. Mikkelson v. Mikkelson, 184 M 314, 602 P2d 984 (1979).

Effect of Not Following Procedure Strictly: Even though procedure requirements were not strictly followed, this alone did not outweigh the "best interest of the child" standard. Lehman v. Billman, 178 M 367, 584 P2d 662 (1978).

Lack of Jurisdiction: The District Court did not have jurisdiction to modify a prior custody award made less than 2 years prior (restriction now deleted) when the court made no finding that the child's present environment seriously endangers his physical, mental, moral, or emotional health. The court also lacked jurisdiction to issue an order to show cause under 40-4-220 or to modify the custody decree under 40-4-211. Strouf v. Strouf, 176 M 406, 578 P2d 746 (1978).

Erroneous Award of Temporary Custody to Aunt: An aunt did not have standing to bring an action for temporary custody of her brother's children because they were in the "physical custody", although not actual and immediate control, of their mother. The aunt was not a party to the original custody proceeding; and the motion for temporary custody was accompanied by a deficient affidavit, and no notice was given to the mother. Henderson v. Henderson, 174 M 1, 568 P2d 177 (1977).

Case Notes

Best Interest of Child Standard Unconstitutional in Custody Award to Nonparent Over Natural Parent Absent Finding of Abuse, Neglect, or Dependency: The best interest of the child standard referred to in this section in determining the custody of a child whose custodial parent dies is unconstitutional to the extent that it allows the grant of a petition prior to the termination of the noncustodial parent's constitutional right to custody. Use of the standard is improper in that any showing that a nonparent may be able to provide a better environment than a natural parent is irrelevant to the question of custody between the two in view of the constitutional right of a parent to custody. Although this section gives a nonparent standing to request a custody hearing, it does not give the District Court authority to deprive a natural parent of the right to custody absent a finding of abuse, neglect, or dependency on the part of the natural parent. In re A.R.A., 277 M 66, 919 P2d 388, 53 St. Rep. 543 (1996), following In re Doney, 174 M 282, 570 P2d 575 (1977), and overruling Brost v. Glasgow, 200 M 194, 651 P2d 32 (1982), and In re C.G., 228 M 118, 740 P2d 1139 (1987).

Parent Generally Preferred to Nonparent in Award of Custody: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in finding that a parent was generally preferred to a nonparent in award of custody, given evidence of the parent's good character. Weber v. Van De Kop, 228 M 118, 740 P2d 1139, 44 St. Rep. 1388 (1987).

Qualified Intervenor and Natural Father Claiming Custody — "Best Interest" Standard Properly Applied: In a case where the natural custodial parent died, the District Court partially relied on the stringent standard set forth in In re Guardianship of Doney, 174 M 282, 570 P2d 575 (1977), in holding that, to gain custody, the intervenor must show that the natural father was unfit. The Supreme Court found that the Doney standard was incorrectly applied, but since the lower court ultimately applied the correct standard (best interest of the child) in its final determination, that determination did not constitute reversible error. Weber v. Van De Kop, 228 M 118, 740 P2d 1139, 44 St. Rep. 1388 (1987).

Best Interests of Child: If the statutory requirements for consent to adoption are met, the best interests of the child become the paramount consideration. In re Adoption of S.T.V., 226 M 18, 733 P2d 841, 44 St. Rep. 425 (1987).

"Best Interest of Child" Test Applicable: After the death of the custodial mother, the natural father and the maternal grandmother both requested custody of the children. The trial court properly determined custody in accordance with the "best interest of child" test set forth in 40-4-212. A more stringent standard was not required. Brost v. Glasgow, 200 M 194, 651 P2d 32, 39 St. Rep. 1679 (1982).

Determination of Neglect — No Jurisdiction for Adoption: After the death of the custodial mother, the maternal grandmother took the children into her home. The natural father petitioned to have the children restored to his custody. The grandmother requested custody and filed a petition for adoption. In a proceeding pursuant to this section, the grandmother was granted custody because the father had failed to make child support payments for more than a year and had generally neglected the children. The trial court properly dismissed the grandmother's petition for adoption for lack of jurisdiction. The determination of neglect needed to excuse the need for the father's consent to adoption under 40-8-111 (now repealed) must be made in a separate proceeding pursuant to Title 41, ch. 3, part 6. Brost v. Glasgow, 200 M 194, 651 P2d 32, 39 St. Rep. 1679 (1982).

Basis for Depriving Natural Parent of Custody: The father automatically assumes the right to custody of the children at the moment of the mother's death. A judicial hearing and finding of dependency and neglect under Title 41, ch. 3, part 4 or a judicial finding of willful abandonment or nonsupport under 40-8-111 (now repealed) are the exclusive means by which a natural parent may be involuntarily deprived of custody. Schultz v. Schultz, 184 M 245, 602 P2d 595 (1979), following Henderson v. Henderson, 174 M 1, 568 P2d 177 (1977); In re Guardianship of Doney, 174 M 282, 570 P2d 575 (1977).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Credible Evidence in Expert's Recommendations That Child's Interests Best Served by Awarding Primary Custody to One Parent During School Year — Trial Court's Child Custody Decision Presumed Correct — Affirmation Absent Abuse of Discretion: Both parents were recognized as good but were unable to agree on important coparenting decisions once the child reached school age. The father wished to continue equal visitation time, and his experts expressed the opinion that the shared custody arrangement could work. The mother maintained that she could provide a more stable, structured home environment once school began, and her experts testified that the mother should have primary custody to achieve that stability. The District Court considered the opinions of all the experts and then granted primary residential custody to the mother. The Supreme Court found substantial credible evidence to support the custody award and found no indication that the court misapprehended the effect of the evidence or committed a clear and definite mistake in making the award. The trial court's decision is presumed correct and, absent a clear abuse of discretion, will be upheld on appeal. Here, the District Court properly considered the child's best interests, relied on professional assessments of those interests, and made an independent analysis of the facts, so no abuse of discretion occurred. In re Marriage of McKenna, 2000 MT 58, 299 M 13, 996 P2d 386, 57 St. Rep. 276 (2000), following In re Marriage of Baer, 1998 MT 29, 287 M 322, 954 P2d 1125 (1998). See also In re Marriage of Anderson, 260 M 246, 859 P2d 451 (1993).

Nonmedical Treatment Not Payable Under Order That Father Provide Portion of Medical Treatment for Child: A dissolution decree provided that the father pay 58% and the mother 42% of the children's "medically related expenses" not covered by insurance. When the daughter exhibited behavioral problems, the mother enrolled her in an out-of-state wilderness treatment program, then sought to recover 58% of the expense from the father. However, the mother testified that anyone could send a child to the program without a medical referral and that the insurance company had denied payment for the treatment. Absent evidence of a medical diagnosis and referral, the treatment did not qualify as a medical-related expense contemplated by the decree, and the District Court's findings of fact to deny the mother's motion to require the father to pay a percentage of the cost were sufficient and not in error. In re Marriage of Johnson, 1999 MT 254, 296 M 311, 989 P2d 356, 56 St. Rep. 1011 (1999), distinguishing In re Marriage of Bliss, 187 M 331, 609 P2d 1209 (1980), and Jones v. Jones, 190 M 221, 620 P2d 850, 37 St. Rep. 1973 (1980).

Visitation Restrictions Based on Unsupported Claims of Potential Harm From Transvestism as Abuse of Discretion: Wife claimed that husband had exhibited compulsive transvestite tendencies and that exposure of the child to that behavior could result in irreparable harm. The trial court agreed, severely limiting visitation to the daytime weekend hours and requiring that visits be supervised by the wife or an adult, nontransvestite member of the husband's family. However, every expert who testified on the issue stated that: (1) the husband's therapy had been successful; (2) the husband exhibited above-average parenting skills; (3) any negative impact on the child because of the father's behavior would be less than the impact from not having a normal relationship with the father; and (4) the highly restrictive visitation arrangement was not conducive to a normal father-child relationship. The trial court's imposition of visitation restrictions, in spite of uncontroverted expert testimony, was an abuse of discretion and reversible error. In re Marriage of D.F.D. & D.G.D., 261 M 186, 862 P2d 368, 50 St. Rep. 1280 (1993).

Statutory Factors Considered — Failure to Award Sole Custody Not Error: The District Court found that both parents were in good health, that the child had lived with his mother since birth, and that the father had visited him on numerous occasions. It was undisputed that the mother was doing a good job raising the child and that she should be his primary custodian. These findings constituted adequate consideration of the child's best interests. Absent any findings to rebut the statutory presumption of joint custody, it was not error for the court to fail to award mother sole custody. In re Paternity of W.L., 259 M 187, 855 P2d 521, 50 St. Rep. 751 (1993).

Award of Sole Custody in Absence of Request for Joint Custody Not Error: Mother asserted District Court error in not awarding joint custody or, alternatively, that the award of sole custody should be set aside because the court failed to state its reasons for not awarding joint custody. However, the presumption in favor of joint custody arises only if a party requests it. Absent evidence that either party ever requested joint custody, it was not error for the court to award sole custody without articulating why joint custody would not be in the child's best interests. In re Marriage of Starks, 259 M 138, 855 P2d 527, 50 St. Rep. 719 (1993).

Medical Treatment of Children Properly Considered — Wishes of Children Balanced With Best Interests for Treatment: After their divorce, JoAnn lived in Billings and Alan lived in Plentywood. Both children of the marriage required medical treatment. Alan's efforts to address their conditions were more successful than JoAnn's. Both children desired to live with JoAnn in Billings. The District Court ordered the parents to make an appointment with a specialist concerning their daughter's back problems and ordered JoAnn to require the daughter to wear a brace if indicated by the specialist. The District Court also ordered JoAnn to take whatever action was necessary for her son to lose weight, and if he did not lose weight within a specified time, Alan could petition for a change of custody. The Supreme Court held that the District Court properly considered the health and welfare of the children and their preference to live with their mother. Because JoAnn actively tried to frustrate visitation by Alan, the District Court properly tried to balance the interests of the parents by ordering the custodial parent to restrict nonschool activities of the children if they refuse to visit the noncustodial parent and by ordering the parents to seek counseling. In re Marriage of Nikolaisen, 257 M 1, 847 P2d 287, 50 St. Rep. 133 (1993).

Award of Physical Custody for Six Months With Each Parent as Proper: The District Court considered the best interests of the children and the physical and emotional status of both parents and awarded 6 months physical custody with the father during the tax season when mother would be working long hours and the remaining 6 months with the mother. The court further reserved the right to have the children examined by a proper expert to see if the children were harmed by the custody arrangement. This award of joint physical custody was not error. In re Marriage of Johnston & Turrin, 255 M 421, 843 P2d 760, 49 St. Rep. 1047 (1992).

No Error in Modification of Joint Custody Order Against Child's Own Wishes: When the mother and father were divorced, they entered into a stipulation providing for joint custody of their daughter, with primary physical custody for the mother and liberal visitation for the father. In the years following the divorce, the mother, by moving to other states and not allowing the daughter to see her father, continually frustrated the father's attempts to have a meaningful relationship with his daughter. The father petitioned for a change of primary physical custody. The petition was granted by the District Court after the court interviewed the daughter, who did not want to live with her father. The Supreme Court held that there was no error in the District Court's modification of the custody order. The record showed that the District Court considered the best interests of the child. The Supreme Court stated, citing Marriage of Mitchell, 248 M 105, 809 P2d 582 (1991), that although the testimony was not the same on both sides, it was the District Court's duty to resolve those conflicts and further stated that the Court's resolution of those conflicts will not be disturbed on appeal absent an abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Ulland, 251 M 160, 823 P2d 864, 48 St. Rep. 1159 (1991).

Sole Custody Awarded Father — Mother's Mental Health a Factor in Granting Supervised Visitation — No Abuse of Discretion: Mother appealed from the District Court child custody order in a dissolution of marriage granting the father sole custody of their son and granting the mother supervised visitation rights. The Supreme Court ruled that because mental health is a factor used in determining the best interests of the child, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in relying upon the opinion of experts that the mother was in need of treatment and in granting sole custody to the father and ordering supervised visitation by the mother. In re Marriage of Cook, 250 M 210, 819 P2d 180, 48 St. Rep. 795 (1991).

Failure to Consider Mental and Physical Health and Physical Abuse Documented by Case Worker — Reversal Warranted: The District Court committed reversible error in failing to consider the information provided in a home and family assessment study by a social worker regarding the mother's mental health and her documented physical and emotional abuse of the children and in neglecting to order a psychological evaluation of the mother to determine her parenting capability or neglecting to order counseling for the mother and other family members. Maxwell v. Maxwell, 248 M 189, 810 P2d 311, 48 St. Rep. 386 (1991), citing In re Marriage of Bloom-Higham, 227 M 217, 738 P2d 114 (1987).

Modification of Physical Custody Within Joint Custody Proper — Best Interest of Child: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in modifying physical custody within a joint custody situation from mother to father after finding that: (1) mother used profane or abusive language toward children; (2) father was refused visitation; (3) mother was drinking a number of times in children's presence; (4) mother engaged in inappropriate behavior with her fiance in children's presence; and (5) testimony of a Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) social worker indicated that mother was verbally abusive, uncooperative in arranging a home study, and the subject of referrals for investigation of child abuse or neglect from three sources. In re Marriage of Gravely, 248 M 105, 809 P2d 582, 48 St. Rep. 353 (1991).

Modification of Custody — Applicability of Best Interest Standard: In resolving whether modification of custody will be allowed, a court need merely make a "best interest" determination pursuant to 40-4-224 (2) (now repealed) rather than deciding whether the more stringent requirements of 40-4-219 are satisfied. As long as a court correctly complies with 40-4-224 (now repealed), consideration of 40-4-219 is harmless and does not constitute reversible error. In re Marriage of Ferguson, 246 M 344, 805 P2d 1334, 47 St. Rep. 2142 (1990).

"Best Interest" Factors Examined — No Abuse of Discretion: When facts were examined under the statutory standards, including allegations of physical abuse, wishes of the parents, wishes of the children, and the interaction and interrelationship of the parents with the children, there was no abuse of discretion through failure to examine the best interests of the children in the District Court award of joint custody. In re Marriage of Allen, 237 M 64, 771 P2d 578, 46 St. Rep. 624 (1989).

Joint Custody Not Awarded — When Written Findings Adequate: Where substantial evidence existed in the record to support an award of sole custody, the fact that the District Court's written findings supporting nonaward of joint custody were not "exemplary" did not constitute reversible error. In re Marriage of Syljuberget, 234 M 178, 763 P2d 323, 45 St. Rep. 1825 (1988).

Evidence of Spousal Abuse Precluding Joint Custody: Although spousal abuse was not listed as a factor to be considered in awarding custody under 40-4-224 (now repealed) (prior to 1987 amendment), it was within the District Court's discretion to deny joint custody when evidence at trial clearly related the history of abuse to the best interests of the child. In re Marriage of Houtchens, 233 M 266, 760 P2d 71, 45 St. Rep. 1476 (1988).

Adoption of One Party's Proposed Findings Applicable to Custody Proceedings: The rule that even verbatim adoption of a party's proposed findings of fact is not grounds for reversal if supported by substantial credible evidence, as previously applied to marital property disputes in In re Marriage of Sessions, 231 M 437, 753 P2d 1306, 45 St. Rep. 744 (1988), and in In re Marriage of Watson, 227 M 383, 739 P2d 951, 44 St. Rep. 1167 (1987), also applies to findings related to proceedings to determine the custody of a child. In re Marriage of Smith, 232 M 528, 757 P2d 784, 45 St. Rep. 1253 (1988).

Equal or Unequal Physical Custody in Joint Custody Arrangement: Wife contended that access to children becomes an issue only when legal custody is placed with one parent and not when joint custody is granted. However, legal custody must not be confused with physical custody. Joint custody may involve equal physical custody of the children by both parents or it may entail one parent having substantially more or less actual physical custody than the other parent. Although the access factor is not a mandatory consideration in joint custody awards, there is no reason why it should not be considered by the District Court when attempting to arrange for a child's best interests and to facilitate public policy. In re Marriage of Saylor, 232 M 294, 756 P2d 1149, 45 St. Rep. 1062 (1988).

Opposing Affidavit Required Prior to Custody Modification: Mother, an enrolled member of the Chippewa Cree Tribe, appealed from an order that modified original dissolution decree of joint custody and which swapped custody schedules, effectively granting primary custody of son to non-Indian father. Subsequently, facts indicated that the father's affidavit, upon which the modification was based, contained inaccurate information and failed to reveal the father's custodial interference conviction. Likewise, irregularities in service provided mother no opportunity to file opposing affidavit. The Supreme Court remanded the lower court modification, holding the lower court may act on a motion to modify custody only after the adverse party has had an opportunity to file an opposing affidavit. Joint custody may be modified only to terminate the custody rights of one of the parties. In re Custody of A.L.S., 229 M 297, 747 P2d 192, 44 St. Rep. 1979 (1987).

Parental Cooperation as Key in Custody Award: Father contended that joint custody was presumptively in the child's best interests and was necessary because the mother deprived him of adequate visitation. In addressing the issue, the trial court found that the parents were unable to communicate about the child, the father was inflexible, the child had adjusted to the mother's home environment, and the child's interests were best served with sole custody to the mother. Parental cooperation is a key factor in joint custody, and where there is no cooperation, award of sole custody is proper. In re Marriage of Jacobson, 228 M 458, 743 P2d 1025, 44 St. Rep. 1678 (1987).

Rebuttable Presumption as to Change in Custody — Court Order and Judgment Premature: The Supreme Court remanded an appeal of a visitation schedule that established an annually alternating living arrangement between the wife's residence in San Diego and husband's residence in Missoula. The trial court had ordered psychiatric evaluations of the wife and child, which were completed, and of the husband, his present wife, and the child, which were not completed at the time of trial. The trial court also ordered that a "rebuttable presumption will exist as to the change in residency being in [the child's] best interest, which presumption can be overcome by competent evidence, including expert testimony" by the psychiatrist. The Supreme Court declined to decide whether substantial evidence supported the order of alternating custody because, without the benefit of all ordered psychiatric evaluations, the trial court's order and judgment were premature. In re Marriage of Allen/Wagner, 228 M 189, 741 P2d 773, 44 St. Rep. 1447 (1987).

Fixed Visitation Schedule — Equal Physical Custody Not in Best Interests of Child: Father appealed trial court custody and visitation schedule that provided 140 days to father and 225 to mother. He alleged that based on Montana's equal allotment of custodial time provision, the court's grant of less than one-half of the child's time constituted a misapplication of the best interest of the child standard. The Supreme Court upheld the award, stating that substantial credible evidence supported the specific custody and visitation award. Depending on the circumstances in joint custody awards, equal physical custody will not be awarded if not in the best interests of the child. In re Marriage of Smyka & Dayton, 227 M 408, 739 P2d 489, 44 St. Rep. 1188 (1987).

Joint Custody Not in Child's Best Interest: Although both mother and father are fit parents, the record and findings show substantial reasons why joint custody would not be in the best interest of the infant children. These findings include the geographical distance between the parents, their inability to communicate regarding issues involving the children due to interference from the father's present female cohabitant, the father's record of indifference regarding visitation, and the mother's role as primary caretaker for the infants' entire 2 years of life. In re Marriage of Dunn, 226 M 394, 735 P2d 1117, 44 St. Rep. 749 (1987).

Joint Custody Visitation Limitations Proper: It was within the court's discretion to award parents joint custody while limiting the father's visitation to alternate weekends, alternate holidays, an alternate week night, Father's Day, and 3 nonconsecutive weeks in the summer. In re Marriage of Tonne, 226 M 1, 733 P2d 1280, 44 St. Rep. 411 (1987).

Well-Being, Mental Health, Best Wishes, and Desires of Children — Father's Desire for Joint Custody Overridden: Any presumption in 40-4-224 (now repealed) favoring joint custody was overridden by abundant evidence supporting grant of sole custody to the wife. The findings and reasons for granting her sole custody are identical to those for denying husband's request for joint custody. The lower court found that one of the two children, both of whom are girls, was mildly retarded; that the retarded girl had been molested by the paternal grandfather while visiting the father and as a result needed continuous psychiatric care; that the mother had told the father of a previous molestation attempt; that the retarded child attended a special education program, could not care for herself, and probably would not be able to for many years; that the mother and daughters had a close relationship and had lived together continuously since the parents' separation and the mother took care of the children's daily needs, including the special needs of the retarded child; and that the father, who lived in Whitefish, Montana, had seen the children, who lived in Washington and are 16 and 17 years old, only three times in the last 18 months and the children did not express a desire to spend time with him. In re Marriage of Manus, 225 M 457, 733 P2d 1275, 44 St. Rep. 398 (1987).

Special Needs of Child — Equal Physical Custody Not Awarded: Because of special circumstances and responsibilities that must be addressed by the custodial parent of a child with learning and physical disabilities, it may be in the child's best interest that his physical custody for a school year not be interrupted. In that case, equal physical custody between joint custodians may be precluded. In re Marriage of Cole, 224 M 207, 729 P2d 1276, 43 St. Rep. 2136 (1986).

Travel Restriction in Best Interest of Child — Proof Required: The parent who requests a travel restriction for the time the other parent has physical custody must provide sufficient proof that a restriction is in the best interest of the child. In re Marriage of Cole, 224 M 207, 729 P2d 1276, 43 St. Rep. 2136 (1986).

Fixed Visitation Schedule — Allotment of Equal Time to Be Balanced With Best Interests of Child: A District Court order granted a fixed visitation schedule giving father about 75 days out of approximately 170 available nonschool visitation days. On appeal, he contended that 40-4-224 (now repealed) automatically provides equal amounts of a child's time with each parent. The Supreme Court disagreed, finding that 40-4-224 (now repealed) requires that the equal time recommendation be balanced by the practicalities of providing for the best interests of the child and that the allotment need only be as equal as possible. In re Marriage of Ward, 223 M 401, 725 P2d 1211, 43 St. Rep. 1825 (1986), followed in In re Marriage of Fesolowitz/Dechaine, 258 M 380, 852 P2d 658, 50 St. Rep. 575 (1993). See also In re Marriage of Kovash, 260 M 44, 858 P2d 351, 50 St. Rep. 934 (1993).

Petition to Modify Joint Custody — Standard — Change of Residence of Custodial Spouse: Wife appealed a District Court order that modified a joint custody decree by changing the physical custody of the children from the wife to the husband after the wife had requested that the husband assume custody for 1 ½ years because of her difficult financial circumstances. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the District Court properly applied the best interest of children standard, rather than serious endangerment, which may be relied on only to terminate a joint custody arrangement. Furthermore, the husband was denied custody not because the wife moved to Texas but because the children's interests would best be served by allowing them to remain in the same family, school, and community they have enjoyed for several years. In re Marriage of Bergner & Owens, 222 M 305, 722 P2d 1141, 43 St. Rep. 1285 (1986).

Petition to Terminate Joint Custody — Standard: A husband petitioned for modification of a joint custody arrangement. He sought permanent custody of the children, with limited visitation rights for the wife. The District Court denied the petition, finding that husband failed to establish that the children's present environment seriously endangered their physical, mental, moral, or emotional health. On appeal, the husband contended that the District Court should have applied the best interest of the children as the standard for the petition to modify joint custody. The Supreme Court held that under 40-4-224 (now repealed) the appropriate standard was serious endangerment, as applied by District Court under 40-4-219, since the husband's petition was one to actually terminate the wife's custody. In re Marriage of Gahm & Henson, 222 M 300, 722 P2d 1138, 43 St. Rep. 1281 (1986), followed in In re Marriage of Frydenlund, 255 M 474, 844 P2d 58, 49 St. Rep. 1074 (1992), distinguishing In re Custody of J.H., 231 M 301, 752 P2d 194 (1988), and In re Marriage of Johnson, 238 M 153, 777 P2d 305 (1989).

Physical Custody Shared: The trial court did not abuse its discretion in determining that the children's best interests would be served by awarding joint custody, with physical custody shared equally by the parents. If either parent moved from the local area, the other parent would have physical custody of the children. In re Marriage of Ryan, 222 M 188, 720 P2d 691, 43 St. Rep. 1163 (1986).

Joint Custody Not Mandated — Material Outside Record Not Considered: Montana's policy favoring joint custody does not mandate joint custody. When the District Court carefully considered the best interests of the children and the recommendations of the children's guardian ad litem before awarding sole custody to the wife with reasonable visitation for the husband, the Supreme Court will not modify sole custody and will not consider a supplemental affidavit concerning the current residence of one of the children. The court will not consider any material outside the record developed at trial. In re Marriage of Cruikshank, 222 M 152, 720 P2d 1191, 43 St. Rep. 1132 (1986).

Adequate Statement of Reasons for Refusing Joint Custody: The trial court adequately stated why it refused parties' request for joint custody of 3- and 5-year-old children when the court found that: (1) wife was chronically dirty in the care of the house and children and indifferent to serving the children nourishing food; therefore, the children's health was threatened, and they would be invited to adopt similar habits; (2) wife dressed meticulously and was well-groomed when she pursued her outside interests; (3) wife was more interested in her personal ends than the children; (4) husband was significantly more interested in the children's welfare than the wife; and (5) it was in the children's best interests to be in husband's custody with extensive visitation rights in the wife. In re Marriage of Nalivka, 222 M 84, 720 P2d 683, 43 St. Rep. 1079 (1986).

Reasonable Visitation Provision Replaced by Fixed Visitation Schedule — No Abuse of Discretion: Following dissolution of marriage, mother was granted custody of two minor children with reasonable visitation awarded to father. In the ensuing months, the father was permitted to visit the children only once and further attempts to arrange visitation were not successful since the mother had no phone and would not respond to messages. The father petitioned the District Court to grant a fixed visitation schedule, and the petition was granted. Although not required under Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), the order contained findings and conclusions, including evidence that the District Court Judge considered the best interests of the children and the conclusion that the mother's suggested graduated basis visitation schedule required reasonableness that was lacking in both parties. The Supreme Court held that the District Court's aid was necessary to clarify the meaning of "reasonable visitation" and found no abuse of discretion in the District Court Judge's conclusion. In re Marriage of Vinecke, 221 M 58, 716 P2d 638, 43 St. Rep. 633 (1986).

Written Findings Required: In awarding joint custody, the District Court should enter specific findings regarding the willingness of the parents to cooperate in custody matters and in their parental roles, the interaction and interrelationship of the child with each parent, and the effect of the geographic proximity of the parents' residences on their ability to share the rights and responsibilities of child rearing, particularly where there is a post-divorce birth and an absent parent requesting joint custody. In re Custody & Support of B.T.S., 219 M 391, 712 P2d 1298, 43 St. Rep. 37 (1986).

Sole Custody Award Upheld Under Former Law: Under former law, it was proper for the District Court to award sole custody of the minor child of the marriage to the mother, rather than awarding joint custody to both parents as requested by the father, when the only substantial evidence presented to the court on the issue was a recommendation of a domestic relations worker that sole custody be granted to the mother. In re Marriage of Benner, 219 M 188, 711 P2d 802, 42 St. Rep. 1943 (1985).

Joint Custody Not Awarded — No Abuse of Discretion: The court did not abuse its discretion in not allowing joint custody under former law when it considered the prospect of joint custody and the criteria set forth in 40-4-212, 40-4-222 through 40-4-224 (all now repealed), and 40-4-225. In re Marriage of Alt, 218 M 327, 708 P2d 258, 42 St. Rep. 1621 (1985).

Findings on Joint Custody Required: After several attempts at reconciliation, the parties' marriage was dissolved. During the dissolution the mother asked the court to grant the parties joint custody, with the provision that she be the residential parent. An attorney was appointed to represent the children, and the attorney recommended that joint custody be awarded with the mother designated as the residential parent. The court awarded custody to the father. On appeal, the Supreme Court vacated the custody order and remanded for findings on why joint custody was not awarded as required by 40-4-224 (now repealed). Murphy v. Murphy, 205 M 162, 666 P2d 755, 40 St. Rep. 1188 (1983).

Custody Order — Necessity of Supporting Fact Findings: Where court's finding granting custody of 3-year-old child of divorced parents to the father was a conclusive statement unsupported by fact findings explaining why husband and not wife should have custody, the award was vacated and the cause remanded for new findings and conclusions and an order. The evidence supported an award to either party, but in making a prior order the court had found a close relationship between the child and his 7-year-old half sister, who lived with her mother, and had emphasized the relationship and ordered the parties to work out a joint custody arrangement, which they were unable to do, resulting in a subsequent grant of custody to only one party. Thus, the evidence and the findings in relation to the prior joint custody order tended to support a conclusion that the wife should have custody. In re Marriage of Cameron, 197 M 226, 641 P2d 1057, 39 St. Rep. 485 (1982).

Factors in Custody Decision — Close Relationship of Child to Other Family Members: The continuity and stability of the family relationship between a child and its custodian are important; therefore, court to which custody case was remanded after vacation of order was requested to consider, in framing a new order, its previous factual determination that the 3-year-old child, while temporarily living with mother, had a close relationship with his 7-year-old half sister who lived with her mother. In re Marriage of Cameron, 197 M 226, 641 P2d 1057, 39 St. Rep. 485 (1982).

Fee for Filing Petition for Contested Amendment of Parenting Plan Not Applicable to Petition to Modify Child Support: Modification of child support pursuant to 40-4-208 is a separate procedure that does not necessarily entail amendment of a parenting plan pursuant to 40-4-219. Therefore, for filing purposes, a petition to modify child support is not considered a petition for amendment of a parenting plan, and it is inappropriate for a Clerk of Court to collect the $120 statutory fee for filing a petition for a contested amendment of a parenting plan under 25-1-201(1)(a) upon the filing of a petition to modify child support in an existing cause. 47 A.G. (1) marshal, preserve, and protect marital estate assets and liabilities that exist at the date of separation in order to avoid dissipations of the marital estate before distribution;

(2) ensure fair and sufficient child and spousal support awards; and

(3) achieve an equitable division of marital estate assets and liabilities on the dissolution or nullity of marriage or legal separation of the parties, as provided under Montana law; and

WHEREAS, each party has a continuing duty to update and augment material changes to that disclosure so that at the time that the parties enter into an agreement for the resolution of any of these issues or at the time of trial on these issues, each party will have as full and complete knowledge of the relevant underlying facts as is reasonably possible under the circumstances of the case without the need of formal discovery requests pursuant to the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure.

Chapter Compiler's Comments

Chapter Case Notes

Nature of Child Support Debt — Higher Order Than Ordinary Civil Debt: The legislative intent underlying the license suspension statutes was to emphasize, as a matter of public policy, that child support obligations have the highest priority in a parent's allocation of income to debt. Unpaid child support may not be analogized to ordinary civil debt because parents have not only a legal obligation, but a social and moral obligation, to support their children, so support of children transcends ordinary individualistic matters, rising to the level of a social obligation that a parent owes not only to the child, but to the state as well. Thus, the law does not look lightly upon those who fail to make a good faith effort to discharge their child support obligations when they are able to do so. The license suspension provisions are remedial in nature, rather than punitive, because they protect the public interest in having parents, not the state, shoulder financial responsibility for children. In the present case, the father was years in arrears in paying child support at the time that the license suspension hearing was held but nevertheless maintained that when the child was emancipated, the child support debt transformed into an ordinary civil debt. The Supreme Court disagreed, expressly approving the use of license suspension statutes as a remedy for the collection of child support arrearages. In re Marriage of Hopper, 1999 MT 310, 295 M 225, 991 P2d 960, 56 St. Rep. 1247 (1999), following Willoughby v. Loomis, 264 M 44, 869 P2d 271, 51 St. Rep. 138 (1994), and distinguishing In re Marriage of Mikesell, 276 M 403, 916 P2d 740, 53 St. Rep. 418 (1996).

Child Support Enforcement Remedies Held Separate Remedies to Be Exercised Within Ten-Year Statute of Limitations — Due Process Requirements Applicable to Separate Remedies — Connell Distinguished: Emery was divorced from Keep in 1987, and Emery was ordered to pay child support. In exchange for Keep's receipt of payments under the Aid to Families With Dependent Children (now FAIM financial assistance) program, Keep assigned the Child Support Enforcement Division (CSED) of the Department of Public Health and Human Services her right to receive child support and her right to enforcement of support. In 1991, CSED served Emery with a Notice of Intent (NOI) to collect the child support payments by referral of his debt to the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) for collection by interception of any federal tax refund owed to Emery. In response to the NOI, Emery timely requested an administrative hearing before CSED, which was granted, but the hearing was indefinitely continued, and no interception was made by the IRS. In 1992, CSED sent a second NOI to Emery, but Emery made no response. In 1992, no interception was made by the IRS. Also in 1992, Emery and Keep executed a stipulated change of their children's custody. In that stipulation, Keep waived her ability to collect child support arrearages, and the District Court approved the stipulation in an order. In 1995, CSED sent a third NOI to Emery notifying him of CSED's intent to collect child support payments by interception of Emery's federal tax refund. In response to the 1995 NOI, Emery requested a hearing before the CSED. Within 8 months from service of the 1995 NOI upon Emery, the Administrative Law Judge (ALJ) held that CSED's assigned right to child support was not affected by the waiver because CSED was not a party to the stipulation. The District Court approved the decision of the ALJ. On a motion for alteration or amendment of the District Court's order, the District Court, relying upon In re Connell v. St., 280 M 491, 930 P2d 88 (1997), held that the delay between Emery's 1991 request for administrative review and the 1996 hearing before the ALJ violated Emery's right to due process of law and his right to the administration of justice without delay. The Supreme Court reviewed its decision in Connell and pointed out that in that case, 44 months elapsed before the ALJ made a decision in response to Connell's request for administrative review of a CSED NOI and that the 44-month lapse denied Connell his constitutional rights to due process and administration of justice without delay. In contrast, the Supreme Court held that the NOI served upon Emery in 1995 in the case before it was a separate proceeding from the NOI served upon him in 1991 and was not, as interpreted by the District Court, a continuation of the 1991 proceeding because the 1991 proceeding was discontinued once the IRS failed to make an interception of the federal tax refund owed to Emery. Further, the Supreme Court pointed out that the various administrative remedies, such as state debt offsets, license suspension, warrants for distraint, and state income withholding, are all separate remedies for the CSED to pursue, and election of one remedy does not preclude pursuit of another remedy after, or at the same time as, the remedy chosen by the CSED until the debt assigned to the CSED is fully paid. Any of the remedies, the Supreme Court held, were subject to the 10-year statute of limitations provided in 27-2-201. The Supreme Court therefore held that because the lapse of time in the case before it was between different proceedings and not within one proceeding and the lapse of time within the 1995 proceeding was reasonable, Emery's right of due process and right to administration of justice without delay were not violated. The Supreme Court also held that because Emery had no right under Montana law to a hearing when no action was being taken by the CSED against him, the failure of the CSED to grant a hearing did not implicate Emery's rights of due process and administration of justice. In response to Emery's argument that the CSED did not act soon enough in initiating its collection action, the Supreme Court held that Art. II, sec. 16, Mont. Const., imposes no requirement that the CSED act "speedily and without delay" within the 10-year statute of limitations provided in 27-2-201, noting that imposition of such a requirement would effectively eliminate that 10-year limitation period. For these reasons, the Supreme Court reversed the decision made by the District Court that Emery's constitutional rights were violated by the decision of the CSED. Emery v. St., 286 M 376, 950 P2d 764, 54 St. Rep. 1454 (1997).

Original Court Authority Over Support Action Not Affected by URESA Action — Original Decree Unaffected: Although a court in a Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (URESA) (replaced by UIFSA) action looks to the ability of the obligor to pay at the time of the enforcement proceeding, the authority of the court originally ordering payment is not affected, nor is its order modified by an order of a court fixing another or different sum pursuant to the URESA action. Furthermore, child support actions and URESA actions do not merge. A request for modification of a divorce decree is separate and distinct from a URESA action, and URESA support orders that do not reference prior support awards do not modify them. In re Marriage of Petranek, 255 M 458, 843 P2d 784, 49 St. Rep. 1107 (1992).

Obligation to Support Independent of Visitation Rights: A child's right to support and the parent's support obligation are not affected by misconduct of the parent or violations of visitation provisions of a custody decree. The District Court therefore was in error in making the enforcement of the child support payments, under a Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (URESA) (replaced by UIFSA) action, contingent upon visitation compliance by the custodial parent. State ex rel. Dewyea v. Knapp, 208 M 19, 674 P2d 1104, 41 St. Rep. 143 (1984), affirmed in In re Adoption of K.L.J.K., 224 M 418, 730 P2d 1135, 43 St. Rep. 2297 (1986).

Extradition for Criminal Nonsupport: Although a child support order issued by another state is a civil and not a criminal action, failure to pay the support may be a crime (felony criminal nonsupport) in that state, and the defendant is subject to extradition for criminal proceedings. Crabtree v. St., 186 M 340, 607 P2d 566 (1980).

Full Faith and Credit Afforded Out-of-State Renewable Child Support Judgment — Res Judicata Applicable: Article IV, sec. 1, U.S. Const., provides that full faith and credit be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state. As restated in Baker v. Gen. Motors Corp., 522 US 222, 139 L Ed 2d 580, 118 S Ct 657 (1998), a final judgment in one state, if rendered by a court with adjudicatory authority over the subject matter and persons governed by the judgment, qualifies for recognition throughout the land. When issues of jurisdiction have been determined by one court, the doctrine of res judicata precludes a second court from considering jurisdiction as long as the first court fully and fairly considered the issue, and that judgment, as to jurisdiction, is entitled to full faith and credit in the second court. In the present case, a Utah renewable child support judgment, in which the Utah court established jurisdiction of the parties, was entitled to full faith and credit in Montana, despite contentions by the husband that he no longer had minimum contacts with Utah after moving to Montana. The jurisdiction arguments raised before the Montana Supreme Court were identical to the arguments that were previously raised, fairly considered, and finally decided in Utah, precluding relitigation by the Montana court under res judicata. In re Child Support of Mason, 1998 MT 192, 290 M 253, 964 P2d 743, 55 St. Rep. 803 (1998).

Ability of Attorney General to Appeal URESA Action Upheld — Construction of Pre-1993 Law Requiring County Attorney to Represent Obligee: When Carol Ann and Roland divorced, Roland was ordered to pay $125 a month in child support. Years later, Roland had paid nothing and had accumulated arrearages of $13,000. The County Attorney began a URESA (replaced by UIFSA) action to collect the arrearages. The District Court later held that because the arrearages had been reduced to a judgment and Carol Ann's daughter had reached the age of majority, the daughter was the real party in interest to collect the judgment. The Supreme Court held that under the version of URESA under which the case was prosecuted, especially 40-5-135 (now repealed), it was proper for the County Attorney to represent the obligee and for the Attorney General to appeal the case from the District Court. The Supreme Court also held that the District Court erred when it held that the arrearages had been merged with the District Court judgment. Willoughby v. Loomis, 264 M 44, 869 P2d 271, 51 St. Rep. 138 (1994).

Dismissal of State From URESA Action Held Erroneous — Construction of Pre-1993 Law Requiring County Attorney to Represent Obligee: When Carol Ann and Roland divorced, Roland was ordered to pay $125 a month in child support. Years later, Roland had paid nothing and had accumulated arrearages of $13,000. The County Attorney began a URESA (replaced by UIFSA) action to collect the arrearages. After a hearing, the District Court ordered that the state be dismissed from the action and warned that Carol Ann and her daughter should not try again to involve the state in the matter. The Supreme Court noted the definition of and use of the term "prosecuting attorney" throughout the URESA and noted that 40-5-134, 40-5-135, and 40-5-139, all repealed in 1993, required the County Attorney to represent the obligee in URESA cases. Thus, under that law, the Supreme Court held that it was error for the District Court to dismiss the state from the action. Willoughby v. Loomis, 264 M 44, 869 P2d 271, 51 St. Rep. 138 (1994).

URESA Action Not a Modification of Underlying Child Support Order: When Jody and Stephen were divorced, the District Court ordered Stephen to pay $125 a month in child support. Jody later brought a URESA (replaced by UIFSA) action against Stephen to enforce arrearages in child support payment. The parties stipulated that Stephen owed $16,425 in arrearages and that he would pay $60 a week until further ordered by the District Court. The District Court signed an order providing that the stipulation was enforceable by contempt. In a second attempt to collect arrearages, the District Court concluded that the URESA order did not modify the underlying child support order and ordered Stephen to pay $125 a month to pay off arrearages totaling more than $58,000. Citing In re Marriage of Petranek, 255 M 458, 843 P2d 784 (1992), the Supreme Court held that the first URESA action did not modify the underlying child support order. Because the first stipulation and order did not reference the original child support order and because neither party moved to amend the original child support order, the Supreme Court held that the first stipulation and order dealt only with the enforcement of the original obligation and that Stephen could be required to comply with that obligation. In re Marriage of Brown, 263 M 184, 867 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 7 (1994).

URESA Action — Personal Jurisdiction Over Tribal Member — Motion to Dismiss Improperly Denied: Where the respondent had previously married the appellant, an enrolled member of the Crow Indian Tribe living on the Crow Indian Reservation, in Colorado and been separated from him there and brought a Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (URESA) (replaced by UIFSA) action in Colorado for enforcement of child support payments, the District Court erred in denying the appellant's motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction over the appellant. All of the appellant's off-reservation contacts are with Colorado, not with Montana. Under the reasoning of State ex rel. Flammond v. Flammond, 190 M 350, 621 P2d 471, 37 St. Rep. 1991 (1980), the court had neither subject matter nor personal jurisdiction. State ex rel. Three Irons v. Three Irons, 190 M 360, 621 P2d 476, 37 St. Rep. 2016 (1980).

No Jurisdiction in Montana Courts Over Reservation Indian — URESA: The wife appealed the dismissal of her action seeking to enforce child support payments under the Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (URESA) (replaced by UIFSA). The District Court ruled it had no jurisdiction, and the Supreme Court agreed there was neither subject matter jurisdiction nor personal jurisdiction. The husband was a Blackfoot Indian living on the reservation in Montana. Jurisdiction could not be found in federal enabling statutes because neither the tribe nor the state complied with them; there were no off-reservation acts in Montana sufficient to vest state courts with jurisdiction over the husband; and a reservation Indian's domicile on the reservation is not an in-state contact that grants jurisdiction to state courts. The father had not acquiesced in state jurisdiction and has challenged state court jurisdiction from the outset. The fact that there was no appeal from the tribal court, the only avenue open to the wife, to the federal court system was not an argument in favor of state court jurisdiction. There must be a legal basis supporting state jurisdiction. State ex rel. Flammond v. Flammond, 190 M 350, 621 P2d 471, 37 St. Rep. 1991 (1980).

40-5-103. Definitions.

Official Comments

Several additional terms are defined in this section as compared to the parallel RURESA §2 [this section prior to 1993 amendment], which has fourteen entries. Many crucial definitions continue to be left to local law. For example, the definitions of "child" and "child support order" provided by subsections (1) and (2) refer to "the age of majority" without further elaboration. The exact age at which a child becomes an adult for different purposes is a matter for the law of each state, as is the age at which a parent's duty to furnish child support terminates. Similarly, a wide variety of other terms of art are implicitly left to state law. For example, subsection (21) [(23)] refers inter alia to "health care, arrearages, or reimbursement ...." All of these terms are subject to individualized definitions on a state-by-state basis.

Subsection (3) defines "duty of support" to mean the legal obligation to provide support before it has been reduced to judgment. It is broadly defined to include both prospective and retrospective obligations, to the extent they are imposed by the relevant state law.

In order to resolve certain conflicts in the exercise of jurisdiction, for limited purposes subsection (4) [(5)] borrows the concept of the "home state" of a child from the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act, versions of which have been adopted in all 50 states, and from the federal Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act, 42 U.S.C. §1738A.

Subsection (6) [(7)] is written broadly so that states that direct income withholding by an obligor's employer based on "other legal process," as distinguished from an order of a tribunal, may have that "legal process" recognized as an "income-withholding order." Federal law requires that each state provide for income withholding "without the necessity of any application therefor ... or for any further action ... by the court or other entity which issued such order." 42 U.S.C. 666(b)(2). States have complied with this directive in a variety of ways. For example, New York provides a method for obtaining income withholding of court-ordered support by authorizing an attorney, clerk of court, sheriff or agent of the child support enforcement agency to serve upon the defaulting obligor's employer an "income execution for support enforcement." New York McKinney's C.P.L.R. 5241. This "other legal process" reportedly is the standard method for obtaining income withholding in that state, while the statutory provision for an income withholding order, C.P.L.R. 5242, is rarely used by either the courts or the litigants.

Subsections (7) [(8)] and (8) [(9)] define "initiating state" and "initiating tribunal" similarly to RURESA §2(d) [subsection (4) of this section prior to 1993 amendment]. It is important to note, however, that this Act permits the direct filing of an interstate action in the responding state without an initial filing in an initiating tribunal. Thus, a petitioner in one state could seek to establish a support order in a second state by either filing in the second state's tribunal or seeking the assistance of the support enforcement agency in the second state.

The term "obligee" in subsection (12) [(13)] is defined in a broad manner similar to RURESA §2(f) [subsection (6) of this section prior to 1993 amendment], which is consistent with common usage. In instances of spousal support, the person owed the duty of support and the person receiving the payments are almost always the same. Use of the term is more complicated in the context of a child support order. The child is the person to whom the duty of support is owed and therefore can be viewed as the ultimate obligee. However, "obligee" usually refers to the individual receiving the payments. While this is most commonly the custodial parent or other legal custodian, the "obligee" may be a support enforcement agency which has been assigned the right to receive support payments in order to recoup AFDC (Aid to Families with Dependent Children, 42 U.S.C. §601 et seq.) [now temporary assistance for needy families block grant]. Even in the absence of such an assignment, a state may have an independent statutory claim for reimbursement for general assistance provided to a spouse, a former spouse, or a child of an obligor. The Act also uses "obligee" to identify an individual who is asserting a claim for support, not just for a person whose right to support is unquestioned, presumed, or has been established in a legal action. Subsection (13) [(14)] provides the correlative definition of an "obligor," which includes an individual who is alleged to owe a duty of support as well as a person whose obligation has previously been determined.

Note that the definitions of "responding state" and "responding tribunal" in subsections (16) [(18)] and (17) [(19)] accommodate the direct filing of a petition under this Act without the intervention of an initiating tribunal. Both definitions acknowledge the possibility that there might be a responding state or tribunal in a situation where there is no initiating state or tribunal.

Subsection (19) [(21)] withdraws the requirement of reciprocity demanded by RURESA and URESA. A state need not enact UIFSA in order for support orders issued by its tribunal to be enforced by other states. Public policy favoring such enforcement is sufficiently strong to warrant waiving any quid pro quo among the states. This policy extends to foreign jurisdictions, as well, which is intended to facilitate establishment and enforcement of orders from those jurisdictions. Specifically, if a support order from a Canadian province or Mexican state conforms to the principles of UIFSA, that order should be honored when it crosses the border in a spirit of comity.

Subsection (20) [(22)], "Support Enforcement Agency," includes the state IV-D agency (Part IV-D, Social Security Act, 42 U.S.C. §651 et seq.), and other state or local governmental entities charged with establishing or enforcing support.

Subsection (22) [(24)] introduces a completely new term, "tribunal," which replaces the term "court" used in RURESA. With the advent of the federal IV-D program, a number of states have delegated various aspects of child support establishment and enforcement to quasi-judicial bodies and administrative agencies. UIFSA adopts the term "tribunal" to account for the breadth of state variations in dealing with support orders.

Throughout the Act the term refers to a tribunal of the enacting state unless expressly noted otherwise. To avoid confusion, however, when actions of tribunals of the enacting state and another state are contrasted in the same section or subsection, the phrases "tribunal of this State" and "tribunal of another state" are used for the sake of clarity.

Dismissal of State From URESA Action Held Erroneous — Construction of Pre-1993 Law Requiring County Attorney to Represent Obligee: When Carol Ann and Roland divorced, Roland was ordered to pay $125 a month in child support. Years later, Roland had paid nothing and had accumulated arrearages of $13,000. The County Attorney began a URESA (replaced by UIFSA) action to collect the arrearages. After a hearing, the District Court ordered that the state be dismissed from the action and warned that Carol Ann and her daughter should not try again to involve the state in the matter. The Supreme Court noted the definition of and use of the term "prosecuting attorney" throughout the URESA and noted that 40-5-134, 40-5-135, and 40-5-139, all repealed in 1993, required the County Attorney to represent the obligee in URESA cases. Thus, under that law, the Supreme Court held that it was error for the District Court to dismiss the state from the action. Willoughby v. Loomis, 264 M 44, 869 P2d 271, 51 St. Rep. 138 (1994).

The enacting state must identify the courts, administrative agencies, or the combination of those entities, which constitute the tribunal authorized to deal with family support. In a particular state there may be several different such entities authorized to determine family support matters. It should be emphasized that this provision is not designed to address questions of venue, which are left to otherwise applicable state law.

The existence of procedures for interstate establishment, enforcement, or modification of support or a determination of parentage in this Act does not preclude the application of general state law. 40-5-145. Bases for jurisdiction over nonresident.

Official Comments

Part A of Article 2 [Sections 40-5-145 and 40-5-146] asserts what is commonly described as long-arm jurisdiction over a nonresident respondent for purposes of establishing a support order or determining parentage. Inclusion of this long-arm provision in this interstate Act is justified because even though the law of only the forum state is applicable, residents of two separate states are involved in the litigation and subject to the personal jurisdiction of the forum. The intent is to insure that every enacting state has a long-arm statute as broad as constitutionally permitted. In situations where the long-arm statute can be satisfied, the petitioner (either the obligor or the obligee) has two options under the Act: (1) utilize the long-arm statute to obtain personal jurisdiction over the respondent; or (2) initiate a two-state action under the succeeding provisions of UIFSA seeking to establish a support order in the respondent's state of residence.

Although not expressly stated, the long-arm statute provided by this section may be applied to spousal support as well as to child support. However, almost all of the specific provisions relate to child support orders or determinations of parentage. Only subsections (1), (2), and (8) [(7)] are applicable to an action for spousal support asserting long-arm jurisdiction over a nonresident. The first two subsections are wholly noncontroversial insofar as an assertion of personal jurisdiction is concerned. This accords with the fact that very few states have chosen to enact specific domestic relations long-arm statutes and that the focus of UIFSA is primarily on child support. Moreover, assertion of personal jurisdiction under subsection (1), (2), or (8) [(7)] will doubtless yield jurisdiction over all matters to be decided between the spouses, including division of property on divorce. Thus, the most obvious basis for asserting long-arm jurisdiction over spousal support, i.e., "last matrimonial domicile," is not included in Section 201 [this section] to avoid the potential problem of another instance of bifurcated jurisdiction. That is, a situation in which a tribunal could order a nonresident to pay spousal support, while not being authorized to personally bind that nonresident to a division of property on divorce.

Under RURESA, multiple support orders affecting the same parties are commonplace. UIFSA creates a structure designed to provide for only one support order at a time. This one order regime is facilitated and combined with a broad assertion of personal jurisdiction under this long-arm provision. The frequency of a two-state procedure involving the participation of tribunals in both states should be substantially reduced by the introduction of this long-arm statute.

Subsection (1) codifies the holding of Burnham v. Superior Court, 495 U.S. 604 (1990), which reaffirms the constitutional validity of asserting personal jurisdiction based on personal service within a state. Subsection (2) expresses the principle that a nonresident party concedes personal jurisdiction by seeking affirmative relief or by submitting to the jurisdiction by answering or entering an appearance. However, the power to assert jurisdiction over support issues under the Act does not extend the tribunal's jurisdiction to other matters. Subsections (1) through (8) [(1) through (7)] are derived from a variety of sources, including the Uniform Parentage Act §8, Texas Family Code §11.051 (Vernon Supp. 1992), and New York Family Court Act §154. Subsection (7) [not adopted in Montana] is bracketed because not all states maintain putative father registries. The factual situations catalogued in these subsections are appropriate and constitutionally acceptable grounds upon which to exercise personal jurisdiction over an individual.

Subsection (8) [(7)] tracks the broad, catch-all provisions found in many state statutes, including California, Civ. P. Code §410.10 (1973); New York, supra; and Texas, supra. It should be noted, however, that this provision, standing alone, was found to be inadequate to sustain a child support order under the facts presented in Kulko v. Superior Court of California for San Francisco, 436 U.S. 84 (1978).

40-5-146. Procedure when exercising jurisdiction over nonresident.

Official Comments

Assertion of long-arm jurisdiction over a nonresident essentially results in a one-state proceeding, notwithstanding the fact that the parties reside in different states. With two exceptions, the provisions of UIFSA are not applicable in these proceedings. The first exception allows the tribunal to apply the special rules of evidence and procedure of Section 316 [40-5-175] in order to facilitate decision-making when one party resides in another state, even though that party is subject to the personal jurisdiction of the tribunal. In other words, the one-state case may utilize two-state procedures in the interests of economy, efficiency, and fair play. The same considerations account for the second exception; the two-state discovery procedures of Section 318 [40-5-177] are made applicable to a one-state proceeding when a foreign tribunal can assist in that process. In all other situations, the substantive and procedural law of the state applies. However, to facilitate interstate exchange of information and to enable the nonresident to participate as fully as possible in the proceedings without the necessity of personally appearing in the forum state, this section expressly incorporates the special UIFSA rules on evidence and assistance with discovery procedures to long-arm cases.

40-5-147. Initiating and responding tribunal of this state.

Official Comments

Part B of Article 2 [Sections 40-5-147 through 40-5-150] tracks the traditional RURESA action, involving residents of separate states. In this situation, the initiating state does not assert personal jurisdiction over the nonresident, but instead forwards the case to another, responding state, which is to assert personal jurisdiction over its resident.

This section identifies the roles a tribunal of the forum may serve; as appropriate, it may act as either an initiating or a responding tribunal under UIFSA. Note that a tribunal can serve as a responding tribunal when there is no initiating tribunal in another state. This is to accommodate the direct filing of an action in a responding tribunal by a nonresident.

40-5-148. Simultaneous proceedings in another state.

Official Comments

This section is similar to Section 6 [40-7-107] of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act. Under the one-order system established by UIFSA, it is necessary to provide a new procedure in order to eliminate the multiple orders so common under RURESA and URESA. This requires cooperation between, and deference by, sister-state tribunals in order to avoid issuance of competing support orders. To this end, tribunals are expected to take an active part in seeking out information about support proceedings in other states concerning the same child. Depending on the circumstances, one or the other of two tribunals considering the same support obligation should decide to defer to the other. In this regard, UIFSA makes a significant departure from the approach adopted by the UCCJA, which chooses "first filing" as the method for resolving competing jurisdictional disputes. In the analogous situation, the federal Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act chooses the home state of the child to establish priority. Given the preemptive nature of the PKPA and the likelihood that custody and support are both involved in most cases, UIFSA opts for the federal method of resolving disputes between competing jurisdictional assertions by establishing a priority for the tribunal in the child's home state. If there is no home state, "first filing" controls.

40-5-149. Continuing, exclusive jurisdiction.

Official Comments

This section is perhaps the most crucial provision in UIFSA. It establishes the principle that the issuing tribunal retains continuing, exclusive jurisdiction over the support order except in very narrowly defined circumstances. If all parties and the child reside elsewhere, the issuing state loses its continuing, exclusive jurisdiction — which in practical terms means the issuing tribunal loses its authority to modify its order. The issuing state no longer has a nexus with the parties or child and, furthermore, the issuing tribunal has no current information about the circumstances of anyone involved. Note, however, that the one-order of the issuing tribunal remains valid and enforceable. That order is in effect not only in the issuing state and those states in which the order has been registered, but also may be enforced in additional states in which the one-order is registered for enforcement after the issuing state loses its power to modify the original order, see Sections 601-604 [40-5-184 through 40-5-187] (Registration and Enforcement of Support Order), infra. The one-order remains in effect until it is properly modified in accordance with the narrow terms of the Act, see Sections 609-612 [40-5-192 through 40-5-195] (Registration and Modification of Child Support Order), infra.

Child support orders may be modified under certain, specific conditions: (1) on the agreement of both parties; or, (2) if all the relevant persons, that is, the obligor, the individual obligee, and the child, have permanently left the issuing state. Note that while subsection (b)(2) [sic] [(3)] identifies the method for the release of continuing, exclusive jurisdiction by the issuing tribunal, it does not confer jurisdiction to modify on another tribunal. Modification requires that a tribunal have personal jurisdiction over both parties, as provided in Article 6, Part C [40-5-192 through 40-5-195]. It should also be noted that nothing in this section is intended to deprive a court which has lost continuing, exclusive jurisdiction of the power to enforce arrearages which have accrued during the existence of a valid order.

With regard to spousal support, the issuing tribunal retains continuing, exclusive jurisdiction over an order of spousal support throughout the entire existence of the support obligation. The prohibition against a modification of an existing spousal support order of another state imposed by Sections 205 [this section] and 206 [40-5-150] marks a radical departure from RURESA, which treats spousal and child support orders identically. Under UIFSA, modification of spousal support is permitted in the interstate context only if an action is initiated outside of, and modified by the original issuing state. While UIFSA revises RURESA in this regard, in fact this will have a minimal effect on actual practice. Interstate modification of spousal support has been relatively rare under RURESA. Moreover, the prohibition of modification of spousal support is consistent with the basic principle that a tribunal should apply local law if at all possible to insure efficient handling of cases and to minimize choice of law problems. Avoiding conflict of law problems is almost impossible if spousal support orders are subject to modification in a second state. For example, there is wide variation among state laws on the effect on a spousal support order following the obligee's remarriage or nonmarital cohabitation with another person.

The distinction between spousal and child support is further justified because the standards for modification of child support and spousal support are so different. In most jurisdictions a dramatic improvement in the obligor's economic circumstances will have little or no relevance in an action seeking an upward modification of spousal support, while a similar change in an obligor's situation typically is a primary basis for an increase in child support. This disparity is founded on a policy choice that post-divorce success should benefit the obligor's child, but not an ex-spouse.

Full Faith and Credit Afforded Out-of-State Renewable Child Support Judgment — Res Judicata Applicable: Article IV, sec. 1, U.S. Const., provides that full faith and credit be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state. As restated in Baker v. Gen. Motors Corp., 522 US 222, 139 L Ed 2d 580, 118 S Ct 657 (1998), a final judgment in one state, if rendered by a court with adjudicatory authority over the subject matter and persons governed by the judgment, qualifies for recognition throughout the land. When issues of jurisdiction have been determined by one court, the doctrine of res judicata precludes a second court from considering jurisdiction as long as the first court fully and fairly considered the issue, and that judgment, as to jurisdiction, is entitled to full faith and credit in the second court. In the present case, a Utah renewable child support judgment, in which the Utah court established jurisdiction of the parties, was entitled to full faith and credit in Montana, despite contentions by the husband that he no longer had minimum contacts with Utah after moving to Montana. The jurisdiction arguments raised before the Montana Supreme Court were identical to the arguments that were previously raised, fairly considered, and finally decided in Utah, precluding relitigation by the Montana court under res judicata. In re Child Support of Mason, 1998 MT 192, 290 M 253, 964 P2d 743, 55 St. Rep. 803 (1998).

40-5-150. Enforcement and modification of support order by tribunal having continuing jurisdiction.

Official Comments

This section is the correlative of the continuing, exclusive jurisdiction asserted in the preceding section. In subsection (a) [(1)] the enacting state recognizes the continuing, exclusive jurisdiction of other tribunals over support orders and authorizes the initiation of requests for modification to the issuing state.

Subsection (b) [(2)] confirms the power to modify a child support order of the issuing state, provided it retains a sufficient nexus with its order. UIFSA defines that nexus as any situation in which the child or at least one of the parties continues to reside in the issuing state.

Subsection (c) [(3)] directs tribunals of the enacting state to adhere to the one-order-at-a-time system.

OPINIONS UNDER FORMER LAW (URESA)

Registration and Enforcement by County Attorney: The County Attorney shall represent an obligee in registration and enforcement of a foreign support order under the Revised Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (1968) (replaced by UIFSA) when so requested pursuant to 40-5-139. 40 A.G. Op. 72 (1984).

40-5-151. Recognition of child support orders.

Official Comments

This section establishes a priority scheme for recognition and enforcement of existing multiple orders regarding the same obligor, obligee or obligees, and the same child. Even assuming universal enactment of UIFSA, many years will pass before its one-order system will be completely in place. Part C [Sections 40-5-151 and 40-5-152] is designed to span the gulf between the one-order system and the multiple order system in place under URESA. If only one order has been issued, it is to be treated as if it had been issued under UIFSA if it was issued under a statute which is consistent with the principles of UIFSA. But, multiple orders issued under URESA number in the tens of thousands; it can be reasonably anticipated that those orders, covering the same parties and child, will continue in effect far into the future.

Assuming multiple orders exist, none of which can be distinguished as being in conflict with the principles of UIFSA, an order issued by a tribunal of the child's home state is given the higher priority. If more than one of these orders exists, priority is given to the order most recently issued. If none of the priorities apply, the forum tribunal is directed to issue a new order. Note, however, that multiple orders issued by different states may be entitled to full faith and credit. While this section cannot and does not attempt to interfere with that constitutional directive with regard to accrued arrearages, it may and does establish a system for prospective enforcement of competing orders.

40-5-152. Multiple child support orders for two or more obligees.

Official Comments

Multiple orders may involve two or more families of the same obligor. Although all such orders are entitled to future enforcement, practical difficulties are often presented. For example, full enforcement of all orders may exceed the maximum allowed for income withholding, i.e., the federal statute, 42 U.S.C. 666(b)(1), requires that states cap the maximum to be withheld in accordance with the federal consumer credit code limitations on wage garnishment, 15 U.S.C. 1673(b). In order to allocate resources between competing families, the Act refers to state law. The basic principle is that one or more foreign orders for the support of the obligor's families are of equal dignity and should be treated as if all of the multiple orders had been issued by a tribunal of the forum state.

40-5-153. Grounds for rendition.

Official Comments

This section tracks RURESA §5 [40-5-106, renumbered 40-5-153] (Interstate Rendition) with no substantive change. Virtually no controversy has been generated regarding this portion of RURESA. Arguably application of subsection (c) [(2)] is problematical in situations in which the obligor neither was present in the demanding state at the time of the commission of the crime nor fled from the demanding state. The possibility that an individual may commit a crime in a state without ever being physically present there has elicited considerable discussion and some case law. See L. Brilmayer, "An Introduction to Jurisdiction in the American Federal System," 329-335 (1986) (discussing minimum contacts theory for criminal jurisdiction); Rotenberg, "Extraterritorial Legislative Jurisdiction and the State Criminal Law," 38 Tex. 40-5-158. Proceedings under this part.

Official Comments

This section is a "road map" of the types of actions authorized by UIFSA. Although such a section may be unusual for a uniform act, it is especially justified in this instance because the majority of those persons administering the Act are not attorneys and will doubtless find such assistance to be useful.

Subsection (a) [(1)] mandates application of the general provisions of this article to all UIFSA actions.

Generally, subsection (b) [(2)] identifies the fact that orders for spousal support and child support are to be dealt with identically under the Act. However, subsection (b)(5) [(2)(e)] announces that the modification provisions are limited to child support orders; the Act does not provide for a second state to modify a spousal support order.

Subsection (c) [(4)] establishes the basic two-state procedure contemplated by the Act. The initiating responding procedure is derived from the two-state procedure under RURESA; the direct filing by either an individual or a support enforcement agency is new to this Act.

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW (URESA)

Earnings Exempt From Execution on Unpaid Alimony Judgment: Section 25-13-614, exempting earnings of a judgment debtor from execution, does not differentiate between different types of judgments, plainly provides an exemption of earnings against execution regardless of the nature of the underlying claim, and the Supreme Court cannot insert an exception for delinquent alimony payment judgments. Earnings are exempt from execution on a judgment for unpaid alimony, and though an alimony claim is not strictly a debt, when reduced to judgment it becomes merged in the judgment, loses its underlying character, and the judgment creates a debt the same as any other money judgment. White v. White, 195 M 470, 636 P2d 844, 38 St. Rep. 2041 (1981) (case of first impression).

Inaction by State as Voluntary Waiver: Where wife initiated proceedings under Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (URESA) (replaced by UIFSA) and claim was settled by agreement with former husband, it was error to allow state to recover claim, as this section only gives state right to initiate or join in URESA proceedings initiated by individual obligee but not an action against individual obligee over sums recovered. Since state did not choose to initiate or join in proceedings, it voluntarily waived rights granted under this section. St. v. Hultgren, 168 M 257, 541 P2d 1211 (1975).

Official Comments

Historically states have insisted on application of forum law to support cases whenever possible. A key principle of UIFSA is that a tribunal will have the same powers in an action involving interstate parties as it has in an intrastate case. This inevitably means that the Act is not self-contained; rather, it is supplemented by the support law of the forum. To insure the efficient processing of the huge number of interstate support cases, it is vital that decision-makers apply familiar rules of substantive and procedural law to those cases.

40-5-161. Duties of initiating tribunal.

Under RURESA §14 [this section prior to 1993 amendment], the initiating tribunal is required to make a preliminary finding of the existence of a support obligation, but in fact, observance of this obligation is erratic across the nation. Under UIFSA, by contrast, the role of the initiating tribunal consists merely of the ministerial function of forwarding the documents. See Mossburg v. Coffman, 6 Kan. App. 2d 428, 629 P.2d 745 (1981); Neff v. Johnson, 391 S.W.2d 760 (Tex. Civ. App. 1965).

Certification shall be in accordance with the requirements of the initiating state. If the name and address of the responding court is unknown and the responding state has an information agency comparable to that established in the initiating state, it shall cause the copies to be sent to the state information agency or other proper official of the responding state, with a request that the agency or official forward them to the proper court and that the court of the responding state acknowledge their receipt to the initiating court."

This section revises RURESA §§9 [40-5-110, now repealed], 18 [40-5-119, renumbered 40-5-166], 19 [40-5-120, now repealed], 24 [40-5-125, now repealed], 25 [40-5-126, now repealed], and 26 [40-5-127, now repealed]. It contains both mechanical functions, such as those in subsection (a) [(1)]; judicial functions, as in subsection (b) [(2)], and substantive rules applicable to interstate cases, subsections (c)-(e) [(3) through (5)]. For example, subsection (b) [(2)] supplies much more detail than RURESA §§24 [40-5-125, now repealed] and 26 [40-5-127, now repealed] to make explicit the wide range of specific powers of the responding tribunal. Because a responding tribunal may be an administrative agency rather than a court, the Act explicitly states that a tribunal is not granted powers that it does not otherwise possess under state law. For example, often authority to enforce orders by contempt is limited to courts.

Subsection (b)(7) [(2)(g)] purposefully avoids mention of the priority of liens issued under UIFSA. As is generally true under the Act, that priority will be determined by the otherwise applicable state law concerning support liens.

Subsection (b)(9) [(2)(i)] replaces RURESA §16 [40-5-117, now repealed] (Jurisdiction By Arrest), which authorizes the responding tribunal "to obtain the body of the obligor" if the tribunal "believes that the obligor may flee ...." Under UIFSA, the physical seizure of an obligor is left to the procedures available under state law in other civil cases.

Subsection (c) [(3)] clarifies that calculation sheets are to be included with the order in conjunction with the application of support guidelines. Local law generally requires that variation from the child support guidelines must be explained, see 42 U.S.C. §667; this requirement is extended to all interstate cases.

Under subsection (d) [(4)], an interstate support order may not be conditioned on compliance with a visitation order. While this may be at variance from state law governing intrastate cases, under a UIFSA action the petitioner generally is not present in the tribunal. This distinction justifies prohibiting visitation issues from being litigated in the context of a support proceeding.

Subsection (e) [(5)] introduces the policy determination that the petitioner, the respondent, and the initiating tribunal, if any, shall be kept informed about actions taken by the responding tribunal. First class mail is sufficient for this purpose.

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW (URESA)

No Equitable Modification of Child Support Decree Upon Agreement of Parties: Wife and husband were divorced after several years of marriage, and the District Court awarded custody of the couple's two children to the wife, with visitation awarded to the husband. The wife remarried a year later and shortly thereafter moved to Nebraska. At all times, the wife kept the Missoula County Attorney's Office informed of her whereabouts and brought a URESA (replaced by UIFSA) action against her former husband for back child support. Husband made few attempts to contact his children, even though he knew where they were living. Wife's new husband later adopted the children, and wife sought back child support for those payments up until the time the children were adopted, which payments the District Court awarded. The Supreme Court distinguished the case from State ex rel. Blakeslee v. Horton, 222 M 351, 722 P2d 1148 (1986), stating that there was no implicit agreement between the parties for one parent to give up child support in exchange for the other parent giving up visitation. Wife always sought to enforce her right to child support and made no attempt to discourage her former husband from exercising his right to visitation. Husband gave up visitation on his own, but the right to visitation is legally separate and distinct from the husband's enforceable duty to provide child support pursuant to the District Court's previous decree. In re Marriage of Bronzynski, 246 M 200, 806 P2d 8, 47 St. Rep. 1853 (1990).

Equity to Override Legally Correct Claim: The parties were divorced in 1970, and the father was ordered to pay $50 a month in child support through the Clerk of Court. No payments were ever made, and no visitation was ever sought. In 1984, the mother filed a URESA (replaced by UIFSA) action for back support. In defending the action, the father contended that the mother took the position that if he would stay out of her life and the child's life, they would stay out of his. He had no contact with either party during the ensuing 14 years. The District Court denied enforcement of the petition for child support. The Supreme Court on appeal upheld the District Court. Recognizing that the law is clear that an arrearage in child support payment cannot be modified on any retroactive basis and that child support and child visitation are separate incidents, neither being dependent or conditioned upon the other, the court found these legal principles rendered impotent when the parties mutually agreed that they be ignored and carried out the agreement in fact for 14 years. The court stated that equity could not allow the mother to participate in nullification of the purpose of the law in fact and, at the same time, allow her to claim the benefit of it in theory simply because there was a meter running which could total a dollar loss in child support but nothing to total the loss of a father-son association. The court stated that the principles of equity applied in this case did not reverse or modify any previous case law. State of Wash. ex rel. Blakeslee v. Horton, 222 M 351, 722 P2d 1148, 43 St. Rep. 1321 (1986), distinguished in In re Marriage of Bronzynski, 246 M 200, 806 P2d 8, 47 St. Rep. 1853 (1990).

Child Support Action — Affidavit of Officer of State Seeking Reimbursement: In North Dakota's action for a declaration of paternity and to obtain child support, it was proper to exclude the affidavit of a North Dakota welfare administrator setting forth what North Dakota had paid for public assistance to the mother, the child's medical costs, and blood tests to establish paternity, for which North Dakota sought reimbursement. The affidavit was hearsay, was made by a person not available for cross-examination, and did not fit within any of the hearsay exceptions. However, under 40-5-121 (now repealed) the welfare administrator's deposition as to his state's pleaded costs could be taken and the case was remanded to allow a deposition to be taken. Because North Dakota did not plead its expenditures for the child's medical costs, they could not be recovered and the deposition could not cover those costs. State of N. Dak. ex rel. B.J.D. v. S.P.R., 219 M 26, 710 P2d 702, 42 St. Rep. 1817 (1985).

District Court Adjudicating Action — No Authority to Modify Original Support Order: Even though the URESA (replaced by UIFSA) responding court and the court that issued the original child support order are the same, a request for modification of the divorce decree is separate from an enforcement action. State of Oregon ex rel. Worden v. Drinkwalter, 216 M 9, 700 P2d 150, 42 St. Rep. 599 (1985).

Evidence of Emancipation of Minor Child: When evidence in a URESA (replaced by UIFSA) action indicated that the minor child lived away from the obligee but was not earning enough money to support herself, the District Court's determination that the minor child was not emancipated was not clearly erroneous. State of Oregon ex rel. Worden v. Drinkwalter, 216 M 9, 700 P2d 150, 42 St. Rep. 599 (1985).

Payments Made Directly to Children: The obligation to pay child support is not discharged by payment to the children themselves when the support order directs that payment be made to the children's mother. State of Oregon ex rel. Worden v. Drinkwalter, 216 M 9, 700 P2d 150, 42 St. Rep. 599 (1985).

Scope of Responding Court's Authority — Undetermined: Because it was unnecessary in this action, the Supreme Court refused to decide whether to follow the majority rule that a URESA (replaced by UIFSA) responding court may make an independent review of the duty and amount of support due from an alleged obligor, or to follow the minority rule that the responding court is limited to examining the foreign court's order to see if it, on its face, states that the alleged obligor has a duty to support. State of Oregon ex rel. Worden v. Drinkwalter, 216 M 9, 700 P2d 150, 42 St. Rep. 599 (1985).

Obligation to Support Independent of Visitation Rights: A child's right to support and the parent's support obligation are not affected by misconduct of the parent or violations of visitation provisions of a custody decree. The District Court therefore was in error in making the enforcement of the child support payments, under a Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (URESA) (replaced by UIFSA) action, contingent upon visitation compliance by the custodial parent. State ex rel. Dewyea v. Knapp, 208 M 19, 674 P2d 1104, 41 St. Rep. 143 (1984), affirmed in In re Adoption of K.L.J.K., 224 M 418, 730 P2d 1135, 43 St. Rep. 2297 (1986).

Superseding Order: Nevada child support award was not modified by child support order of Idaho court entered at time the Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (replaced by UIFSA) in effect in Idaho specifically provided that no order of support issued by court of that state, when acting as responding state, should supersede any other order of support. Campbell v. Jenne, 172 M 219, 563 P2d 574 (1977).

Subsequent Order: Nevada child support award was not modified by child support order of Montana court. The Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (replaced by UIFSA) provided that support order entered by Montana court did not nullify support order made by court of any other state, unless specifically provided for. In absence of Montana support order referring to Nevada support award, the Nevada award was not modified. Campbell v. Jenne, 172 M 219, 563 P2d 574 (1977).

Order to Refer to Prior Orders: Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (replaced by UIFSA) court orders that do not refer to prior support awards do not modify them. Campbell v. Jenne, 172 M 219, 563 P2d 574 (1977).

County Attorney Not Authorized to Compromise Support Order on Behalf of Obligee: A County Attorney, in carrying out his responsibility under URESA (replaced by UIFSA) to represent obligees, may not enter into an agreement with an obligor or his agent to compromise a support order or to allow the sale of property on which a support order is a lien, since under 40-4-208 a support order may only be modified by a court. Further, 40-4-208 provides that a modification of a court support decree may affect only amounts that accrue subsequent to the motion for modification. 41 A.G. Op. 7 (1985).

Official Comments

This section directs a tribunal that receives UIFSA documents in error to forward them to the appropriate tribunal, whether located in the enacting state or elsewhere. This section is intended to apply both to initiating and responding tribunals which receive petitions which should be sent to other tribunals. Thus, if a tribunal is inappropriately designated as the initiating tribunal it shall forward the petition to the appropriate initiating tribunal either in the enacting state or elsewhere. Likewise, if a tribunal is inappropriate as the responding tribunal it shall forward the petition to the appropriate responding tribunal either in the enacting state or elsewhere.

40-5-164. Duties of support enforcement agency.

Official Comments

This section is derived from RURESA §§12 [40-5-113, now repealed], 18 [40-5-119, renumbered 40-5-166], and 19 [40-5-120, now repealed].

Subsection (a) [(1)] changes the focus of RURESA §12 [40-5-113, now repealed] (Officials to Represent Obligee) from representation of an obligee to providing services to a [petitioner]. Care should be exercised in the use of terminology given this substantial alteration of past practice under RURESA. Not only may either the obligee or the obligor request services, but that request may be in the context of the establishment of an order, enforcement or review of an existing order, or a modification of that order (upwards or downwards). Thus, those states that use the term "petitioner" to refer to the "plaintiff" or "complainant" in the original caption of the case may wish to substitute the term "movant" in proceedings initiated after the establishment of a support order.

Subsection (b) [(2)] responds to the complaint of many RURESA petitioners that they are not properly kept informed about the progress of their requests for services.

Subsection (c) [(3)] neither creates nor rejects the establishment of an attorney-client or fiduciary relationship between the support enforcement agency and a petitioner receiving services from that agency. This controversial issue is left to otherwise applicable state law.

40-5-165. Duties of state information agency.

Official Comments

This section, based on RURESA §17 [40-5-118, renumbered 40-5-165] (State Information Agency), continues the information-gathering duties of the central agency.

Subsection (b)(4) [(2)(d)] does not provide independent access to the information sources or to the governmental documents listed. Because states have different requirements and limitations concerning such access based on differing views of the privacy interests of individual citizens, the agency is directed to use all lawful means under the relevant state law to obtain and disseminate information.

(2) It shall:

(a) compile a list of the courts and their addresses in this state having jurisdiction under this part and transmit it to the state information agency of every other state which has adopted this or a substantially similar law. He shall take all action necessary in accordance with the laws of this state to enable the court to obtain jurisdiction over the obligor or his property and shall request the court to set a time and place for a hearing and give notice thereof to the obligor in accordance with law.

The right of a party to retain private counsel in an action to be brought under UIFSA is explicitly recognized. RURESA's failure to clearly recognize that power has led to some confusion and inconsistent decisions.

40-5-171. Pleadings and accompanying documents.

Official Comments

This section is derived from RURESA §11 [40-5-112, now repealed]; it establishes the basic requirements for the drafting and filing of interstate pleadings and should be read in conjunction with §312 [40-5-172], which provides for the confidentiality of certain information if disclosure is likely to result in harm to a party or a child.

Subsection (b) [(2)] provides authorization for the use of the federally authorized forms promulgated in connection with the IV-D child support enforcement program and mandates substantial compliance with those forms. Although the use of other forms is not prohibited, statutory preapproval of forms that substantially conform to those mandated by federal law will help to standardize documents, with a concomitant improvement in the efficient processing of UIFSA actions.

40-5-172. Nondisclosure of information in exceptional circumstances.

Official Comments

Public awareness of and sensitivity to the dangers of domestic violence has significantly increased since the promulgation of RURESA. This section authorizes confidentiality in instances where there is a serious risk of domestic violence or child abduction. Although local law generally governs the conduct of the forum tribunal, state law may not provide for maintaining secrecy about the exact whereabouts of a litigant or other information ordinarily required to be disclosed under state law, e.g., Social Security number of the parties or the child. If so, this provision creates a confidentiality provision which is particularly appropriate in the light of the intractable problems associated with interstate (as opposed to intrastate) childnapping.

40-5-173. Costs and fees.

Official Comments

This section is derived from RURESA §15 [40-5-116, now repealed] (Costs and Fees), which authorizes fees and costs to be assessed against "the obligor." In recognition of the fact that under UIFSA either the obligor or the obligee may file suit, subsection (a) [(1)] permits either to file without payment of a filing fee or other costs. Subsection (b) [(2)], however, continues the RURESA rule that only the support obligor may be assessed the specified costs and fees.

Subsection (c) [(3)] provides a sanction to deal with a frivolous contest regarding compliance with an interstate withholding order, registration of a support order, or comparable delaying tactics regarding an appropriate enforcement remedy.

Case Notes

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW (URESA)

Child Support Action — Affidavit of Officer of State Seeking Reimbursement: In North Dakota's action for a declaration of paternity and to obtain child support, it was proper to exclude the affidavit of a North Dakota welfare administrator setting forth what North Dakota had paid for public assistance to the mother, the child's medical costs, and blood tests to establish paternity, for which North Dakota sought reimbursement. The affidavit was hearsay, was made by a person not available for cross-examination, and did not fit within any of the hearsay exceptions. However, under 40-5-121 (now repealed) the welfare administrator's deposition as to his state's pleaded costs could be taken and the case was remanded to allow a deposition to be taken. Because North Dakota did not plead its expenditures for the child's medical costs, they could not be recovered and the deposition could not cover those costs. State of N. Dak. ex rel. B.J.D. v. S.P.R., 219 M 26, 710 P2d 702, 42 St. Rep. 1817 (1985).

Denial of Costs and Attorney Fees for Claimed Frivolous Appeal: In North Dakota's action for a declaration of paternity and to obtain child support, the lower court excluded a North Dakota welfare official's affidavit as to his state's costs. Plaintiff appealed the exclusion, and defendant claimed on appeal that the lower court's disallowance of unpleaded expenses was proper. The Supreme Court held for plaintiff but remanded to allow the official's deposition to be taken on the support expenses of North Dakota. Defendant's argument that he should be awarded attorney fees and costs because the appeal was frivolous was totally without merit. State of N. Dak. ex rel. B.J.D. v. S.P.R., 219 M 26, 710 P2d 702, 42 St. Rep. 1817 (1985).

40-5-174. Nonparentage as defense — limitation.

Official Comments

Arguably this section does no more than restate the basic principle of res judicata. However, a great variety of state laws exists regarding presumptions of parentage and available defenses after a prior determination of parentage. This section is intended neither to discourage nor encourage collateral attacks in situations in which the law of a foreign jurisdiction is at significant odds with local law. For example, this section mandates that a parentage decree rendered by another tribunal is not subject to collateral attack in a UIFSA proceeding except on a fundamental constitutional ground such as lack of jurisdiction over a party or a comparable denial of due process in the previous proceeding. If a collateral attack is permissible on a parentage decree under the law of the issuing jurisdiction, such an action must be pursued in the appropriate forum and not in the UIFSA proceeding.

Similarly, the law of the issuing state may provide for a determination of parentage based on certain specific acts of the obligor acknowledging parentage as a substitute for a decree, e.g., signing the child's birth certificate or publicly acknowledging a duty of support after receiving the child into his home. The Act also is neutral regarding a collateral attack on such a parentage determination; the responding tribunal must give the same effect to such an act of acknowledgment of parentage as it would receive in the issuing state. The consistent theme of this section is that a collateral attack cannot be made in a UIFSA proceeding.

40-5-175. Special rules of evidence and procedure.

Official Comments

This section combines RURESA §§9 [40-5-110, now repealed], 19 [40-5-120, now repealed], 21 [40-5-122, now repealed], 22 [40-5-123, now repealed], and 23 [40-5-124, now repealed]; and, provides additional innovative methods for gathering evidence in interstate cases.

Subsections (b) through (f) [(2) through (6)] greatly expand on RURESA §23 [40-5-124, now repealed] (Rules of Evidence). The intent is to eliminate as many potential hearsay problems as possible in interstate litigation because usually the out-of-state party and that party's witnesses do not appear in person at the hearing.

Subsection (d) [(4)] provides a simplified means for proving health care expenses related to the birth of the child. Because ordinarily these charges are not in dispute, this is designed to obviate the cost of having health care providers appear in person or of obtaining affidavits of business records from each provider.

Subsections (e) [(5)] and (f) [(6)] encourage tribunals and litigants to take advantage of modern methods of communication in interstate support litigation.

Subsection (g) [(7)] codifies the rule in effect in many states that in civil litigation an adverse inference may be drawn from a litigant's silence. See, e.g., In re Matter of Joseph P., 487 N.Y.S.2d 685 (Fam. Ct. 1985); Pa. Cons. Stats. Ann., Tit. 23, §5104(c) (1991) (if "any party refuses to submit to the tests, the court may resolve the question of paternity, parentage or identity of a child against the party...."); 9 N.J. Stats. Ann. 17-51(d) (1991) ("refusal to submit to blood tests or genetic tests, or both, may be admitted into evidence and shall give rise to the presumption that the results of the tests would have been unfavorable to the interests of the party refusing"); La. Rev. Stats., Tit. 9, §396(A) (1992) ("if any party refuses to submit to such tests, the court may resolve the question of paternity against such party....").

Official Comments

This section is derived from UCCJA 7(d) [40-7-108(4)] (Inconvenient Forum), which authorizes communications between courts in order to facilitate determination under that Act. Much broader cooperation between tribunals is permitted under this Act to expedite establishment and enforcement of the support order of either the forum or of the sister state.

Official Comments

This section takes another logical step to facilitate interstate cooperation by enlisting the power of the forum to assist a tribunal of another state with the discovery process. 40-5-179. Petition to establish support order.

Official Comments

This section authorizes a tribunal of the responding state to issue temporary and permanent support orders binding on an obligor over whom the tribunal has personal jurisdiction. It should be emphasized that UIFSA does not permit such orders to be issued when another support order exists and another tribunal has continuing, exclusive jurisdiction over the matter. See §205 [40-5-149] (Continuing, Exclusive Jurisdiction) and §206 [40-5-150] (Enforcement and Modification of Support Order by Tribunal Having Continuing Jurisdiction).

40-5-180. Administrative enforcement of orders.

Official Comments

This section authorizes summary enforcement of a sister state child support order through any administrative means available for local orders. Under subsection (a) [(1)], any interested party in another state, necessarily including a private attorney or a support enforcement agency, may forward a support order or income-withholding order to a support enforcement agency of the enacting state.

Subsection (b) [(2)] directs the support enforcement agency in the enacting state to employ the enacting state's regular administrative procedures to process the out-of-state order. Thus, a local employer accustomed to dealing with the local agency need not learn a new procedure in order to comply with an out-of-state order.

40-5-183. Limited immunity of petitioner.

Official Comments

This section significantly expands RURESA §32 [40-5-133, renumbered 40-5-183]. Under subsection (a) [(1)], direct or indirect participation in a UIFSA proceeding does not subject a petitioner to an assertion of personal jurisdiction over the petitioner by the forum state in other litigation between the parties. A petition for affirmative relief under UIFSA limits the jurisdiction of the tribunal to the boundaries of the support proceeding.

Similarly, subsection (b) [(2)] grants a litigant immunity from service of process during the time a party is physically present in a state for a UIFSA action. The immunity provided is limited, however, and is not comparable to diplomatic immunity. This is clear from reading subsection (c) [(3)] in conjunction with the other subsections; subsection (c) [(3)] withholds immunity from civil litigation unrelated to the support action stemming from contemporaneous acts committed by a party while present in the state for the support litigation. For example, if a petitioner is involved in an automobile accident or a contract dispute over the cost of lodging while present in the state, the immunity provided by this section is inapplicable.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 328 substituted language concerning limited immunity of petitioner for former section that read: "Participation in any proceeding under this part does not confer jurisdiction upon any court over any of the parties thereto in any other proceeding."

40-5-184. Registration of order for enforcement.

Official Comments

Part A of Article 6 [Sections 40-5-184 through 40-5-187] greatly expands the procedure for the registration of foreign support orders available under RURESA §§35-40 [40-5-136, now repealed; 40-5-137, renumbered 40-5-184; 40-5-138, now repealed; 40-5-139, now repealed; 40-5-140, renumbered 40-5-185; and 40-5-141, renumbered 40-5-186]. The common practice of initiating a new suit for the establishment of a support order irrespective of the fact that there is an existing order for support will become obsolete under UIFSA. The fact that RURESA permits (really encourages) initiation of a new suit in those circumstances led to the multiple support order system that UIFSA is designed to eliminate.

Under the one-order system of UIFSA, the only existing order is to be enforced. Registration of that order in the responding state is the first step to enforcement by a tribunal of that state. Rather than being an optional device as is the case under RURESA, registration for enforcement under UIFSA is the primary method for interstate enforcement by a tribunal. If a prior support order has been validly issued, only that order is to be enforced against the obligor in the absence of very narrow strictly defined fact situations in which an existing order may be modified. See §§609 through 612 [40-5-192 through 40-5-195]. Additionally, until that order is modified, it is fully enforceable in the responding state.

Registration should be employed if the purpose is enforcement. Although registration not accompanied by a request for affirmative relief is not prohibited, the Act does not contemplate registration as serving a purpose in itself.

40-5-185. Procedure to register order for enforcement.

Official Comments

This section outlines the mechanics for registration of a sister state order. Subsection (c) [(3)] warns that if a particular enforcement remedy must be specifically sought under local law, the same is required in interstate cases. However, the authorization of a later request contemplates that interstate pleadings may be liberally amended to conform to local practice.

(a) three certified copies of the order with all modifications thereof;

(b) one copy of the reciprocal enforcement of support act of the state in which the order was made; and

(c) a statement, verified and signed by the obligee, showing the post-office address of the obligee, the last known place of residence and post-office address of the obligor, the amount of support remaining unpaid, a description and the location of any property of the obligor available upon execution, and a list of the states in which the order is registered.

(2) Upon receipt of these documents the clerk of the court, without payment of a filing fee or other cost to the obligee, shall file them in the registry of foreign support orders. The filing constitutes registration under this part.

(3) Promptly upon registration the clerk of the court shall send by certified or registered mail to the obligor at the address given a notice of the registration with a copy of the registered support order and the post-office address of the obligee. He shall also docket the case and notify the prosecuting attorney of his action. The prosecuting attorney shall proceed diligently to enforce the order."

40-5-186. Effect of registration enforcement.

Official Comments

Subsection (a) [(1)] is derived from RURESA §39(a) [40-5-140(2), renumbered 40-5-185], which states that "filing constitutes registration ...." Although the registration procedure under UIFSA is nearly identical to that of RURESA, the underlying intent of registration is radically different. Under RURESA, once an order of State A is registered in State B, it becomes an order of the latter. Under UIFSA, the order continues to be a State A order, which is to be enforced by a tribunal of State B. Although State B's rules of evidence and procedure apply, except as supplemented or specifically superseded by the Act, the order itself remains subject to the continuing, exclusive jurisdiction of State A so long as the requirements for that authority set forth in Section 205 [40-5-149] remain intact.

Subsection (b) [(2)] is derived from RURESA §40(a) [40-5-141(1), renumbered 40-5-186]. Although RURESA specifically subjects a registered order to "proceedings for reopening, vacating, or staying as a support order of this State," these remedies are not authorized under UIFSA. While a foreign support order is to be enforced and satisfied in the same manner as if it had been issued by a tribunal of the registering state, the order to be enforced remains an order of the issuing state. Conceptually, the responding state is enforcing the order of another state, not its own order. Any request for relief that requires application of the continuing, exclusive jurisdiction of the issuing tribunal must be sought in the issuing forum.

Subsection (c) [(3)] mandates enforcement of the registered order. See §§606 through 608 [40-5-189 through 40-5-191]. This is at sharp variance with the RURESA §40 [40-5-141, renumbered 40-5-186] practice, which states that "the registered foreign support order shall be treated in the same manner as a support order issued by a court of this State." This language was generally interpreted as converting the foreign order into an order of the registering state. Once the registering court concludes that it is enforcing its own order, the next logical step is the conclusion that the order may be modified, which results in another version of the multiple order system. UIFSA mandates an end to this process, except as modification is authorized in this article, see §§609 through 612 [40-5-192 through 40-5-195].

Because under UIFSA there is only one order in existence at any one time, that order is enforceable in a responding state irrespective of whether such an order might be modified. That is, if neither the child nor the parties continue to reside in the issuing state, the issuing tribunal loses its continuing, exclusive jurisdiction over its child support order. Nonetheless, the order continues to be fully enforceable until the potential for modification actually occurs in accordance with the strict terms for such an action as set forth in Part C of this article, §§609-612 [40-5-192 through 40-5-195].

1993 Amendment: Chapter 328 substituted language concerning effect of registration for former section that read: "(1) Upon registration the registered foreign support order shall be treated in the same manner as a support order issued by a court of this state. It has the same effect and is subject to the same procedures, defenses, and proceedings for reopening, vacating, or staying as a support order of this state and may be enforced and satisfied in like manner.

(2) The obligor has 20 days after the mailing of notice of the registration in which to petition the court to vacate the registration or for other relief. If he does not so petition, the registered support order is confirmed.

(3) At the hearing to enforce the registered support order, the obligor may present only matters that would be available to him as defenses in an action to enforce a foreign money judgment. If he shows to the court that an appeal from the order is pending or will be taken or that a stay of execution has been granted, the court shall stay enforcement of the order until the appeal is concluded, the time for appeal has expired, or the order is vacated, upon satisfactory proof that the obligor has furnished security for payment of the support ordered as required by the rendering state. If he shows to the court any ground upon which enforcement of a support order of this state may be stayed, the court shall stay enforcement of the order for an appropriate period if the obligor furnishes the same security for payment of the support ordered that is required for a support order of this state."

40-5-187. Choice of law.

This section identifies situations in which local law is inapplicable. For example, under subsection (a) [(1)] an order for the support of a child until age 21 must be recognized and enforced in that manner in a state in which the duty of support of a child ends at age 18. See Gonzalez-Goengaga v. Gonzalez, 426 So.2d 1106 (Fla. App. 1983); Taylor v. Taylor, 122 Cal. App. 3d 209, 175 Cal. Rptr. 716 (1981).

Subsection (b) [(2)] contains a similar choice of law provision that may diverge from local law. Whichever state's statute of limitations is longer is to be applied. In interstate cases arrearages will often have accumulated over a considerable period of time before enforcement is perfected.

The obligor should not gain an undue benefit from the choice of residence if the forum state has a short statute of limitations for arrearages.

40-5-188. Notice of registration of order.

Official Comments

Part B of Article 6 [Sections 40-5-188 through 40-5-191] provides the procedure for the nonregistering party to contest registration of an order, either because the order is allegedly invalid, superseded, or no longer in effect, or because the enforcement remedy being sought is opposed by the nonregistering party.

This section provides that the nonregistering party must be fully informed of the effect of registration. After such notice is given, absent a successful contest by the nonregistering party, the order will be confirmed and future contest will be precluded.

40-5-189. Procedure to contest validity or enforcement of registered order.

Official Comments

Subsection (a) [(1)] is derived in part from RURESA §40(b) [40-5-141(2), renumbered 40-5-186], under which the "obligor" is directed to contest the registration of a foreign order within a short period of time. This procedure is continued, but the terminology is changed to "nonregistering party" because either the obligor or the obligee may seek to register a foreign support order. Moreover, the subsection is philosophically very different from RURESA §40 [40-5-141, renumbered 40-5-186], which directs that a registered order "shall be treated in the same manner as a support order issued by a court of this state." A contest of the fundamental provisions of the registered order is not permitted "in this State." The nonregistering party must return to the issuing state to prosecute such a contest, and then only as the law of that state permits. The procedure adopted here is akin to the prohibition of the nonparentage defense found in Section 315 [40-5-174]; that is, raising the issue in a UIFSA proceeding is prohibited, but no attempt is made to preclude the issue from being litigated in another, more appropriate forum if otherwise allowable by that forum. On the other hand, the respondent may assert defenses such as "payment" or "the obligation has terminated" to allegations of past noncompliance with the registered order. Similarly, a constitutionally-based attack may always be asserted, i.e., an alleged lack of personal jurisdiction over a party by the issuing tribunal. There is no defense, however, to the registration of a valid foreign support order.

Subsection (b) [(2)] precludes an untimely contest of a registered support order. As noted above, the nonregistering party is free to seek redress in the issuing state from the tribunal with continuing, exclusive jurisdiction over the support order.

Subsection (c) [(3)] directs that a hearing be scheduled when the nonregistering party contests some aspect of the registration. At present, federal regulations govern the allowable time frames for contesting income withholding in IV-D cases. See 42 U.S.C. §666(b). Further codification of that process is unwise.

(See coordination instruction comment.) Amendment effective May 2, 1997.

Chapter 552 in (3) deleted requirement that notice be by first-class mail. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Coordination Instruction: Section 100, Ch. 552, L. 1997, a coordination section, deleted the amendment in (1), inserting the fourth sentence, that read: "At the request of a party or upon a showing that the party's case was substantially prejudiced by the lack of an in-person hearing, the department shall, following a teleconferencing hearing, grant a de novo in-person hearing."

40-5-190. Contest of registration or enforcement.

Official Comments

Subsection (a) [(1)] places the burden on the nonregistering party to assert narrowly defined defenses to registration of a support order.

If the obligor is liable for current support, under subsection (b) [(2)] the tribunal must enter an order to enforce that obligation. Proof of arrearages must result in enforcement; under the Bradley Amendment, 42 U.S.C. §666(a)(10), all states are required to treat child support payments as final judgments as they come due (or lose federal funding). Therefore, such arrearages are not subject to retroactive modification.

40-5-191. Confirmed order.

Official Comments

The policy determination that foreign support orders may need to be confirmed by the forum tribunal is found in URESA §40 [40-5-141, renumbered 40-5-186], but the process of confirmation is not explained. Under UIFSA, confirmation of an order may be the result of operation of law because of a failure to contest or an unsuccessful contest after a hearing. Either method precludes raising any issue that could have been asserted in a hearing. Confirmation of a foreign support order validates both the terms of the order and the asserted arrearages. See Chapman v. Chapman, 205 Cal. App. 3d 253, 252 Cal. Rptr. 359 (1988).

40-5-192. Procedure to register child support order of another state for modification.

Official Comments

Part C of Article 6 [Sections 40-5-192 through 40-5-195] deals with situations in which it is necessary for a registering state to modify the existing child support order of another state. As long as the issuing state maintains its continuing, exclusive jurisdiction over its order, a registering sister state is precluded from modifying that order. This is a very significant departure from the multiple-order, multiple-modification system of RURESA. However, if the issuing state no longer has a sufficient interest in the modification of its order because neither the child nor the parties continue to reside there, under appropriate circumstances a registering state may assume the power to modify. Note that authority to modify is limited to child support orders; the Act does not contemplate modification of spousal support orders.

A petitioner wishing to register a support order of another state for purposes of modification must conform to the general requirements for pleadings in Section 311 [40-5-171] (Pleadings and Accompanying Documents), and follow the procedure for registration set forth in Section 602 [40-5-185] (Procedure To Register Order for Enforcement). If the tribunal has the requisite jurisdiction over the parties as established in §611 [40-5-194], modification may be sought in conjunction with registration and enforcement, or at a later date after the order has been registered, confirmed, and enforced.

40-5-193. Effect of registration for modification.

Official Comments

An order registered for purposes of modification may be enforced in the same manner as an order registered for purposes of enforcement. But, the power of the forum tribunal to modify a child support order of another tribunal is limited by the specific factual preconditions set forth in §611 [40-5-194].

40-5-194. Modification of child support order of another state.

Official Comments

When a foreign support order is enforced in a registering state under UIFSA, the rights of the parties affected have been litigated previously. Because the obligor already has had a day in court, an enforcement remedy may be summarily invoked. On the other hand, modification of an existing order presupposes a change in the rights of the parties. Therefore, even under RURESA more elaborate procedures were required by most states prior to the issuance of a modified order. These requirements are much more explicit and restrictive under UIFSA.

A support order registered under RURESA for the purpose of enforcement is treated as if originally issued by the registering tribunal. Most states have interpreted the RURESA registration provisions as also authorizing prospective modification of the registered order, see, e.g., Lagerwey v. Lagerwey, 681 P.2d 309 (Alaska 1984); In re Marriage of Aron, 224 Cal. App. 3d 1086 (1990); MacFadden v. Martini, 119 Misc. 2d 94, 463 N.Y.S.2d 674 (1983); Pinner v. Pinner, 33 N.C. App. 204, 234 S.E.2d 633 (1977). In sum, by its terms RURESA contemplates existence of multiple support orders, none of which is directly related to any of the others. Although the issuing tribunal under RURESA retains continuing jurisdiction to modify its own order, that power is not exclusive. Tribunals in other states often assume jurisdiction to enter new orders or to modify an out-of-state support order.

Under UIFSA a tribunal may modify an existing child support order of another state only if certain quite limited conditions are met. First, the tribunal must have all the prerequisites for the exercise of personal jurisdiction required for rendition of an original support order. Second, one of the restricted fact situations described in subsection (a) [(1)] must be present. This section, which is a counterpart to Section 205(b) [40-5-149(2)] (Continuing, Exclusive Jurisdiction), establishes the conditions under which the continuing jurisdiction of the issuing tribunal is released. The Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act §§12-14 [40-7-113 through 40-7-115, all now repealed] provides general principles for the judicial determination of an appropriate fact situation for subsequent modification of an existing custody order by another court. In contrast, UIFSA establishes a set of "bright line" rules for modification of an existing child support order.

Under UIFSA, registration is subdivided into distinct categories: registration for enforcement, for modification, or both. Subsection (a) [(1)] contemplates modification of an existing child support order only under the limited circumstances described, thus eliminating multiple support orders to the maximum extent possible consistent with the principle of continuing, exclusive jurisdiction that pervades the Act. The continuing, exclusive jurisdiction of the issuing tribunal remains intact so long as one party or the child continue to reside in the issuing state, or unless the parties mutually agree to the contrary. This is also the standard for recognition of sister state custody orders under the federal Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act, 28 U.S.C. §1738A. Once every individual party and the child leave the issuing state, the continuing, exclusive jurisdiction of the tribunal terminates, although the order remains in effect and enforceable until it is modified. If and when the order is modified by a tribunal of another state, the principle of continuing, exclusive jurisdiction is further ratified; the order of the modifying tribunal becomes the operative "only-order-in-effect."

Under subsection (a)(1) [(1)(a)], all persons affected by the initial order must have moved from the issuing state before a tribunal in a new forum may modify. In virtually all cases, the new forum will be the state of residence of either obligor or obligee. Proof of this may be made directly in the forum state; no purpose would be served by requiring the petitioner to return to the original issuing state for a document to confirm the fact that none of the relevant persons still lives there.

Note that subsection (a)(1) [(1)(a)] requires that the petitioner be a nonresident of the forum in which modification is sought and the respondent to be subject to the jurisdiction of that forum. This contemplates that the issuing state has lost continuing, exclusive jurisdiction and that the obligee may seek modification in the obligor's state of residence, or that the obligor may seek a modification in the obligee's state of residence. This restriction attempts to achieve a rough justice between the parties in the majority of cases by preventing a litigant from choosing to seek modification in a local court to the marked disadvantage of the other party. For example, an obligor visiting the children at the residence of the obligee cannot be validly served with citation accompanied by a motion to modify the support order. Even though such personal service of the obligor in the obligee's home state is consistent with the jurisdictional requisites of Burnham v. Superior Court, 495 U.S. 604 (1990), the motion to modify does not fulfill the requirement of being brought by "a [petitioner] who is a nonresident of this State ...." The obligee is required to make that motion in a state other than that of his or her residence which has personal jurisdiction over the obligor. Most typically this will be the state of residence of the obligor. Similarly, fairness requires that an obligee seeking to modify or modify and enforce the existing order in the state of residence of the obligor will not be subject to a cross-motion to modify custody or visitation merely because the issuing state has lost its continuing, exclusive jurisdiction over the support order. The obligor is required to make that motion in a state other than that of his or her residence; most likely, the obligee's state of residence. Finally, note that if both parties have left the issuing state and now reside in the same state, this section is not applicable. Such a fact situation does not present an interstate matter and UIFSA does not apply. Rather, the issuing state has lost its continuing exclusive jurisdiction and the forum state, as the residence of both parties, should apply local law without regard to the interstate Act.

Subsection (a)(2) [(1)(b)] allows the parties to terminate the continuing jurisdiction of the issuing state by agreement even though one of the parties or the child maintains a significant nexus with the issuing state. In contrast to subsection (a)(1) [(1)(a)], this must be initiated and confirmed by the issuing state and a copy of such an agreement must be filed in the issuing tribunal.

Modification of child support under subsections (a)(1) [(1)(a)] and (a)(2) [(1)(b)] is distinct from custody modification under the federal Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act, 42 U.S.C. §1738A, which provides that the court of continuing, exclusive jurisdiction may "decline jurisdiction." Similar provisions are found in the UCCJA, §14 [40-7-115, now repealed]. In those statutes the methodology for the declination of jurisdiction is not spelled out, but rather is left to the discretion of possibly competing courts for case-by-case determination. The privilege of declining jurisdiction, thereby creating the potential for a vacuum, is not authorized under UIFSA. Once an initial child support order is established, at all times thereafter there is an existing order in effect to be enforced. Even if the issuing court no longer has continuing, exclusive jurisdiction, its order remains fully enforceable until a court with modification jurisdiction issues a new order in conformance with this article.

Subsection (b) [(2)] states that if the forum has modification jurisdiction because the issuing state has lost continuing jurisdiction, the proceedings will generally follow local law with regard to modification of child support orders. However, subsection (c) [(3)] prevents the modification of any final, nonmodifiable aspect of the original order. For example, if child support was ordered through age 21 in accordance with the law of the issuing state and the law of the forum state ends the support obligation at 18, modification by the forum tribunal may not affect the duration of the support order to age 21.

Subsection (d) [(4)] provides that upon modification the new order becomes the one-order to be recognized by all UIFSA states, and the issuing tribunal acquires continuing, exclusive jurisdiction.

Finally, subsection (e) [(5)] directs that the original issuing state be notified that it no longer is responsible to exercise its continuing, exclusive jurisdiction.

A tribunal may not modify provisions, such as custody, visitation, or other provisions not related to support" and at end inserted sentence stating that if two or more tribunals have issued support orders for the same obligor and child, the order that controls under 40-5-151 establishes the aspects of the order that are nonmodifiable; inserted (5) regarding jurisdiction if all the parties who are individuals reside in this state and the child does not reside in the issuing state; in introductory clause of (6) substituted "party obtaining" for "tribunal issuing"; in (6)(b) substituted "party" for "modifying tribunal"; inserted (7) stating the sanctions and effect on a party who fails to file a copy of an order; and made minor changes in style. 40-5-195. Recognition of order modified in another state.

Official Comments

Independent support orders relating to the same parties, a hallmark of RURESA, are replaced in UIFSA by deference to the support order of a sister state. This applies not just to the original order, but also to a modified child support order issued by a second state under the standards established by Section 611 [40-5-194] (Modification of Child Support Order of Another State). For the Act to function properly, the original issuing state must recognize and defer to such a modified order, and must regard its prior order as prospectively inoperative. Because the modifying tribunal lacks the authority to direct the original issuing state to release its continuing jurisdiction, each state must recognize this effect by enacting UIFSA.

Power is retained over post-modification by the original issuing tribunal for remedial actions directly connected to its now-modified order. A tribunal may enforce its subsequently modified order for violations of that order which occurred before the modification. Further, aspects of the original order that have become final or are not modifiable may be prospectively enforced by the issuing tribunal. For example, a contractual obligation to provide a college education trust fund for a child may be enforced under the law of the issuing state irrespective of the law of the modifying state.

Official Comments

This article [This section] authorizes a "pure" parentage action in the interstate context, i.e., an action not joined with a claim for support. Either the mother or a man alleging to be the father of a child may bring such an action. More commonly, an action to determine parentage across state lines will also seek to establish a support order under the Act. See §401 [40-5-179] ([Petition] to Establish Support Order).

Parentage actions under UIFSA are to be treated identically to such actions brought in the responding state.

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW (URESA)

Paternity Contested After Adjudication of Marital Dissolution — Relitigation Barred by Collateral Estoppel: When paternity was contested in response to an action to collect past child support payments, the District Court properly ruled that the issue of paternity had previously been adjudicated during the marriage dissolution proceeding and that relitigation of the issue was barred by collateral estoppel. In re Marriage of Holland, 224 M 414, 730 P2d 410, 43 St. Rep. 2293 (1986).

Rebuttal of Paternity Presumption: The issue of paternity in a Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (URESA) (replaced by UIFSA) action must be determined according to the provisions of the Uniform Parentage Act. Failure to rebut the presumption that petitioner's husband was the natural father of the child within 5 years of the child's birth bars a paternity action against a nonpresumed person. Borchers v. McCarter, 181 M 169, 592 P2d 941 (1979), followed, as to the necessity to rebut the presumption in seeking to establish paternity in someone other than the presumed parent, in In re Paternity of Vainio, 284 M 229, 943 P2d 1282, 54 St. Rep. 858 (1997).

Paternity Determination as Final Judgment: A jury verdict determining paternity is an appealable final judgment and, in effect, an action separate from a support determination. Borchers v. McCarter, 181 M 169, 592 P2d 941 (1979).

1989 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 549, L. 1989, provided: "A statement of intent is required for Senate Bill No. 42 [Ch. 549] because it amends several sections within Title 40, chapter 5, part 2, on child support enforcement services. These amendments are proposed to bring state law into compliance with federal law. The department of revenue [now department of public health and human services] is granted an extension of authority to adopt rules in accordance with this bill that conform with federal laws and regulations.

The legislature intends that the department adopt rules that:

(1) reduce aid to families with dependent children (AFDC) [now FAIM financial assistance] expenditures by ensuring that the parent or other person responsible pays for the care, support, or maintenance of a child under the provisions of 40-5-202(1);

(2) ensure child support enforcement services will continue to be provided to families that cease to receive public assistance under AFDC [now FAIM financial assistance], without requiring an application or payment of a fee;

(3) establish the terms and conditions of providing continued services for families no longer receiving public assistance; and

(4) establish procedures for the discontinuance of child support enforcement services when the custodial parent:

(a) ceases or fails to cooperate with the department as provided under 40-5-204; or

(b) takes an action to prejudice the rights of the department under 40-5-202(4) and (5)."

Severability: Section 30, Ch. 612, L. 1979, was a severability clause.

1979 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent adopted with SB 221 (Ch. 612, L. 1979) provided: "A statement of intent is required for Senate Bill 221 inasmuch as rulemaking authority is granted to the Department of Revenue [now Department of Public Health and Human Services].

Senate Bill 221 establishes administrative procedures to facilitate the enforcement of support for dependent children. These procedures provide the Department of Revenue [now Department of Public Health and Human Services] with more effective and efficient procedures to ensure that dependent children are supported by those persons who under the law are primarily responsible for such support.

To enable the Department of Revenue [now Department of Public Health and Human Services] to achieve the objectives of SB 221 rulemaking authority is granted as follows:

1. In general the Department of Revenue [now Department of Public Health and Human Services] is authorized to "adopt and enforce such rules as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of [this act]". SB 221, section 2(9).

2. To limit the responsibility of the Department of Revenue [now Department of Public Health and Human Services] to accept applications for support enforcement services on behalf of persons who are not recipients of public assistance. SB 221, sections 1 and 2.

3. To establish reasonable fees for support enforcement services provided to persons who are not recipients of public assistance. SB 221, section 3.

4. To adopt rules, based on ability to pay, defining the extent of the debt due and owing to the State of Montana by the natural or adoptive parent(s) responsible for the support of children who have received public assistance. Where a district court order establishes the level of support, the debt is limited to the amount provided for by the order. SB 221, section 12(4)."

Disability Payments in Excess of Support Obligation Not Credited Against Support Arrearages: Father's monthly $250 support obligation was completely offset by the monthly $512 Social Security benefit paid to his children. The District Court did not apply the Social Security payments as a credit toward the support obligation but instead increased the support obligation to a sum equal to the total of the support obligation and the Social Security benefit. Father maintained that the court should have offset the support obligation with the Social Security payment and credited the remaining $262 toward his existing support arrearages. In determining the disposition of the excess benefits, the Supreme Court noted ARM 46.30.1542(1)(b) in holding that the father was entitled to credit for the amount of his monthly obligation for child support, but no more. Therefore, the District Court did not err in refusing to apply any excess monthly benefits to the accrued arrearages. Further, a lump-sum Social Security payment was paid to the children to compensate them for overdue benefits for the period when father became eligible for the benefits and when the benefit payments commenced. The lump-sum payment, like the other monthly Social Security payments, should have been credited to father's monthly support obligation for the months during which the lump sum accumulated. Because those benefits completely offset the monthly support obligation, any excess support paid during that time was in addition to the actual obligation and should have been credited to the accrued arrearages. In re Marriage of Cowan, 279 M 491, 928 P2d 214, 53 St. Rep. 1250 (1996).

Excess Support Properly Retained by State: Holthusen made his child support payments directly to the Child Support Enforcement Division. The payment amount was for $75 more than his current obligation, and the Division retained the excess to reimburse the state for public assistance money that the wife received during the time Holthusen had failed to pay support. The Supreme Court held that the state properly retained the money rather than tendering the excess to the wife for past child support and that after being reimbursed, the state would then be required to pay the excess to the wife. In re Marriage of Holthusen/Jakobson, 259 M 42, 854 P2d 333, 50 St. Rep. 666 (1993).

Husband Credited for Past Social Security Payments to Children: The trial court was not aware of the Supreme Court's decision in In re Marriage of Durbin, 251 M 51, 823 P2d 243 (1991), overruled, inasmuch as a credit may be granted to a parent for Social Security benefits received prior to a motion to modify as a credit against the noncustodial parent's child support obligation without constituting a retroactive modification of the original support order, in In re Marriage of Cowan, 279 M 491, 928 P2d 214, 53 St. Rep. 1250 (1996), and failed to give the husband credit against his support obligation for social security payments made by him to his children. The lower court modified the support obligation beginning with the date of the first hearing after the Durbin decision in which the husband raised the issue of the social security payments. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's ruling and held that the District Court did not retroactively apply Durbin. In re Marriage of Holthusen/Jakobson, 259 M 42, 854 P2d 333, 50 St. Rep. 666 (1993).

The amendments to (3) made by Ch. 549 were rendered ineffectual by the deletion of (3) in Ch. 702.

Chapter 702 deleted former (3) that read: "(3) The department may not charge the applicant a fee as compensation for services rendered in establishment of or enforcement of support obligations. However, the department may charge a fee to the person from whom the support is being collected. This fee must be in addition to the support payment. The department shall by rule establish reasonable fees commensurate with the cost of enforcement support services to be paid by the person from whom the support is being collected. When payments are scheduled to be paid on an installment basis, a portion of the collection fee owed to the department shall be added to each payment. If the person from whom the support is being collected makes a payment in an amount that is less than the support payment plus the collection fee for that payment, the department may deduct a percentage of the total sum collected which represents the department's standard proportion. The department may, upon a showing of necessity, waive or defer any such fee."

Applicability: Section 32, Ch. 702, L. 1989, provided: "[This act] applies to child support orders and modifications of child support orders issued after September 30, 1989."

An initiation fee as a portion of the collection fee may be charged the applicant by the department. The department shall by rule establish reasonable fees for support enforcement services, and the schedule of fees shall be made available to all applicants for support enforcement services".

1989 Amendment: Made section applicable to spouses, as well as former spouses.

40-5-208. Medical support — obligation enforcement.

Compiler's Comments

1995 Amendment: Chapter 504 in (1), after "existing order", substituted "the support order must include a medical support order as defined in 40-5-804" for "the department shall require the obligor to obtain and maintain health insurance coverage for each child if health insurance coverage is available through the obligor's employment or other group health insurance plan. The order or modification of an order must include a statement that the insurance must be obtained and maintained whenever the department is providing support enforcement services and that the failure to do so may result in the imposition of sanctions under this section.

(b) If the support order or modification of an order does not include a provision requiring the obligor to provide health insurance coverage for a child, upon notice to the obligor that the child is receiving support enforcement services under Title IV-D of the Social Security Act, the obligor shall obtain and maintain health insurance coverage as provided for in subsection (1)(a). This insurance is in addition to:

(i) an order requiring the obligee to maintain health insurance coverage;

(ii) an agreement that the obligee will maintain health insurance coverage; or

(iii) a failure or omission of the court order or modification of an order to require health insurance coverage"; in (2), after "providing", substituted "IV-D services for a child, the department shall also enforce any order issued by a court or administrative agency of competent jurisdiction that" for "child support enforcement services and the obligor is required by an existing district court order or an administrative order under this section to provide health insurance coverage for a child, the department shall also enforce the health insurance obligation"; substituted (2), (2)(a), and (2)(b) concerning enforcement of order requiring obligor to make payments for health or medical needs of child or to enroll child in health benefit plan for former language that read: "(2) (a) If the department is providing child support enforcement services and the obligor is required by an existing district court order or an administrative order under this section to provide health insurance coverage for a child, the department shall also enforce the health insurance obligation"; in (3)(a), at beginning, substituted "To permit the department to determine whether enforcement action is necessary, if the obligor is required to enroll the child in a health benefit plan or individual insurance" for "To ensure that health insurance coverage is available for the child" and substituted "individual insurance carrier or health benefit plan" for "insurance carrier"; inserted (3)(b) concerning failure of the obligor to provide information to the Department; deleted former (3) that read: "(3) (a) The department may issue a notice commanding the obligor to appear at a hearing held by the department and show cause why a sum of not more than $100 should not be assessed for each month health insurance coverage is not secured or maintained if the department determines an obligor has failed to:

(i) obtain or maintain health insurance coverage as required under this section; or

(ii) provide information required under this section.

(b) If the department finds, after hearing or the obligor's failure to appear, that health insurance coverage has not been obtained or maintained or that the obligor has failed to provide the information required, the department may assess against the obligor not more than $100 for each month health insurance coverage has not been obtained or maintained or for each month information has not been provided. The amounts may be enforced by any administrative remedy available to the department for the enforcement of child support obligations, including warrant for distraint provided for in 40-5-247 and income withholding provided for in Title 40, chapter 5, part 4"; deleted former (4) that read: "(4) The health insurance coverage must be provided under this section even though it may reduce the amount of child support obligation or reduce the obligor's ability to pay child support as required"; inserted (4) and (5) concerning the Department providing services for a child when a child support order or modification of a child support order does not include any provision for the health and medical needs of the child; deleted (5) that read: "(5) Any amounts collected pursuant to this section must be returned to the general fund to help offset expenditures for medicaid"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Coordination Instruction: Section 17, Ch. 60, L. 1995, provided: "If both [this act] and Senate Bill No. 402 [LC 365] are passed and approved and if Senate Bill No. 402 [LC 365] includes a section that amends 40-5-208, then [section 9 of this act], amending 40-5-208, is void." Senate Bill No. 402, including a section amending 40-5-208, was passed and approved; therefore, the amendments to this section that were adopted in sec. 9, Ch. 60, L. 1995, are void.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 504, L. 1995, provided: "WHEREAS, it is appropriate to draft a bill specifically to present proposed program improvements for medical support enforcement in a single, comprehensive bill that promotes the needs of legislative energy, efficiency, and economy by limiting the number of possible bills and by reducing the need for hearings and readings on those bills; and

WHEREAS, parents should be held responsible for providing medical care for their children, whether or not the parents voluntarily do so."

1995 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 504, L. 1995, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because it grants rulemaking authority to the department of social and rehabilitation services to adopt rules for expedited procedures."

Severability: Section 33, Ch. 504, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 631 near end of second sentence of (3)(b) substituted "40-5-247" for "40-5-241"; and made minor changes in style.

1989 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 549 throughout section, before "order", inserted "support" and substituted references to obligor for references to parents obligated to pay child support; in second sentence of (1), before "support order", deleted reference to a court of competent jurisdiction; in first sentence of (2), after "support order", deleted "of a court of competent jurisdiction or an administrative agency empowered to enter such order"; and made minor changes in phraseology.

Chapter 702 in (1)(a) inserted "to establish a child support order, whether final or temporary, and in each modification of an existing order", after "require" substituted "the obligor to obtain and maintain" for "parents obligated to pay child support to secure and maintain", before "child" deleted "dependent", after "child" substituted "if" for "at a cost not to exceed 5% of net income, whenever such", after "health insurance" inserted "coverage", after "through" substituted "the obligor's employment or other group health insurance plan" for "their employment", inserted last sentence relating to a warning statement concerning required health insurance coverage, and deleted former last sentence that read: "However, if a court of competent jurisdiction has entered an order establishing a current support obligation and has ordered the obligated parent to secure and maintain health insurance coverage for each dependent child, the department shall enforce the obligation as ordered by the court"; inserted (1)(b) relating to requirement to obtain and maintain health insurance coverage; inserted (2) requiring Department to enforce health insurance obligation; in (3)(a), before "may issue", substituted "The department" for "If the department determines that an obligated parent has failed to maintain health insurance coverage required by the order of a court of competent jurisdiction or an administrative agency empowered to enter such order, it", substituted "obligor" for "parent", and at end of introductory clause inserted "if the department determines an obligor has failed to"; inserted (3)(a)(i) relating to health insurance coverage; inserted (3)(a)(ii) relating to providing information; in (3)(b), in two places, substituted "obtained" for "secured", substituted "or that the obligor has failed to provide the information required" for "in accordance with the court or administrative order", at end of first sentence inserted "or for each month information has not been provided", in second sentence inserted "any administrative remedy available to the department for the enforcement of child support obligations, including", and at end inserted "and income withholding provided for in Title 40, chapter 5, part 4"; deleted former (3) and (4) that read: "(3) Whenever an obligated parent who has been served with notice under this section appears before the department and shows that health insurance coverage in accordance with the court or administrative order:

(a) has been secured and maintained continuously since the date of the order, the department shall dismiss the pending action; or

(b) has not been secured or continuously maintained but such coverage is presently in effect, the department shall suspend the pending action for a period of 12 months.

(4) At the end of the suspension period, the department may schedule a hearing. If at this hearing the department finds that during the suspension period health insurance coverage:

(a) has been continuously maintained, the department shall dismiss the pending action and the obligated parent will not be assessed under this section; or

(b) has not been continuously maintained, the department may enter a final order requiring the obligated parent to pay the sum assessed in accordance with this section for each month coverage was not maintained"; inserted (4) requiring provision of health insurance coverage even though it reduces a child support obligation or ability to pay; and made minor changes in form.

The amendment to the second sentence of (1) made by Ch. 549 has not been codified because the substance of the amendment is contained in (2)(a), inserted by Ch. 702. The amendments to (3)(a) made by Ch. 549 and Ch. 702 were the same in content but contained minor differences in phraseology. The Code Commissioner has codified the amendments made by Ch. 702. The meaning of the subsection remains unchanged.

40-5-209. Child support guidelines — periodic review.

Compiler's Comments

1989 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 702, L. 1989, provided: "A statement of intent is needed for this bill because the department of social and rehabilitation services [now department of public health and human services] is required by [section 3] [40-5-209] to adopt uniform child support guidelines for use by judges and other officials who have the power to determine child support awards within this state. The department initially shall adopt and promulgate the uniform child support guidelines recommended by the Montana supreme court at 44 State Reporter 828 (1987). Thereafter, the department shall periodically review those guidelines to determine if they are appropriate to determine adequate minimum child support amounts. If the department determines that the guidelines are no longer adequate, it shall amend them, after considering the factors set forth in 40-4-204(2) and 40-6-116(5)."

Title 37, chapter 62, subchapter 1, ARM Child support guidelines.

Case Notes

Request for Variance From Support Guidelines to Be Supported by Competent Evidence: Welch argued that the District Court should have granted him a variance from the child support guidelines based upon his increased visitation costs and increased living expenses resulting from living in Washington, D.C. The Supreme Court held that although the alleged higher costs could be the basis for a variance, Welch had failed to provide any competent evidence supporting his argument. Therefore, the lower court had not abused its discretion in following the guidelines. In re Marriage of Welch, 273 M 497, 905 P2d 132, 52 St. Rep. 1081 (1995), following In re Marriage of Nash, 254 M 231, 836 P2d 598 (1992).

Reimbursed Employment Expenses Not Deducted From Gross Income for Child Support Calculation Purposes: In calculating child support using child support guidelines, the District Court properly refused to deduct reimbursed employment expenses from gross income of payor, which an administrative rule stated could not be deducted. In re Marriage of Murphy, 268 M 1, 885 P2d 440, 51 St. Rep. 1198 (1994).

Imputing Income — Court to Impute Deduction From Income for Child Support: The lower court refused to accept the parties' agreed-upon settlement that did not require the unemployed mother to pay child support. The District Court imputed potential income for the mother and ordered her to pay $33 a month for support. The Supreme Court ruled that the lower court erred because it did not calculate a deduction from the mother's imputed income for child-care costs for her two other children from a different relationship if she returned to work. In re Marriage of Noel, 265 M 249, 875 P2d 358, 51 St. Rep. 505 (1994).

Proper Determination of Income Attributed to Assets: Pedersen initiated a suit against Nordahl to establish that he was the father of her unborn twins and to obtain child support. Nordahl argued that the funds in his logging account, personal banking account, and retirement accounts were derived solely from his 1992 income and that therefore the inclusion of those accounts in the "income attributed to assets" calculation resulted in a double counting of income. The Supreme Court held that pursuant to ARM 46.30.1514, income attributed to assets is the amount of interest that would be earned if the nonperforming assets were liquidated and the proceeds invested and that was the amount that the lower court had added to Nordahl's gross income. Therefore, no double counting of his 1992 income had occurred. In re Paternity of Pedersen v. Nordahl, 261 M 284, 862 P2d 411, 50 St. Rep. 1338 (1993).

Proper Average of Income and Refusal to Subtract Deductions From Gross Income in Determining Child Support: Pedersen initiated a suit against Nordahl to establish that he was the father of her unborn twins and to obtain child support. Nordahl argued that the lower court erred in determining the amount of support because it took the average of his income over a 2-year period and failed to subtract certain deductions from the amount of gross income. The Supreme Court held that Nordahl had not objected to the income averaging during trial and could not raise the issue on appeal and also held that the lower court had the option of subtracting certain deductions from gross income but was not required to do so. In re Paternity of Pedersen v. Nordahl, 261 M 284, 862 P2d 411, 50 St. Rep. 1338 (1993).

Support Obligations to Be Set Based on Guidelines in Effect at Time Court Makes Decision: The lower court ordered the husband to pay a weekly sum for day care as a supplement to child support. The District Court relied on rules in effect when it first ordered support in 1991. In 1992, child support guidelines were amended to combine child care costs with child support. The Supreme Court held that the lower court must use the law in effect at the time that it modified the support rather than the law in effect when it entered its original order. In re Marriage of Anderson, 260 M 246, 859 P2d 451, 50 St. Rep. 1028 (1993).

Housing Provided by Employer as Constituting Income: The Supreme Court ruled that the lower court erred in failing to consider housing provided to the respondent by his employer as income for purposes of calculating support as required by the Uniform District Court Rule on Child Support Guidelines. In re Marriage of Gray, 242 M 69, 788 P2d 909, 47 St. Rep. 552 (1990).

Unsold Wheat Not Excluded From Support Calculations: The appellant argued that the lower court erred in excluding unsold wheat owned by the respondent in calculating the parties' support obligations. The Supreme Court agreed, holding that under the Uniform District Court Rule on Child Support Guidelines, the wheat was not an income-producing asset but was the fruit of the respondent's labor and therefore income. In re Marriage of Gray, 242 M 69, 788 P2d 909, 47 St. Rep. 552 (1990).

activities"; inserted (3) allowing charging of a handling fee; inserted (4) allowing charging of a late payment fee; inserted (5) and (5)(a) providing for establishment of a fee schedule; inserted (5)(b)(ii) that read: "(ii) is not a party but incurs expenses and costs related to the action"; deleted former (3) that read: "(3) Fees awarded under this section are in the nature of child support and are collectible in the same manner as a support order. Case Notes

Child Support Not Court Ordered — Obligation Not Relieved: In an action brought by the Department of Revenue (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) pursuant to 40-5-221 and 53-4-248 to recoup funds paid by the state to support a father's two children, summary judgment for the Department was upheld. Although the trial court's prior dissolution and custody decree did not provide for support payments, a parent's legal and moral obligation to support his children was not relieved, nor was his obligation relieved by laches. St. v. Hubbard, 222 M 156, 720 P2d 1177, 43 St. Rep. 1135 (1986).

Public Assistance Payments — Father Not Absolved of Duty to Support Minor Children: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in ordering child support and maintenance. It is the legal as well as moral duty of husband to support his minor children. He is not absolved from this duty by public assistance provided to his children by a state agency in the form of AFDC payments (now FAIM financial assistance). The District Court was not punishing husband for perceived marital misconduct. In re Marriage of Hickey, 213 M 38, 689 P2d 1222, 41 St. Rep. 1931 (1984).

Lack of Notice of Distraint Warrants and Accruing Support Debt as Deprivation of Due Process: Failure by the Department of Revenue (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) to give notice of the filing of distraint warrants in District Court against a father for recoupment of money paid by the state as Aid to Families With Dependent Children (now FAIM financial assistance) to the mother and failure to give any notice of accruing support debt after the first notice had been served on him deprived the father of notice and opportunity for hearing, which would have accorded him due process. St. v. Frank, 226 M 283, 735 P2d 290, 44 St. Rep. 657 (1987).

Chapter 552 substituted subsections (1) through (9) concerning support orders and procedures for former subsections (1) through (6) that read: "(1) (a) In the absence of a support order, the department may serve an obligor with a notice of financial responsibility alleging a child's need for support and the amount of the need and requiring the obligor to appear and show cause at a hearing held by the department why the obligor should not be finally ordered to pay the amount alleged in the notice.

(b) The notice must state:

(i) the names of the obligee and child;

(ii) the amount of current and future support to be paid each month for the child;

(iii) that if the obligor does not file a written answer within 20 days from the date of service or refusal of service, the amount in the notice must be finally ordered;

(a) the amount of public assistance payable under Title 53, chapter 4; or

(b) the alleged need.

(3) If the obligor objects to the notice, the obligor shall file a written answer with the department within 20 days from the date of service or refusal of service. If the department receives a timely answer, it shall conduct a fair hearing under 40-5-226. If the department does not receive a timely answer, it shall order the obligor to pay the amount stated in the notice.

(4) (a) If a support action is pending in district court and a temporary or permanent support obligation has not been ordered, the department may issue to the obligor a notice of temporary support obligation.

(b) The notice must contain:

(i) the names of the child and the person or agency having the custodial care of the child;

(ii) an amount for temporary monthly support determined as provided in subsection (2);

(iii) a statement that the obligor may request a hearing at which the obligor may show that a different support amount is appropriate or that establishment of a support obligation is inappropriate under the circumstances. The hearing must be conducted in accordance with the procedures of 40-5-226.

If the district court determines that a periodic support obligation is not proper, any amount paid under the temporary support order must be refunded to the obligor.

(5) (a) If a temporary support order is entered or if proceedings are commenced under this section for a married obligor, the department shall vacate any support order or dismiss any proceeding under this part if it finds that the parties to the marriage have:

(i) reconciled without the marriage having been dissolved;

(ii) made joint application to the department to vacate the order or dismiss the proceeding; and

(iii) provided proof that the marriage has been resumed.

(b) The department may not vacate a support order or dismiss a proceeding under this subsection (5) if it determines that the rights of a third person or the child are affected. The department may issue a new notice under this section if the parties subsequently separate.

(6) Any notice of financial responsibility and the notice of temporary support obligation must be served in the same manner prescribed for the service of a summons in civil action in accordance with the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure."

At the end of (4)(b), the reference to "costs the obligee incurs in recovering the amount to be refunded" was erroneously enacted and should refer to the costs the "obligor" incurs. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Contingent Termination — Request for Federal Exemptions: Section 104, Ch. 552, L. 1997, contained the following contingent termination provisions and order that the Department of Public Health and Human Services seek federal exemptions:

"(1) [Sections 9, 11, 22 through 24, 93, and 95] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, 40-4-105, 40-5-922, 40-5-924, 50-15-403, and 61-5-107] and the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminate on the date of the suspension if the federal government suspends federal payments to this state for this state's child support enforcement program and for this state's program relating to temporary assistance to needy families because of this state's failure to enact law as required by the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996.

(2) [Sections 9, 11, 22 through 24, 93, and 95] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, 40-4-105, 40-5-922, 40-5-924, 50-15-403, and 61-5-107] and the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminate on the date that a final decision is rendered in federal court invalidating the child support provisions of the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996.

(3) If the director of the department of public health and human services certifies to the governor and the secretary of state in writing that one of the following provisions is no longer required by federal law because of repeal of or amendment to federal statutes that require that provision, the provision terminates on the date the certification takes effect:

(a) [section 9] [40-5-922];

(b) [section 11] [40-5-924];

(c) [sections 22 through 24] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, and 40-4-105];

(d) [section 93] [50-15-403];

(e) [section 95] [61-5-107];

(f) the bracketed provisions in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116].

(4) If the director of the department of public health and human services certifies to the governor and the secretary of state in writing that the federal government has granted this state an exemption from one of the following provisions, the provision terminates on the date the exemption takes effect:

(a) [section 9] [40-5-922];

(b) [section 11] [40-5-924];

(c) [sections 22 through 24] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, and 40-4-105];

(d) [section 93] [50-15-403, certification filed April 24, 1998];

(e) [section 95] [61-5-107];

(f) the bracketed provisions in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116].

(5) (a) The department of public health and human services shall do everything reasonably within its power to obtain, as soon as possible, federal government exemptions from the provisions listed in subsection (4).

(b) Because section 395(c) of the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996 (PRWORA) allows a grace period for states to amend their constitutions in order to comply with PRWORA and because the Montana legislature believes that the section of PRWORA prohibiting a jury trial in a paternity proceeding violates Article II, section 26, of the Montana constitution and is therefore rejected, the department of public health and human services shall seek a federal government exemption from the jury trial prohibition in PRWORA as the first exemption it seeks under subsection (5)(a). [This exemption was received on December 8, 1997.]

(6) [Sections 9, 11, 22 through 24, 93, and 95] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, 40-4-105, 40-5-922, 40-5-924, 50-15-403, and 61-5-107] and the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminate July 1, 1999.

(7) If the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminates, the code commissioner is instructed to renumber subsections, adjust internal references, and correct grammar and arrangement."

Upon the filing of such petition, the department shall issue an order to the nonpetitioning party to appear and show cause why the decision previously entered should not be prospectively modified. The order to appear and show cause, together with a copy of the verified petition, must be served by the petitioner upon all other parties in the manner provided by this part. Upon receipt of proof of service, the department shall schedule a hearing not less than 15 or more than 30 days from the date of service, unless extended for good cause shown. Prospective modification may be ordered but only upon a showing of good cause and material change of circumstances"; and inserted (8) requiring statement relating to review and modification of orders by Department.

Lack of Statement of Paternity Sworn to in Montana Does Not Negate Jurisdiction of Child Support Enforcement Division: Brodzki argued that the Child Support Enforcement Division had no jurisdiction over him to require that he submit to paternity testing because the mother's statement of paternity was sworn to in Rhode Island. The Supreme Court ruled that the statute did not contain language requiring the statement to be made in Montana. In re Paternity of M.J.S., 1998 MT 144, 289 M 249, 960 P2d 308, 55 St. Rep. 571 (1998).

Child Support Enforcement Division as Real Party in Interest in Paternity Action and Underlying Proceedings: Once a parent assigns child support collection rights to the Child Support Enforcement Division, the Division becomes the real party in interest in a paternity action and in any underlying attempt to recover child support benefits from the putative father. If the testimony and other supplementary evidence demonstrate a reasonable probability that the alleged father had sexual intercourse with the child's mother during the probable time of the child's conception or if the evidence shows a probable existence of a presumption under 40-6-105, the department may issue a subpoena ordering the alleged father to submit to paternity blood testing. A reasonable probability of sexual intercourse during the possible time of conception may be established by affidavit of the child's mother"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 70 inserted (2) concerning additional hearing if there is reasonable cause to suggest that a blood test sample of a person submitting to a blood test was not the sample of the alleged father, mother, or child. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Severability: Section 11, Ch. 119, L. 1989, was a severability clause.

Case Notes

Denying Alleged Father Access to Certain Records Not Abuse of Discretion: Brodzki argued that the administrative law judge erred in not allowing him access to the mother's medical records and to a claim that she filed with his insurer. The Supreme Court held that the denial was not an abuse of discretion because the sole issue was whether there was a probability that the parties had sexual relations during the time of conception. That fact was proved by the hospital records and the testimony of other witnesses. In re Paternity of M.J.S., 1998 MT 144, 289 M 249, 960 P2d 308, 55 St. Rep. 571 (1998).

Case Notes

Lack of Notice of Distraint Warrants and Accruing Support Debt as Deprivation of Due Process: Failure by the Department of Revenue (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) to give notice of the filing of distraint warrants in District Court against a father for recoupment of money paid by the state as Aid to Families With Dependent Children (now FAIM financial assistance) to the mother and failure to give any notice of accruing support debt after the first notice had been served on him deprived the father of notice and opportunity for hearing, which would have accorded him due process. St. v. Frank, 226 M 283, 735 P2d 290, 44 St. Rep. 657 (1987).

Motion to Set Aside Enforcement of Unserved Warrant of Distraint as Independent Action — Not Subject to Time Limitation: The Department of Revenue (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) was assigned the right of child support and attempted to recoup money paid by the state as Aid to Families With Dependent Children (now FAIM financial assistance) by filing warrants of distraint and Writs of Execution to attach any accounts in which the father had an interest, but the father was never served a notice of accruing debt or informed of his right to a hearing on each warrant. The father moved for relief from the warrants of distraint and for stay of execution, but the issue was not heard until 48 days after the motion, which the Department contended was sufficient to remove jurisdiction from the District Court. The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that the motion to set aside enforcement of the unserved warrants of distraint was an independent action and thus was not subject to the 45-day limitation of Rule 60(c), M.R.Civ.P. St. v. Frank, 226 M 283, 735 P2d 290, 44 St. Rep. 657 (1987).

Abuse of Discretion in Failure to Reference Statutory Judicial Review Provisions in Administrative Order Addressing Child Support Enforcement — Due Process Violation Constituting Reversible Error: The mother filed a petition with the Child Support Enforcement Division (CSED) for assistance in obtaining child support from the father. CSED initiated an administrative action to determine the amount of support owing, and an administrative law judge conducted a contested case hearing on the issue and entered an order establishing the father's current and past-due child support obligation. The order included a paragraph notifying the parents of their statutory right to petition for judicial review of the administrative decision under Title 2, ch. 4, part 7 (MAPA), but did not reference this section, which contains more specific procedural requirements for appealing from an administrative decision in a child support enforcement case than the provisions in MAPA. The father filed a petition for judicial review and mailed copies to the mother and CSED but failed to properly serve the parties as required in this section. The District Court concluded that it lacked subject matter jurisdiction because the father failed to comply with this section. The court dismissed the petition. The father moved the court to amend or reconsider the petition, contending that the application of this section violated his due process rights because he did not receive sufficient notice of the procedures by which to obtain judicial review of the administrative decision. The motion was denied, but the court nevertheless subsequently entered another order correcting the clerical error by adding a reference to this section to the notice provision of the earlier order and then granted CSED's motion to dismiss. The father appealed. The Supreme Court noted that proper service of a petition for judicial review was a threshold requirement for the District Court to obtain jurisdiction in this case and that under Title 2, ch. 4, part 7, a petition for judicial review may be properly served by mailing copies to the agency and other parties, but there is no requirement that a summons be issued and served in conjunction with the petition. By filing the petition for judicial review and mailing copies to the mother and CSED, the father fulfilled the service requirements of MAPA and Hilands Golf Club v.

Ashmore, 277 M 324, 922 P2d 469 (1996). However, specific statutory requirements prevail over general provisions such as those in MAPA, and the Supreme Court agreed that the portion of the notice informing the father that MAPA would govern the proceedings was misleading, absent any reference to the different, specific procedural requirements for CSED actions under this section. The Supreme Court adopted federal interpretations of the due process notice requirements in this regard, which provide that the opportunity to be heard is not meaningful if the notice provided does not accurately inform the person to whom it is given of how to take advantage of that opportunity. The notice provisions in the administrative order did not provide father with adequate notice to meet due process requirements, so application of this section would violate the father's due process rights. Under these unique circumstances, it was required that the father's petition for judicial review must be governed by the service requirements of MAPA and Hilands. Those requirements were met, so the District Court did acquire subject matter jurisdiction and abused its discretion in dismissing the father's petition for judicial review based on his failure to comply with this section. The case was reversed for further proceedings under MAPA. Pickens v. Shelton-Thompson, 2000 MT 131, 300 M 16, 3 P3d 603, 57 St. Rep. 543 (2000). See also Mullane v. 1989 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 418, L. 1989, provided: "This bill requires a statement of intent because [section 7] [40-5-262] requires the department of revenue to adopt rules establishing procedures for making information concerning certain child and spousal support debt available to consumer credit reporting agencies. It is the intent of the legislature to encourage the reporting and use of support debt information whenever practical. The department is encouraged to provide information to consumer reporting agencies for commercial use by business and financial institutions. The legislature intends that the department by rule provide for a fee to cover the costs of providing support debt information. Technological developments have lowered the cost of information sharing and make it practical for state government to share delinquent support information with private enterprise to a much greater extent than was previously possible. Expanded information sharing is intended to promote the payment of delinquent support obligations and to protect commercial lenders and retailers by ensuring that all of a consumer's financial obligations are considered in determining the ability to pay a commercial obligation. Consumers should be discouraged from incurring obligations that they might find difficult to pay because of support enforcement efforts by the department.

The department is directed to promulgate rules for providing notice to obligors owing delinquent support under orders or judgments issued by courts or administrative agencies. Rules should allow the economical issuance of notice to the greatest number of delinquent obligors practical in the ordinary course of agency operations. One notice should be sufficient to allow any delinquent support to be reported whenever it occurs. Rules should require that the agency make a reasonable effort to provide notice prior to the release of information; however, the actual receipt of notice is not required.

The department is instructed to promulgate rules providing for the transfer of information on the greatest number of support delinquencies to the greatest number of credit reporting agencies practical. Electronic transfer of information is encouraged. Support debt information should be provided to consumer reporting agencies in accordance with specific guidelines to be specified in the rules for determining when reporting is inappropriate in a particular case.

The department is further instructed to promulgate rules creating procedures for contesting and determining the accuracy of support debt information. Rules should encourage the informal resolution of disputes as promptly as practicable. Formal adjudication of the accuracy of reported support debt information should be conducted initially by the department, subject to review by the district courts."

Justiciable Controversy Created by Intervention of Child Support Enforcement Division With Continuing District Court Jurisdiction Over Child Support Orders: As part of a marriage dissolution, the District Court ordered that the husband pay monthly child support in a specific amount. The Child Support Enforcement Division (CSED) subsequently notified the court that it intended to modify the order pursuant to its authority in 40-5-273 and this section. The court, sua sponte, then enjoined CSED from modifying any child support orders issued by a Montana District Court, asserting that CSED's actions in modifying a court order violated the constitutional separation of powers clause. On appeal, CSED maintained that this case did not present a justiciable controversy, primarily because neither party to the dissolution action challenged the constitutionality of the statutes in question, and that the court was therefore without jurisdiction to decide the issue. The Supreme Court disagreed, finding that a justiciable controversy did exist. Once the original equitable jurisdiction of the District Court was invoked in the dissolution action, the court retained continuing jurisdiction following entry of the child support order. As a result, the court properly used its inherent authority to protect both its continuing jurisdiction and the husband's right not to be adversely affected by an act of CSED that the court considered unconstitutional. Further, the court had personal jurisdiction over CSED because CSED's notification that it intended to intervene interjected CSED into the ongoing matter, constituting a voluntary appearance into the case under Rule 4B, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), and vesting personal jurisdiction over CSED with the District Court. Seubert v. Seubert, 2000 MT 241, 301 M

Statutes Granting Child Support Enforcement Division Judicial Power to Make and Enforce Child Support Orders Violative of Constitutional Separation of Powers: As part of a marriage dissolution, the District Court ordered that the husband pay monthly child support in a specific amount. The Child Support Enforcement Division (CSED) subsequently notified the court that it intended to modify the order pursuant to its authority in 40-5-273 and this section. The court, sua sponte, then enjoined CSED from modifying any child support orders issued by a Montana District Court, asserting that CSED's actions in modifying a court order violated the constitutional separation of powers clause. On appeal, CSED maintained that the statutes did not violate the separation of powers clause because: (1) the statutory scheme was merely a quasi-judicial function that did not threaten the institutional integrity of the Judicial Branch; (2) the statutes in question were a reasonable response to both the federal legal requirements for expedited child support modification and the sheer magnitude of child support collection in Montana; (3) CSED was empowered to modify a support order only if the facts changed; (4) every contested modification was subject to a hearing before an administrative law judge; (5) all modifications were subject to judicial review; and (6) the Legislature's grant of jurisdictional authority to CSED was not exclusive. The District Court responded that the statutes were an unconstitutional violation of separation of powers because: (1) they gave CSED judicial power that is exclusively reserved to the judiciary; (2) they gave CSED statutory authority to modify a child support order, file it with the District Court, and then enforce the order as a District Court judgment; and (3) the procedure for judicial review of a CSED modification was not automatic and was limited by the scope of the Montana Administrative Procedure Act. The Supreme Court concluded that 40-5-273 and this section are an unconstitutional violation of the separation of powers clause to the extent that they grant CSED the judicial power to make and enforce child support orders without automatic and mandatory judicial review. Although appreciative of the magnitude of the agency's modification and enforcement tasks, the court found that that fact did not justify unbridled departure from constitutional norms respecting the autonomy of the individual branches of government. The hearing is subject to the provisions of this section relating to a review. The department may adopt rules regulating the fair and efficient conduct of the hearing. Unless the department determines under department rules that an in-person hearing is necessary, the hearing must be conducted by teleconferencing methods.

(5) A provision of law may not be construed to mean that an obligor or an obligee is a client of the department, and the department is not considered a party to the action.

(6) (a) In addition to the powers and duties provided by other law, the department shall, to ensure the equitable determination of a support obligation, during a review:

(i) question witnesses in a nonadversarial manner to elicit full disclosure of all pertinent facts;

(ii) introduce evidence on behalf of the parties;

(iii) apply the guidelines to the facts elicited from the review; and

(iv) inquire as to any circumstances that may require variance from the guidelines.

(b) If a party is represented by legal counsel, the department may allow the counsel to present that party's case.

(7) The department shall determine a support obligation in accordance with the guidelines and shall issue a modifying order. A stipulation by the parties in a proceeding under this section may not be contested before entry of the final department order. If the department determines that the difference between the existing support order and the amount determined under the guidelines is negligible under rules issued by the department, the modifying order may not change the amount of the support obligation. Even though the review may indicate that a modification of the support obligation is appropriate, the department may not modify the support order if the department determines, after the review, that to do so would not be in the best interests of the child under the rules issued by the department. An increase in child support is presumed to be in the best interests of the child unless, after a review, either the obligor or the obligee demonstrates it would not be in the best interests of the child. The modifying order may modify the underlying support order from the date of service of a notice that an administrative review will be conducted under this section and may modify the underlying order from the date found to be the date that the amount required for support decreased. The obligee may be ordered to repay the obligor for any support amount overpayment found to have been paid since the date that the amount required for support decreased. If the case is a IV-D case, the department shall, on request of the obligor, enforce the obligee's repayment of the overpaid amount using any procedure provided in this chapter for payment, enforcement, and collection of child support or a delinquency.

(8) The department shall consider whether or not health insurance for the child is available and shall include an appropriate requirement for the provision of the child's health insurance needs in a modifying order in accordance with part 8 of this chapter.

(9) In addition to complying with other requirements of law, the modifying order must include provisions:

(a) that each party, other than the department, is required to promptly file with the department and update, as necessary, information on:

(i) the identity of the party;

(ii) the party's social security number;

(iii) the party's residential and mailing addresses;

(iv) the party's telephone number;

(v) the party's driver's license number;

(vi) the name, address, and telephone number of the party's employer; and

(vii) if the child is covered by a health or medical insurance plan, the name of the insurance carrier or medical insurance plan, the policy identification number, the names of the persons covered, and any other pertinent information regarding coverage or, if the child is not covered, information as to availability of coverage for the child through the obligor's and obligee's employers;

(b) that in a subsequent child support enforcement action, upon sufficient showing that diligent effort has been made to ascertain the location of a party, the department's due process requirements for notice and service of process are met with respect to the party upon delivery of written notice by regular mail to the most recent known address of the party or the party's employer's address reported to the department; and

(c) that the modifying order is subject to future administrative review and modification by the department upon the request of the department or a party under 40-5-271 through 40-5-273 when the department is providing services under IV-D.

(10) The department shall keep information provided under subsection (9)(a) confidential except as necessary for purposes of Title IV-D of the Social Security Act.

(11) An order entered under this section by the department is a final agency decision, subject to judicial review pursuant to the Montana Administrative Procedure Act, except as provided in 40-5-253. An order entered under this section must notify the parties that the order is subject to judicial review under Title 2, chapter 4, part 7. A final order entered under a stipulation of parties waives the stipulating parties' right to judicial review.

(12) The parties to the support order and the department when it is providing services under IV-D may enforce the support order or modify that order independently, as provided in 40-4-208 and 53-2-613(5)(d)"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

1999 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 51 in (12) at end after "53-2-613" substituted "(5)(d)" for "(4)(d)". Amendment effective March 15, 1999.

Chapter 579 in (1) and (2) inserted "either personally or by certified mail" and inserted sentence requiring department to receive return receipt if service by certified mail; at end of (9) substituted "provisions" for "the following notices and warnings"; substituted language in (9)(a) and (9)(b) outlining information required to be filed with department and procedures regarding department's due process requirements for notice and service for former language in (9)(a) that read: "that the obligor shall keep the department informed of the name and address of the obligor's current employer and information on health insurance available to the obligor through the obligor's employment or other group insurance"; inserted (10) requiring department to keep information confidential except for purposes of Title IV-D of the Social Security Act; and made minor changes in style. If the hearings officer determines health insurance is available to the child of the obligor, the hearings officer shall issue a modifying order that requires the obligor to obtain and keep health insurance for the child. If the hearings officer determines that health insurance is not available to the child of the obligor, he shall issue a modifying order containing the notices provided in subsection (9). An order to provide health insurance is presumed to be in the best interests of the child unless, after a review hearing, either the obligor or the obligee demonstrates it would not be in the best interests of the child"; deleted former (9)(b) that required modifying order to include notice "that the obligor shall obtain and keep health insurance for the child of the obligor whenever it is available through the obligor's employment or other group insurance"; in first sentence in (10), after "Act", inserted "except as provided in 40-5-253" and inserted third sentence waiving the stipulating parties' right to judicial review when final order is entered under stipulation of parties; and made minor changes in style. Case Notes

Justiciable Controversy Created by Intervention of Child Support Enforcement Division With Continuing District Court Jurisdiction Over Child Support Orders: As part of a marriage dissolution, the District Court ordered that the husband pay monthly child support in a specific amount. The Child Support Enforcement Division (CSED) subsequently notified the court that it intended to modify the order pursuant to its authority in 40-5-272 and this section. The court, sua sponte, then enjoined CSED from modifying any child support orders issued by a Montana District Court, asserting that CSED's actions in modifying a court order violated the constitutional separation of powers clause. On appeal, CSED maintained that this case did not present a justiciable controversy, primarily because neither party to the dissolution action challenged the constitutionality of the statutes in question, and that the court was therefore without jurisdiction to decide the issue. The Supreme Court disagreed, finding that a justiciable controversy did exist. Once the original equitable jurisdiction of the District Court was invoked in the dissolution action, the court retained continuing jurisdiction following entry of the child support order. As a result, the court properly used its inherent authority to protect both its continuing jurisdiction and the husband's right not to be adversely affected by an act of CSED that the court considered unconstitutional. Further, the court had personal jurisdiction over CSED because CSED's notification that it intended to intervene interjected CSED into the ongoing matter, constituting a voluntary appearance into the case under Rule 4B, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), and vesting personal jurisdiction over CSED with the District Court. Seubert v. Seubert, 2000 MT 241, 301 M 382, 13 P3d 365, 57 St. Rep. 1006 (2000), rehearing granted and opinion clarified as to the prospective effect of the opinion in 2000 MT 241A, 301 M 399, 13 P3d 365, 57 St. Rep. 1013a (2000). See also In re Marriage of Harper, 235 M 41, 764 P2d 1283 (1988), and Gryczan v. St., 283 M 433, 942 P2d 112 (1997). (See 2001 amendment.)

Statutes Granting Child Support Enforcement Division Judicial Power to Make and Enforce Child Support Orders Violative of Constitutional Separation of Powers: As part of a marriage dissolution, the District Court ordered that the husband pay monthly child support in a specific amount. The Child Support Enforcement Division (CSED) subsequently notified the court that it intended to modify the order pursuant to its authority in 40-5-272 and this section. The court, sua sponte, then enjoined CSED from modifying any child support orders issued by a Montana District Court, asserting that CSED's actions in modifying a court order violated the constitutional separation of powers clause. On appeal, CSED maintained that the statutes did not violate the separation of powers clause because: (1) the statutory scheme was merely a quasi-judicial function that did not threaten the institutional integrity of the Judicial Branch; (2) the statutes in question were a reasonable response to both the federal legal requirements for expedited child support modification and the sheer magnitude of child support collection in Montana; (3) CSED was empowered to modify a support order only if the facts changed; (4) every contested modification was subject to a hearing before an administrative law judge; (5) all modifications were subject to judicial review; and (6) the Legislature's grant of jurisdictional authority to CSED was not exclusive. The District Court responded that the statutes were an unconstitutional violation of separation of powers because: (1) they gave CSED judicial power that is exclusively reserved to the judiciary; (2) they gave CSED statutory authority to modify a child support order, file it with the District Court, and then enforce the order as a District Court judgment; and (3) the procedure for judicial review of a CSED modification was not automatic and was limited by the scope of the Montana Administrative Procedure Act. The Supreme Court concluded that 40-5-272 and this section are an unconstitutional violation of the separation of powers clause to the extent that they grant CSED the judicial power to make and enforce child support orders without automatic and mandatory judicial review. Although appreciative of the magnitude of the agency's modification and enforcement tasks, the court found that that fact did not justify unbridled departure from constitutional norms respecting the autonomy of the individual branches of government. Seubert, 2000 MT 241, 301 M 382, 13 P3d 365, 57 St. Rep. 1006 (2000), rehearing granted and opinion clarified as to the prospective effect of the opinion in 2000 MT 241A, 301 M 399, 13 P3d 365, 57 St. Rep. 1013a (2000), and distinguishing Chastain v. Case Notes

Intervening Oral Modification of Support Agreement Precluding Enforcement of Purported Delinquency: Mother sought to subject father's income to withholding based on a still-outstanding pre-1987 agreement despite an intervening 1987 stipulation and order that dealt with the pre-1987 delinquency and that altered the original agreement and despite a subsequent oral modification, the terms of which were disputed. The trial court properly found that the mother failed to prove by a preponderance of evidence delinquency in an amount equal to 3 months of support. The Supreme Court affirmed, finding that to hold otherwise would result in repeated litigation with regard to modification of agreements, stipulated and approved by court order, and executed oral agreements. Tribal Support Order Entitled to Full Faith and Credit: The lower court held that the state could seek to enforce a tribal court's child support order only by initiating an action in District Court rather than pursuing administrative enforcement. The Supreme Court held that under the Child Support Enforcement Act, the tribal support order was entitled to full faith and credit and therefore could be enforced by the simplified registration procedures of the Act and that, additionally, income could be withheld without court action under the Montana Child Support Enforcement Act. Jurisdiction Over Off-Reservation Income of Indian Living on Reservation: The Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) attached off-reservation unemployment benefit income of an enrolled tribal member living on the reservation for payment of a child support obligation. The Supreme Court held that the collection action was a quasi in rem action and that the state had jurisdiction over the benefits because they were located within the territorial limits of the state and jurisdiction was not based on the presence of the tribal member. Case Notes

Authority of CSED to Enforce Support Order — Uncovered Medical Expense Arrearage Not Collectible: In a case for modification of child support obligations, the father appealed the District Court order allowing assessed arrearages, including uncovered medical expenses, to be collected by the CSED. The plain statutory language of this section indicates that the Legislature intended to grant the CSED the power to collect periodic child support payments and did not intend to grant the CSED the authority to collect delinquent medical expense payments. The District Court misinterpreted the law and erred by ordering that the CSED may collect the arrearage for uncovered medical expenses. Compiler's Comments

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 571, L. 1985, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because it gives the department of revenue [now department of public health and human services] rulemaking authority.

The intent of this bill and federal Public Law 93-378 [sic] [98-378], the Child Support Enforcement Amendments of 1984, on which it is based is to ensure that the support of children is the highest priority in the allocation of a responsible parent's income through the timely and automatic initiation of income withholding procedures whenever a delinquency occurs equal to at least 1 month's support payment. This bill requires the department to monitor and track support payments as they become due for the purpose of detecting delinquencies and further to promptly respond to such delinquency with income withholding procedures. To expedite the process of income withholding, any hearings are to be held under the contested case procedures of the Montana Administrative Procedure Act. Further, income withholding procedures are to be made available for interstate applications.

More specifically, it is the intent of the bill to grant to the department of revenue [now department of public health and human services] the following:

(1) the authority to establish rules and procedures related to the administrative hearing process, including but not limited to procedures for requesting a hearing, for discovery, and for teleconferencing;

(2) the authority to adopt guidelines for the exercise of discretion in reducing the amount to be withheld in satisfaction of arrearages;

(3) the authority to establish procedures for the monitoring, tracking, and dispensing of support payments and payments received from income withholdings; and

(4) the authority to establish procedures for the implementation of interstate withholding."

(a) except as provided in 40-4-204 and 40-6-116, a support obligation is initially decreed and ordered or modified after January 1, 1990, by a district court or administrative process, regardless of whether child support payments are in arrears; or

(b) the obligor is found to owe a combination of unpaid child support under a support order in an amount equal to or in excess of 1 month's support payment.

(2) When the requirements of this part have been met, the department, without necessity for amendment of the support order or further order by a court or other entity, shall issue an order directing the obligor's employer or other payor to withhold and deliver to the department such amount of the obligor's income as will be sufficient to meet the support obligation imposed by the support order and to defray arrearages, if any, due when the withholding order takes place.

Administrative Law Judge Decision — Four-Year Delay Held Violation of Due Process and Right to Justice Without Undue Delay: Based upon an interstate referral from North Dakota, the Child Support Enforcement Division (CSED) of the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) instituted a collection action against Connell to recover child support payments. After a hearing on February 15, 1991, after which Connell submitted proposed findings and conclusions and an order, the administrative law judge (ALJ) failed to make a decision and no further action was taken on the case until December 23, 1994. At that time, a different ALJ required appearance of the parties in a telephone hearing. After the hearing, Connell moved for a default judgment against CSED or dismissal. Citing Mont. Power Co. v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 206 M 359, 671 P2d 604 (1983), the Supreme Court pointed out that the due process clause of the Montana Constitution applies to state agencies. The Supreme Court held that the 44-month delay in deciding Connell's case, which CSED tried to explain by saying that the contract of the previous ALJ had terminated and it was unsure how to proceed, violated Art. II, sec. 16 and 17, Mont. Const., several administrative rules of the Department, and this section. The Supreme Court remanded the case to the District Court for an order dismissing the income withholding action and tax offset against a state warrant for Connell. In re Connell v. St., 280 M 491, 930 P2d 88, 54 St. Rep. 28 (1997), distinguished in Emery v. St., 286 M 376, 950 P2d 764, 54 St. Rep. 1454 (1997).

Request for "in Person" Hearing Improperly Denied — Administrative Rule Contrary to Statute and Rules of Evidence Invalid: Charles disputed the amount of child support payments intended to be withheld by an income withholding proceeding and requested that he be given an "in person" hearing, rather than a telephone conference hearing, pursuant to this section. His request was denied by the administrative hearings officer pursuant to ARM 46.30.607(1). The Supreme Court held that the request for the "in person" hearing was improperly denied because 2-4-612(2) makes the Montana Rules of Evidence applicable to administrative hearings and Rule 611(e), M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), provides that a witness can be heard only in the presence of other parties. Citing In re Marriage of Bonamarte, 263 M 170, 866 P2d 1132 (1994), the Supreme Court held that Rule 611 requires the physical presence of a witness in the courtroom. The Supreme Court also noted that this section requires a live hearing if a party requests it and that the administrative rule adopted by the Child Support Enforcement Division, providing for a live hearing only upon approval of the hearings officer, was void because it was contrary to statute and Rule 611. Civil Contempt for Nonsupport 40-5-601. Failure to pay support — civil contempt.

Case Notes

Refusal to Credit Support Arrearage as Allowed by Child Support Enforcement Division — Abuse of Discretion: Father applied to the Child Support Enforcement Division for a credit against his past-due support obligations, and the Division determined that he was due a credit in the amount of $1,593.20. In its order modifying the child support obligation, the District Court's failure to acknowledge the Division's determination that the past-due arrearages should be reduced was a clear abuse of discretion. On remand, the Supreme Court ordered that the arrearages be reduced by $1,593.20, pursuant to the Division's determination. In re Marriage of Cowan, 279 M 491, 928 P2d 214, 53 St. Rep. 1250 (1996).

Agreement to Pay for Private Schooling — Unsupported Failure to Pay for Tutor: The District Court erroneously decided that the father, who was ordered by the divorce decree to share expenses of his son's private school tuition, could refuse to do so merely because he believed that a tutor was not doing the boy any good. The tutor was hired by the mother on the advice of education professionals, and the father was not a professional in the field. In re Marriage of Heath, 272 M 522, 901 P2d 590, 52 St. Rep. 915 (1995).

Attorney Fees Improper for Husband in Violation of Decree: Because findings favoring the husband as to claims of violation of the decree were reversed, the award of attorney fees to the husband was also reversed. In re Marriage of Heath, 272 M 522, 901 P2d 590, 52 St. Rep. 915 (1995).

Complying With Decree by Providing Health Insurance — Failure to Pay for Second Policy: The husband, who provided health insurance, as required by the decree, did not violate the decree by refusing to reimburse the wife for premiums on an additional health insurance policy. In re Marriage of Heath, 272 M 522, 901 P2d 590, 52 St. Rep. 915 (1995).

Effect of Father's Failure to Rebut Mother's Evidence of Day-Care Costs and Alternatives: Evidence did not support a District Court finding that the father's failure to reimburse the mother for day-care expenses did not violate the divorce decree requirement. The mother testified as to types and costs of available day care and as to her investigation of alternatives. The father presented no evidence and simply disagreed with the mother's choice and the policies and costs of the day-care center of her choice. In re Marriage of Heath, 272 M 522, 901 P2d 590, 52 St. Rep. 915 (1995).

Exception for Contempt Review in Family Law Cases: Although contempt orders are generally final and not reviewable on appeal, except by writ of certiorari, the Supreme Court has created an exception in family law cases. In such cases, the review is limited to examining the record to determine whether the District Court acted within its jurisdiction and whether the evidence supports the District Court's contempt findings. In re Marriage of Heath, 272 M 522, 901 P2d 590, 52 St. Rep. 915 (1995).

Failure of Financial Vehicles for Children's Education to Meet Requirements of Decree: The District Court erroneously found that the father, who was ordered by the divorce decree to set up a separate educational fund for the three children of the marriage and place $200 a month in it, satisfied that requirement with an employee stock option plan and a 401K retirement plan. The father and the adopted children of his subsequent marriage could use the plans for retirement, a home purchase, or education of the adopted children, and the plans did not meet the divorce decree requirements that the educational fund be in both parents' names and that both of their signatures be required for withdrawal. In re Marriage of Heath, 272 M 522, 901 P2d 590, 52 St. Rep. 915 (1995).

Life Insurance at Half Amount Required by Decree Inadequate: The decree requiring a $150,000 life insurance policy for three children of a first marriage was not complied with by a $125,000 policy benefiting the three children and also the two children of a second marriage and by not naming the first wife as the policyowner, as required by the decree. In re Marriage of Heath, 272 M 522, 901 P2d 590, 52 St. Rep. 915 (1995).

Propriety of Failure to Pay for Eyeglasses That Professional Decided Were Necessary: Although it was later determined that the son did not need eyeglasses, they were recommended by a professional and ultimately resulted in a diagnosis of epilepsy. Evidence did not support a District Court finding that they were neither necessary nor reasonable and that the father's failure to reimburse the mother for them did not violate the divorce decree, and the agreement incorporated in the decree, that stated that the father was to pay a portion of all medical expenses not covered by insurance. In re Marriage of Heath, 272 M 522, 901 P2d 590, 52 St. Rep. 915 (1995).

1999 Amendment: Chapter 579 in definition of support debt or support obligation inserted "the failure to provide or pay", at beginning of (a) deleted "the failure to provide", substituted language in (b) regarding court-ordered spousal maintenance or other court-ordered support for custodial parent for "a support order for spousal maintenance if the judgment or order requiring payment of maintenance also contains a judgment or order requiring payment of child support for a child for whom the person awarded maintenance is the custodial parent", and inserted (c) expanding definition to include fines, fees, penalties, interest, and other funds and costs collected for child support or spousal maintenance or support; in definition of support order inserted (b) to include judgments and orders for periodic payment and fines, fees, penalties, interest, and other funds and costs collected for support or spousal maintenance or support; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

1997 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 42 in definition of child, in (a)(iv)(D), and in definition of IV-D case, in (d), inserted reference to the Revised Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act or the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act. Amendment effective March 12, 1997.

Chapter 552 in definition of child, in (a)(iv)(D), inserted "Uniform Interstate Family Support Act, the Revised" and "the Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act"; in definition of IV-D case, in (d), inserted "the Revised Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act, the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act"; in definition of license, after "registration", inserted "permit", after "profession" inserted "recreational activity", and after "termination" inserted "or a declaration of ineligibility to purchase"; in definition of obligor inserted "or who is subject to a subpoena or warrant in a paternity or child support proceeding"; inserted definitions of recreational activity, subpoena, suspension, and warrant; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Style changes in the chapters were slightly different. In each case, the codifier chose the more appropriate.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 546 in definition of Department substituted "department of public health and human services" for "department of social and rehabilitation services". Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Saving Clause: Section 571, Ch. 546, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

Case Notes

License Suspension for Nonpayment of Child Support Available Remedy Despite Child's Emancipation: A father was years in arrears in paying child support at the time that a license suspension hearing was held but nevertheless maintained that when the child was emancipated, the child support debt transformed into an ordinary civil debt that was not enforceable by a license suspension action. In general, child support that is due under a dissolution decree but that remains unpaid becomes a judgment debt similar to any other money judgment. As such, the collection of back child support is subject to the 10-year statute of limitations in 27-2-201, but other than that limit, a custodial parent to whom back child support is owed has recourse to any collection remedies provided by law, including the license suspension remedies, regardless of whether the child for whom support is owed has achieved emancipation. Although losing his licenses was a drastic remedy, the father's persistent failure to honor his child support obligations left the District Court with no alternative, and the Supreme Court affirmed the suspension of the father's driver's, hunting and fishing, and electrician's licenses on appeal. In re Marriage of Hopper, 1999 MT 310, 295 M 225, 991 P2d 960, 56 St. Rep. 1247 (1999), following Willoughby v. Nature of Child Support Debt — Higher Order Than Ordinary Civil Debt: The legislative intent underlying the license suspension statutes was to emphasize, as a matter of public policy, that child support obligations have the highest priority in a parent's allocation of income to debt. Unpaid child support may not be analogized to ordinary civil debt because parents have not only a legal obligation, but a social and moral obligation, to support their children, so support of children transcends ordinary individualistic matters, rising to the level of a social obligation that a parent owes not only to the child, but to the state as well. Thus, the law does not look lightly upon those who fail to make a good faith effort to discharge their child support obligations when they are able to do so. The license suspension provisions are remedial in nature, rather than punitive, because they protect the public interest in having parents, not the state, shoulder financial responsibility for children. In the present case, the father was years in arrears in paying child support at the time that the license suspension hearing was held but nevertheless maintained that when the child was emancipated, the child support debt transformed into an ordinary civil debt. The Supreme Court disagreed, expressly approving the use of license suspension statutes as a remedy for the collection of child support arrearages. Case Notes Suspension of Driver's License Contingent Upon Portion of Overdue Child Support Within Court Discretion: A child support enforcement agency issued a notice of intent to suspend an obligor's driver's license. The obligor appealed on hardship grounds. The District Court concluded that the obligor had shown that a significant hardship would result from a license suspension and issued a conditional stay if: (1) within 30 days, the obligor provided proof of payment of one-third of the total obligation; and (2) a fixed payment plan was entered for paying the remainder of the obligation. If the obligor failed to abide by the terms, the stay would terminate pursuant to 40-5-710. It was within the court's discretion to condition the stay upon substantial compliance by the obligor. Thus, the decision was affirmed. In re Child Support of Mason, 1998 MT 192, 290 M 253, 964 P2d 743, 55 St. Rep. 803 (1998).

"(1) [Sections 9, 11, 22 through 24, 93, and 95] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, 40-4-105, 40-5-922, 40-5-924, 50-15-403, and 61-5-107] and the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminate on the date of the suspension if the federal government suspends federal payments to this state for this state's child support enforcement program and for this state's program relating to temporary assistance to needy families because of this state's failure to enact law as required by the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996.

(2) [Sections 9, 11, 22 through 24, 93, and 95] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, 40-4-105, 40-5-922, 40-5-924, 50-15-403, and 61-5-107] and the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminate on the date that a final decision is rendered in federal court invalidating the child support provisions of the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996.

(3) If the director of the department of public health and human services certifies to the governor and the secretary of state in writing that one of the following provisions is no longer required by federal law because of repeal of or amendment to federal statutes that require that provision, the provision terminates on the date the certification takes effect:

(a) [section 9] [40-5-922];

(b) [section 11] [40-5-924];

(c) [sections 22 through 24] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, and 40-4-105];

(d) [section 93] [50-15-403];

(e) [section 95] [61-5-107];

(5) (a) The department of public health and human services shall do everything reasonably within its power to obtain, as soon as possible, federal government exemptions from the provisions listed in subsection (4).

(b) Because section 395(c) of the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996 (PRWORA) allows a grace period for states to amend their constitutions in order to comply with PRWORA and because the Montana legislature believes that the section of PRWORA prohibiting a jury trial in a paternity proceeding violates Article II, section 26, of the Montana constitution and is therefore rejected, the department of public health and human services shall seek a federal government exemption from the jury trial prohibition in PRWORA as the first exemption it seeks under subsection (5)(a). 1997 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 552, L. 1997, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because [section 2] [40-5-906] grants the department of public health and human services authority to adopt rules to implement [sections 1 through 15] [19-2-909, 19-20-306, 40-5-157, 40-5-275, 40-5-901, 40-5-906 through 40-5-911, and 40-5-921 through 40-5-924]. The rules should address routine procedural and operational matters and supplementary information necessary for the efficient and effective operation of the child support information and processing unit. The department should weigh the need for the information against the personal intrusiveness of the requested information and the difficulty of obtaining the information and should adopt rules that minimize the personal intrusiveness of the requested information and that minimize the costs to the department, employers, and employees in response to any difficulties in obtaining the information."

(5) (a) The department of public health and human services shall do everything reasonably within its power to obtain, as soon as possible, federal government exemptions from the provisions listed in subsection (4).

(b) Because section 395(c) of the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996 (PRWORA) allows a grace period for states to amend their constitutions in order to comply with PRWORA and because the Montana legislature believes that the section of PRWORA prohibiting a jury trial in a paternity proceeding violates Article II, section 26, of the Montana constitution and is therefore rejected, the department of public health and human services shall seek a federal government exemption from the jury trial prohibition in PRWORA as the first exemption it seeks under subsection (5)(a). "(1) [Sections 9, 11, 22 through 24, 93, and 95] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, 40-4-105, 40-5-922, 40-5-924, 50-15-403, and 61-5-107] and the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminate on the date of the suspension if the federal government suspends federal payments to this state for this state's child support enforcement program and for this state's program relating to temporary assistance to needy families because of this state's failure to enact law as required by the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996.

(2) [Sections 9, 11, 22 through 24, 93, and 95] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, 40-4-105, 40-5-922, 40-5-924, 50-15-403, and 61-5-107] and the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminate on the date that a final decision is rendered in federal court invalidating the child support provisions of the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996.

(3) If the director of the department of public health and human services certifies to the governor and the secretary of state in writing that one of the following provisions is no longer required by federal law because of repeal of or amendment to federal statutes that require that provision, the provision terminates on the date the certification takes effect:

(a) [section 9] [40-5-922];

CHAPTER 6
PARENT AND CHILD

Chapter Case Notes

Purpose and Applicability of Federal Parental Kidnapping Protection Act: The federal Parental Kidnapping Protection Act of 1980 (28 U.S.C. 1738A), enacted by Congress to address the problems of interstate forum shopping and child snatching, established national standards under which jurisdictions could determine whether they had jurisdiction and what effect to give the decisions made by courts of other jurisdictions by requiring that full faith and credit be accorded to decisions of a jurisdiction if the court appropriately exercised jurisdiction under the federal standards. The Act's general purposes are to promote cooperation and the exchange of information between state courts, to facilitate the enforcement of custody decisions of sister states, and to discourage continuing interstate controversies over child custody. The Act does not apply in a case in which there is no other state competing for jurisdiction. In re Marriage of Erler, 261 M 65, 862 P2d 12, 50 St. Rep. 1195 (1993).

No Award of Attorney Fees in Paternity Action: Montana statutes do not provide for the award of attorney fees in a paternity action, and failure of the trial court to do so did not constitute reversible error. In re Paternity of W.L., 259 M 187, 855 P2d 521, 50 St. Rep. 751 (1993).

Venue — Action for Approval of Parental Release: Section 40-6-109 does not provide significant guidance as to venue in an action to obtain court approval of a parental release. Venue in such an action was properly in Cascade County, since the child was born in Cascade County and the natural mother was a resident of Cascade County. The ends of justice would not be served by filing the petition in Missoula County, the residence of the prospective adoptive parents. In re Adoption of B.G.B., 183 M 347, 599 P2d 375 (1979).

40-6-103. Relationship not dependent on marriage.

Commissioners' Comment

Sections 1 and 2 [40-6-102, 40-6-103], the major substantive sections of the Act, establish the principles that regardless of the marital status of the parents, all children and all parents have equal rights with respect to each other...[R]ecent U.S. Supreme Court decisions and lower federal and state court decisions require equality of treatment in most areas of substantive law. See, generally, H. Krause, Illegitimacy: Law and Social Policy 59-104 (1971).

The first two cases to reach the U.S. Supreme Court concerned Louisiana's wrongful death statute and held that statute unconstitutional insofar as it (1) discriminated against illegitimate children, holding them ineligible to recover for the wrongful death of their mother (Levy v. Louisiana, 88 S.Ct. 1509, 391 U.S. 68 (1968)) and (2) denied a mother recovery for the wrongful death of her child (Glona v. American Guarantee & Liability Insurance Co., 88 S.Ct. 1515, 391 U.S. 73 (1968)).

It was a surprise when, within three years of deciding Levy and Glona, the U.S. Supreme Court reached a conclusion seemingly at odds with Levy and Glona. The Court had occasion to reconsider the question of the illegitimate child's legal position in a case involving inheritance, and refused to extend Levy v. Glona to permit an acknowledged illegitimate child to inherit from his intestate father under Louisiana law. (Labine v. Vincent, 91 S.Ct. 1017, 401 U.S. 532 (1971).)

The surprise engendered by the Labine decision was surpassed when the Supreme Court again reversed its position on this subject in 1972. In a dramatic departure from Labine, the U.S. Supreme Court held that workmen's compensation benefits related to the death of their father are due dependent, unacknowledged, illegitimate children. (Weber v. Aetna Casualty & Surety Co., 92 S.Ct. 1400, 406 U.S. 164 (1972).) In January, 1973, the U.S. Supreme Court, finally substituting consistency for vacillation on this subject, decided that the illegitimate child is guaranteed a right of support from his father. (Gomez v. Perez, 93 S.Ct. 872 (1973).)

These decisions engendered a large number of decisions by lower federal courts and state courts at all levels which have broadly extended the legal relationship between the father and his child born out of wedlock. It should be noted, however, that several states had previously provided full (or nearly full) legal equality to illegitimates. To illustrate, Ore.Rev.Stat. §109.060 (1969) provides:

"[t]he legal status and legal relationships and the rights and obligations between a person and his descendants, and between a person and his parents, their descendants and kindred, are the same for all persons, whether or not the parents have been married."

See, also, N.D.Cent.Code §56-01-05 (Supp.1969); Ariz.Rev.Stat.Ann. §14-206 (1956); Alaska Stat. 95.20.050(a) (1962).

40-6-105. Presumption of paternity.

Commissioners' Comment

In the situations described in subsection (a) [(1)], substantial evidence points to a particular man as being the father of the child and formal proceedings to establish paternity are not necessary. A presumption of paternity arises in the described circumstances. Most of the situations correspond to the instances in which current state law imposes a presumption of legitimacy.

Subsection (b)[(2)] contemplates that a presumption raised under subsection (a)[(1)] may be rebutted in appropriate circumstances. In accordance with current law in most states relating to the rebuttal of a presumption of "legitimacy", the presumption is difficult to rebut in that proof must be made by "clear and convincing evidence." Other details are covered in sections 6(a) and (b) [40-6-107(1) and (2)].

1997 Amendment: Chapter 552 in (1)(c)(i), at end, deleted "or with the district court for the county where the person resides or for any county where the child support enforcement division of the department of public health and human services maintains a regional office"; in (1)(e), at end of first sentence, deleted "and filed with the department or with the district court of the county where the person resides or for any county where the child support enforcement division of the department of public health and human services maintains a regional office", in third sentence substituted "make written and oral information available" for "provide information", and at end inserted "The presumption of paternity is created when the acknowledgment is filed with the department"; inserted (1)(g) providing "the person is presumed to be the child's natural father under the laws of the state or Indian territory in which the child was born"; inserted exception clause at beginning of (3); inserted (3)(b) providing "by scientific evidence resulting from a blood test that excludes the person as the child's natural parent"; inserted (4)(b) providing that one may only be relieved of support payments that follow the date that a presumption is rebutted or set aside; inserted (5)(a), (5)(b), and (5)(c) relating to rescinding of an acknowledgment of paternity, providing when an acknowledgment becomes an irrebuttable presumption of paternity, and stating the force and effect of an irrebuttable presumption of paternity, when it may be set aside, and the burden of proof; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

1995 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 70 at end of (1) inserted "any of the following occur"; at the beginning of (1)(c)(i) substituted "the child's mother and the child's alleged father have acknowledged the alleged father's paternity of the child in writing in accordance with subsection (1)(e) and the acknowledgment is filed" for "he has acknowledged his paternity in writing filed" and at end inserted "or for any county where the child support enforcement division of the department of social and rehabilitation services maintains a regional office"; at beginning of (1)(e) substituted "the child's mother and the child's alleged father acknowledge the alleged father's paternity of the child in a paternity acknowledgment form that is provided by the department of social and rehabilitation services and filed" for "he acknowledges his paternity of the child in a writing filed" and after "resides" substituted "or for any county where the child support enforcement division of the department of social and rehabilitation services maintains a regional office. The department of health and environmental sciences or the district court shall accept and file the completed form. As a part of a voluntary acknowledgment process, the department of social and rehabilitation services shall provide information to the parents regarding the rights and responsibilities of acknowledging paternity" for "which court or department shall promptly inform the mother of the filing of the acknowledgment, and she does not dispute the acknowledgment within a reasonable time after being informed thereof, in a writing filed with the department of health and environmental sciences or with the district court of the county where the acknowledgment was filed"; inserted (1)(f) concerning the scientific evidence resulting from a blood test; inserted (2) providing that an acknowledgment is binding on a parent who executes it whether or not the parent is a minor; inserted (4) providing that a presumption of paternity established under this section is a sufficient basis for establishing a support order; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995. Case Notes

Mother Estopped From Denying Father's Paternity Also Precluded From Establishing Paternity in Another — No Equal Protection Violation Found — Standing to Establish Paternity: The Supreme Court held in In re Marriage of K.E.V. & M.L.V., 267 M 323, 883 P2d 1246 (1994), that after a common-law marriage to Kevin was dissolved, Margery, Kevin's former common-law wife, was estopped from denying Kevin's paternity of her daughter, Kathryn. After that decision, Margery brought a petition to have another man, Phillip, declared the father of Kathryn. The District Court dismissed the petition with prejudice and held that Margery was estopped from bringing the action, based upon the Supreme Court's decision in Marriage of K.E.V. and that Kathryn's siblings did not have standing to bring the action. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that under Borchers v. McCarter, 181 M 169, 592 P2d 941 (1979), a person seeking to have Phillip named as the father of Kathryn must first rebut the presumption under this section that Kevin is the father. The Supreme Court held that under Marriage of K.E.V. , Margery is equitably estopped from contesting the presumption of Kevin's paternity and therefore, under Borchers, Margery cannot establish Phillip's paternity. The Supreme Court noted that all of the cases raised by Margery in support of her argument that dismissal of her petition violates her right to equal protection were cases in which a parent asserted the the parent's own right to prove the parent's own paternity and not the paternity of someone else. Because Margery had shown no authority holding that one person had a fundamental right to establish the paternity of another, the Supreme Court held that Margery's right to equal protection had not been violated. Relying upon In re Estate of Goick, 275 M 13, 909 P2d 1165 (1996), the Supreme Court also held that because there was no evidence in the record showing how Kathryn's siblings would benefit from proving that Phillip is Kathryn's biological father, the siblings had no personal stake in the outcome of such a proceeding and therefore affirmed the District Court's holding that Kathryn's siblings did not have standing to petition the District Court. In re Paternity of Vainio, 284 M 229, 943 P2d 1282, 54 St. Rep. 858 (1997).

Biological Ties Not Controlling to Judicially Determine Parent/Child Relationship — "Best Interest of Child" Applied: The petitioner, who was recognized as the child's biological father, appealed from a District Court's determination that granting judicial paternity in the petitioner was not in the best interest of the child. In affirming the District Court decision denying paternity, the Supreme Court ruled that the best interest of the child test should be used in a paternity dispute under Montana's Uniform Parentage Act. The District Court correctly applied the best interest of the child test by considering the stability of the family relationship contrasted with the petitioner's failure to show any commitment in establishing a parental as opposed to a biological role. In re Paternity of "Adam", 273 M 351, 903 P2d 207, 52 St. Rep. 1026 (1995).

Equitable Estoppel of Presumption of Paternity: K.E.V. was told by M.L.V. that he was the father of her child. K.E.V. accepted his responsibilities and obligations as the child's father, purchasing maternity clothes for M.L.V., paying medical expenses related to the birth, being present at the birth, attempting to have his name listed as father on the birth certificate, and living with M.L.V. in a common-law marriage. Upon dissolution of the marriage, M.L.V. sought to deny that K.E.V. was the father of the child in order to secure sole custody, and uncontroverted medical tests in fact proved that K.E.V. was not the father. Nevertheless, the District Court properly applied the doctrine of equitable estoppel in preventing M.L.V. from contesting the presumed father-child relationship. To allow M.L.V. to assert a strict legal right in determining paternity would have allowed her to take unconscionable advantage of her own wrong. M.L.V. was properly estopped from bringing an action to rebut the presumption of paternity. In re Marriage of K.E.V. & M.L.V., 267 M 323, 883 P2d 1246, 51 St. Rep. 1055 (1994), followed in In re Paternity of Vainio, 284 M 229, 943 P2d 1282, 54 St. Rep. 858 (1997).

Paternity Contested After Adjudication of Marital Dissolution — Relitigation Barred by Collateral Estoppel: When paternity was contested in response to an action to collect past child support payments, the District Court properly ruled that the issue of paternity had previously been adjudicated during the marriage dissolution proceeding and that relitigation of the issue was barred by collateral estoppel. In re Marriage of Holland, 224 M 414, 730 P2d 410, 43 St. Rep. 2293 (1986).

Marriage After Birth — Father on Birth Certificate — Mutual Acknowledgment of Nonpaternity: The presumption that husband was the natural father of child arose when he married its mother after it was born and, with his consent, was named as the father on the birth certificate. This presumption was rebutted when, in proceeding upon mother's petition for dissolution of the marriage, she and her husband acknowledged under oath that he was not the natural father. Therefore, he could be granted custody of the child only in the capacity of a nonparent. The mother could be deprived of custody only upon a finding of unfitness, abuse, or neglect. The record supported the trial court's finding that the mother was unfit and unable to care for the child. Thus, the husband could be considered as a potential custodian and was granted custody. The trial court made no finding as to the wishes of the child because there was no evidence on this point. Though the wishes of the child would have little weight, as the child was only 4 years old, a remand was necessary for consideration of the child's wishes and a new custody determination. In re Custody of C.C., K.C., & B.C., 215 M 72, 695 P2d 816, 42 St. Rep. 190 (1985), overruled, with regard to use of marriage and divorce procedures in determination of appropriateness of custodianship for nonparent, in In re Marriage of Miller, 251 M 300, 825 P2d 189, 49 St. Rep. 36 (1992).

URESA Action — Rebuttal of Paternity Presumption: The issue of paternity in a Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (URESA) (replaced by UIFSA) action must be determined according to the provisions of the Uniform Parentage Act. Failure to rebut the presumption that petitioner's husband was the natural father of the child within 5 years of the child's birth bars a paternity action against a nonpresumed person. Borchers v. McCarter, 181 M 169, 592 P2d 941 (1979).

Commissioners' Comment

This Act does not deal with many complex and serious legal problems raised by the practice of artificial insemination. It was thought useful, however, to single out and cover in this Act at least one fact situation that occurs frequently. Further consideration of other legal aspects of artificial insemination has been urged on the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws and is recommended to state legislators. A useful reference is Wadlington, Artificial Insemination: The Danger of a Poorly Kept Secret, 64 N.W.U.L.Rev. 777 (1970).

40-6-107. Determination of father and child relationship — who may bring action.

Commissioners' Comment

This section consists of two major parts. Subsections (a) [omitted in Montana] and (b) [(1)] deal with the action to declare or dispute the existence of the father and child relationship presumed under Section 4(a) [40-6-105(1)]. Attack on the presumptions based on marriage or on a relationship between the parents that resembles marriage is restricted to a limited circle of potential contestants and in point of time. Presumptions created in other circumstances may be attacked more freely.

Subsection (c) [(2)] defines who may bring the action to ascertain paternity when no presumption applies. It is made clear that the child may bring the action. Moreover, since the Act contemplates that the principal interest involved in the action is that of the child, Subsection (d) [(3)] does not permit an agreement between the mother and an alleged or presumed father to bar an action to ascertain paternity. Cf. Comment on Section 9 [40-6-110].

Case Notes

Different Statute of Limitations Period for Illegitimate Child to Bring Paternity Action Unconstitutional: The lower court found that state law granting illegitimate children a shorter time to bring a paternity suit than legitimate children was unconstitutional. (See 1993 amendment.) The Supreme Court affirmed the decision on the basis that the state had no compelling reason to treat the two classes unequally. Ariz. v. Sasse, 245 M 340, 801 P2d 598, 47 St. Rep. 2171 (1990), affirmed, with regard to the unconstitutionality of the entire statutory discriminatory classification for all purposes, not simply limited in scope to support questions under the Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (now Uniform Interstate Family Support Act), in In re Marriage of K.E.V. & M.L.V., 267 M 323, 883 P2d 1246, 51 St. Rep. 1055 (1994).

Limitation on Action to Declare Nonexistence of Presumed Relationship — Statute Held Constitutional: Where the petitioner filed a petition based on a blood test to have the parentage of a child determined, the District Court did not err in dismissing the petition on the basis that the petitioner was barred by the 5-year Statute of Limitations from challenging the presumed father and child relationship between another man and the child in question. (See 1993 amendment.) The Statute of Limitations was not rendered unconstitutional by the U.S. Supreme Court's decisions in Mills v. Habluetzel, 456 US 91, 71 L Ed 2d 770, 102 S Ct 1549 (1982), and Pickett v. Brown, 462 US 1, 76 L Ed 2d 372, 103 S Ct 720 (1983). Those cases are inapplicable to the state Statute of Limitations and to the District Court's ruling because those cases involved the classification of legitimate and illegitimate children, which made it more difficult for illegitimate children to bring an action for support than it did for legitimate children. The Montana statutes do not differentiate between legitimate and illegitimate children and do not curtail either's right to support. In re W.C., 206 M 432, 671 P2d 621, 40 St. Rep. 1762 (1983).

Statute of Limitations — State — Child: A male child was born out of wedlock. The State obtained an assignment of the mother's claim for support from the putative father. The State brought an action against the father more than 3 years after the birth of the child. As to children born out of wedlock, the Statute of Limitations in 40-6-108 creates an unfair burden and unfairly discriminates against them and is therefore unconstitutional. Their guardian, guardian ad litem, or next friend cannot be barred access to the courts for them. However, in that the State's interest is economic, the paternal parent protection offered by the statute as against the State has a substantial relation to the intended purpose and therefore, as against the State, is constitutional. St. v. Wilson, 193 M 318, 631 P2d 1273, 38 St. Rep. 1299 (1981). See also In re W.C., 206 M 432, 671 P2d 621, 40 St. Rep. 1762 (1983), holding that Wilson did not overrule Borchers v. McCarter, 181 M 169, 592 P2d 941 (1979). (Statute amended by sec. 1, Ch. 442, L. 1985, to allow action to determine paternity to be brought by child no later than 2 years after the child attains the age of majority.)

Statute of Limitations Tolled for Minor Plaintiff: Where appellants brought suit against the respondent to establish paternity and for financial support, the District Court improperly held that 40-6-108(3) revived a claim previously barred by a Statute of Limitations. The claim of the appellants was never barred, as any Statute of Limitations was tolled during the time that the plaintiff child was a minor. Sutherland v. Hurin, 185 M 544, 605 P2d 1133 (1980).

URESA Action — Rebuttal of Paternity Presumption: The issue of paternity in a Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (URESA) (replaced by UIFSA) action must be determined according to the provisions of the Uniform Parentage Act. Failure to rebut the presumption that petitioner's husband was the natural father of the child within 5 years (see 1993 amendment) of the child's birth bars a paternity action against a nonpresumed person. Borchers v. McCarter, 181 M 169, 592 P2d 941 (1979). See also In re W.C., 206 M 432, 671 P2d 621, 40 St. Rep. 1762 (1983), holding that Borchers was not overruled by St. v. Wilson, 193 M 318, 631 P2d 1273, 38 St. Rep. 1299 (1981).

Attorney General's Opinions

No Revival of Previously Barred Paternity Actions by Adoption of New Statute of Limitations: In conformity with the general rule disfavoring retroactive application of legislation, the 1987 change in the statute of limitations for paternity actions initiated by a state agency did not revive actions barred under the previous statute of limitations. 42 A.G. Op. 99 (1988).

40-6-109. Jurisdiction — venue.

Commissioners' Comment

The court having jurisdiction over actions under this Act should be identified here. To avoid multiplicity of actions, the bracketed clause would allow joinder of the action to ascertain paternity with an action for divorce, annulment, separate maintenance, or support. This might be considered in choosing the court which is given jurisdiction over actions under this Act.

Subsection (b) [(2)] provides a novel, but not unheard of, extension of the "long arm" concept. Cf. Poindexter v. Willis, 87 Ill.App.2d 213, 23 N.E.2d 1 (5th Dist. 1967). The venue provision in Subsection (c) provides choices considered reasonable and convenient.

Venue — Action for Approval of Parental Release: Section 40-6-109 does not provide significant guidance as to venue in an action to obtain court approval of a parental release. Venue in such an action was properly in Cascade County, since the child was born in Cascade County and the natural mother was a resident of Cascade County. Commissioners' Comment

This Section emphasizes that the child is a party to the action. While this is a departure from the law of a number of states which have viewed the mother as the sole party in interest, this provision is considered a necessary consequence of the U.S. Supreme Court decisions establishing the child's substantive rights vis-a-vis his father. The mother or father may not represent the child in the action, since their interests may conflict with those of the child.

He alleged that the section violated his civil rights. The Supreme Court declined to consider the appellant's attack on an isolated section of the Uniform Parentage Act as adopted in Montana. The Act must be construed as a whole. The "reasonableness" requirement of the fourth amendment and of Art. II, sec. 11, Mont. Const., could be established by an affirmative showing by the movant that there existed a prima facie case against the putative father. After that, a blood test could be taken. The failure to follow the statutory procedures to establish reasonableness prior to the ordering of the "search" rendered the search a violation of the accused's rights under the fourth amendment and the Montana Constitution to be secure from "unreasonable" search. The contempt order was vacated and the case remanded for further proceedings. Rose v. District Court, 192 M 341, 628 P2d 662, 38 St. Rep. 830 (1981).

Commissioners' Comment

It is expected that blood test evidence will go far toward stimulating voluntary settlements of actions to determine paternity. In this connection, proposed legislation currently pending in the U.S. Senate, should be considered. Senate Bill 2081, 93d Congress, 1st Sess. (June 27, 1973), looks toward the establishment of a national system of federally assisted child support enforcement and provides for an efficient system of blood typing:

"REGIONAL LABORATORIES TO ESTABLISH PATERNITY
THROUGH ANALYSIS AND CLASSIFICATION OF BLOOD

"Sec. 458. (a) The Secretary shall, after appropriate consultation and study of the use of blood typing as evidence in judicial proceedings to determine paternity, establish, or arrange for the establishment or designation of, in each region of the United States, a laboratory which he determines to be qualified to provide services in analyzing and classifying blood for the purpose of determining paternity, and which is prepared to provide such services to courts and public agencies in the region to be served by it.

"(b) Whenever a laboratory is established or designated for any region by the Secretary under this section, he shall take such measures as may be appropriate to notify appropriate courts and public agencies (including agencies administering any public welfare program within such region) that such laboratory has been so established or designated to provide services, in analyzing and classifying blood for the purpose of determining paternity, for courts and public agencies in such region.

"(c) The facilities of any such laboratory shall be made available without cost to courts and public agencies in the region to be served by it.

"(d) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

"SUPPORT COLLECTION SERVICES FOR OTHER INDIVIDUALS

"Sec. 459. The child support collection or paternity determination services established under this part shall be made available to any individual not otherwise eligible for such services under the preceding sections of this part upon application filed by such individual with the Attorney General or, if a State or political subdivision has a program approved under section 454, with such State or political subdivision as may be appropriate. The Attorney General (or a State or political subdivision) shall impose an application fee for furnishing such services. Any costs in excess of the fee so imposed shall be paid by such individual by deducting such costs from the amount of any recovery made."

Centralized blood typing facilities already exist in Oslo, Copenhagen and Stockholm and serve the whole of their respective countries. Over several decades, great expertise has been developed. (See generally, Henningsen, Some Aspects of Blood Grouping in Cases of Disputed Paternity in Denmark, 2 Methods of Forensic Science 209 (1963); Henningsen, On the Application of Bloodtests to Legal Cases of Disputed Paternity, 12 Revue de Transfusion 137 (1969); P. Andresen, The Human Blood Groups 73 (1952).) The Scandinavian laboratories are distinguished not only in terms of their use of complex and advanced blood typing systems, but also in terms of highly developed safety procedures which assure accuracy of the results they report. This latter point may be the most important element of blood typing. There can be little doubt that it would be better not to admit blood tests into evidence at all than to admit unreliable evidence under the halo of scientific truth—as has too often been done in the United States where a re-check of even relatively simple tests revealed about one-third of them to have been in error! (See Wiener, Foreword, L. Sussman, Blood Grouping Tests—Medicolegal Uses, ix (1968); See also Wiener, Problems and Pitfalls in Blood Grouping Tests for Non-Parentage, 15 Journal of Forensic Medicine 106, 126 (1968).) The Copenhagen laboratory (and the practice in Stockholm and Oslo is similar) employs two sets of systems in "layers", the routine blood group determination resulting in exclusion of paternity for about 70 per cent of non-fathers and an extended blood group determination which increases paternity exclusions to about 90 per cent of non-fathers. While an exclusion figure approximating 90 per cent of men falsely named as fathers is impressive, cases which do not produce an exclusion are pursued further on the basis of a "blood group paternity index" by means of which the "probability" of the named man's paternity is estimated. (See Gurtler, Principles of Blood Group Statistical Evaluation of Paternity Cases at the University Institute of Forensic Medicine, Copenhagen, 9 Acta Medicinae et Socialis 83 (1956).) That index compares the frequency of a given father-mother-child blood constellation in a sample of actual fathers with the blood constellation in a sample of non-fathers and is related to the constellation obtained in the case in question. If the resemblance exceeds 95 per cent or falls below 5 per cent, the result is reported to the court. At the outer limits, this approach produces de facto inclusions or exclusions. In less extreme cases, it produces interesting circumstantial evidence. It is of particular value, of course, when the relative likelihood of paternity of several possible fathers is to be compared. See generally, Krause, Illegitimacy: Law and Social Policy, 123-44 (1971).

Paternity Contested After Adjudication of Marital Dissolution — Relitigation Barred by Collateral Estoppel: When paternity was contested in response to an action to collect past child support payments, the District Court properly ruled that the issue of paternity had previously been adjudicated during the marriage dissolution proceeding and that relitigation of the issue was barred by collateral estoppel. Commissioners' Comment

The settlement procedures contemplated by this Section are voluntary. If any party refuses to accept a settlement recommendation, the action will be set for trial. It is expected, however, that, as soon as reliable blood test evidence becomes available on a large scale, the great majority of cases will be settled consensually in the light of such evidence.

40-6-115. Civil action.

Commissioners' Comment

Subsection (a)[(1)] makes it clear that the action to establish paternity is a civil action. A number of states have continued to view the action as criminal or quasi-criminal, although a majority of states now treats the paternity action as a civil proceeding.

Subsections (b)[(2)] and (c)[(3)] deal with the problem of the exceptio plurium concumbentium and, more specifically, the problem of perjured testimony concerning alleged sexual access to the mother offered by other men on behalf of the alleged father. It is recognized that in rare cases, these provisions may result in the exclusion of "honest" evidence. However, the Committee concluded that this is outweighed by the need for closing the door to the wanton attacks on the mother's character that characterize too many paternity suits under present laws.

The use of a jury is not desirable in the emotional atmosphere of cases of this nature. The clause eliminating the jury is bracketed only because in some states constitutions may prevent elimination of a jury trial in this context.

Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 70 inserted (4) concerning objection by a party and an additional blood test and admissibility of test results if no objection is made; inserted (5) providing that failure to answer or appear at a scheduled hearing or for a scheduled blood test results in declaring the alleged father the legal father of the child; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Case Notes

Standard Governing Custody and Visitation Decisions — Best Interests of Child — Whether or Not Parents Married: In an action filed under 40-6-115, the father of a child sought to establish paternity of the child and petitioned for joint custody, visitation rights, and settlement of child support. The District Court awarded sole custody to the mother and granted the father limited visitation rights. The father appealed, claiming that it was a denial of equal protection of the law to determine his parental rights under the Uniform Parentage Act, Title 40, ch. 6, part 1, rather than under Title 40, ch. 4, the chapter that would have governed the case had he and the child's mother been married. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that the standard for determination of child custody and visitation, best interests of the child, was the same in both laws, and the legally proper result was the same. Schuman v. Bestrom, 214 M 410, 693 P2d 536, 42 St. Rep. 54 (1985).

40-6-116. Judgment or order.

Commissioners' Comment

This section allows a wide range of court orders to be made relating to the child's support, custody, guardianship, visitation privileges, as well as to the payment by the father of the mother's expenses of pregnancy and confinement. Since current state law often does not provide guidelines to help the judge in setting support obligations, Subsections (d) [(4)] and (e) [(5)] provide flexible standards based on criteria now generally accepted. [See 1989 amendment note.]

2001 Amendment: Chapter 542 substituted (10) concerning modification of judgment, decree, or order establishing child support obligation for "(10) Each district court judgment, decree, or order establishing a final child support obligation under this part and each modification of a final order for child support must contain a statement that the order is subject to review and modification by the department of public health and human services upon the request of the department or a party under 40-5-271 through 40-5-273 when the department is providing services under Title IV-D of the Social Security Act for the enforcement of the order." Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 552 inserted (6)(d) subjecting child support obligations established under this section to the registration and processing provisions of chapter 5, part 9; inserted (8)(c) providing that if an obligor is excepted from income withholding, the support order must provide that if the case is receiving Title IV-D services, support must be paid through the Department; inserted (9) requiring the parties to file and keep up-to-date certain information and requiring notice and service of process by mail in certain cases for former (9) that read: "For the purposes of income withholding as provided in subsection (8), whenever the district court establishes or modifies a child support obligation, the judgment, decree, or order must include a provision requiring the parent obligated to pay support to inform the court and, if the department of public health and human services is providing services under Title IV-D of the Social Security Act for the enforcement of the judgment, decree, or order, the department, of the following:

(a) the name and address of the parent's current employer;

(b) whether the parent has access to health insurance through an employer or other group; and

(c) if insurance coverage is available, the health insurance policy information"; inserted (11) requiring the Social Security number of a person subject to a paternity determination to be in the records and requiring the recordkeeper to keep the number from this source confidential except for providing it to the Department for Title IV-D purposes; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Contingent Termination — Request for Federal Exemptions: Section 104, Ch. 552, L. 1997, contained the following contingent termination provisions and order that the Department of Public Health and Human Services seek federal exemptions:

"(1) [Sections 9, 11, 22 through 24, 93, and 95] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, 40-4-105, 40-5-922, 40-5-924, 50-15-403, and 61-5-107] and the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminate on the date of the suspension if the federal government suspends federal payments to this state for this state's child support enforcement program and for this state's program relating to temporary assistance to needy families because of this state's failure to enact law as required by the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996.

(2) [Sections 9, 11, 22 through 24, 93, and 95] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, 40-4-105, 40-5-922, 40-5-924, 50-15-403, and 61-5-107] and the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminate on the date that a final decision is rendered in federal court invalidating the child support provisions of the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996.

(3) If the director of the department of public health and human services certifies to the governor and the secretary of state in writing that one of the following provisions is no longer required by federal law because of repeal of or amendment to federal statutes that require that provision, the provision terminates on the date the certification takes effect:

(a) [section 9] [40-5-922];

(b) [section 11] [40-5-924];

(c) [sections 22 through 24] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, and 40-4-105];

(d) [section 93] [50-15-403];

(e) [section 95] [61-5-107];

(f) the bracketed provisions in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116].

(4) If the director of the department of public health and human services certifies to the governor and the secretary of state in writing that the federal government has granted this state an exemption from one of the following provisions, the provision terminates on the date the exemption takes effect:

(a) [section 9] [40-5-922];

(b) [section 11] [40-5-924];

(c) [sections 22 through 24] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, and 40-4-105];

(d) [section 93] [50-15-403, certification filed April 24, 1998];

(e) [section 95] [61-5-107];

(f) the bracketed provisions in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116].

(5) (a) The department of public health and human services shall do everything reasonably within its power to obtain, as soon as possible, federal government exemptions from the provisions listed in subsection (4).

(b) Because section 395(c) of the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996 (PRWORA) allows a grace period for states to amend their constitutions in order to comply with PRWORA and because the Montana legislature believes that the section of PRWORA prohibiting a jury trial in a paternity proceeding violates Article II, section 26, of the Montana constitution and is therefore rejected, the department of public health and human services shall seek a federal government exemption from the jury trial prohibition in PRWORA as the first exemption it seeks under subsection (5)(a). [This exemption was received on December 8, 1997.]

(6) [Sections 9, 11, 22 through 24, 93, and 95] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, 40-4-105, 40-5-922, 40-5-924, 50-15-403, and 61-5-107] and the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminate July 1, 1999.

(7) If the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminates, the code commissioner is instructed to renumber subsections, adjust internal references, and correct grammar and arrangement."

1995 Amendments: Chapter 504 in (7), after "or order", inserted "whether temporary or final" and after "include" substituted "a medical support order as defined in 40-5-804" for "a provision addressing health insurance coverage in the following cases:

(a) If either party has available through an employer or other organization health insurance coverage for the child or children for which the premium is partially or entirely paid by the employer or organization, the judgment or order may contain a provision requiring that coverage for the child or children be continued or obtained.

(b) In the event that health insurance required in a child support judgment or order becomes unavailable to the party who is to provide it, through loss or change of employment or otherwise, that party shall, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, obtain comparable insurance or request that the court modify the requirement.

(c) The parties may by written agreement provide for the health care coverage required by this section, subject to the approval of the court.

(d) Unless otherwise provided in the decree, the health care coverage required by this section is in addition to and not in substitution, in whole or in part, for the child support obligation"; deleted former (10) that read: "(10) If the department of social and rehabilitation services is providing or later provides support enforcement services under Title IV-D of the Social Security Act, each district court order or modification of an order must contain a statement providing that the noncustodial parent, without further order of the court, is required to obtain and maintain health insurance coverage as provided in 40-5-208. Failure to include a warning statement in the judgment or order does not preclude the imposition of sanctions under 40-5-208"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 546 in (6)(a), (9), and (10) substituted "department of public health and human services" for "department of social and rehabilitation services"; and at beginning of (8)(b) deleted "After October 1, 1993". Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 504, L. 1995, provided: "WHEREAS, it is appropriate to draft a bill specifically to present proposed program improvements for medical support enforcement in a single, comprehensive bill that promotes the needs of legislative energy, efficiency, and economy by limiting the number of possible bills and by reducing the need for hearings and readings on those bills; and

WHEREAS, parents should be held responsible for providing medical care for their children, whether or not the parents voluntarily do so."

1995 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 504, L. 1995, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because it grants rulemaking authority to the department of social and rehabilitation services to adopt rules for expedited procedures."

Saving Clause: Section 571, Ch. 546, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

1993 Amendments: Chapter 294 in (6)(a), near middle, inserted second sentence requiring use of guidelines in all cases, inserted third sentence concerning verified representation of income, and in fourth sentence inserted first clause concerning presumption of adequate and reasonable support; in (6)(b), in first sentence, substituted "finds that the guideline amount is unjust or inappropriate in a particular case" for "does not apply these standards and guidelines to determine child support" and inserted last two sentences concerning agreement on support amount and statement of ordinary support amount when varied; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 9, 1993.

Chapter 631 inserted (8)(b) regarding withholding on weekly or biweekly basis; and made minor changes in style.

1991 Amendments: Chapter 266 inserted (11) requiring statement relating to review and modification of orders by Department.

Chapter 635 deleted former (8) that read: "(8) (a) Except as provided in subsection (8)(b), each district court judgment or order establishing a child support obligation under this part, whether temporary or final, and each modification of an existing child support order must:

(i) provide that the amount of child support must be withheld from the obligor's income and paid to the department pursuant to procedures established by the department under Title 40, chapter 5, part 4; and

(ii) include the obligor's social security number and the name and address of the obligor's employer and of any other payor of income to the obligor.

(b) Income is not subject to automatic withholding if:

(i) the obligee or obligor demonstrates and the court finds that there is good cause not to require automatic income withholding; or

(ii) the obligee and obligor agree in writing to an alternative arrangement regarding the payment of child support that provides sufficient security to ensure compliance with their agreement. The security is in addition to the child support obligation.

(c) When a judgment or order for child support is entered or modified and automatic income withholding is ordered, an obligee who is not a recipient of public assistance shall apply for the support enforcement services of the department pursuant to Title IV-D of the Social Security Act for the collection of support through automatic income withholding under Title 40, chapter 5, part 4. The department shall accept the application. Pending an application, the department shall immediately implement automatic income withholding and hold any amounts collected in trust for the obligee until the obligee makes application.

(d) When automatic income withholding is ordered under subsection (8)(a), the clerk of court shall immediately forward a copy of the order to the department"; inserted (8) providing for enforcement of support obligation by immediate or delinquency income withholding; and inserted (9) requiring court to require an obligated parent to provide certain information. Amendment effective April 24, 1991.

Severability: Section 24, Ch. 635, L. 1991, was a severability section.

1989 Amendment: In (3)(a), after "concerning", deleted "the duty of support"; inserted (3)(b) requiring that judgment or order refer to child support; in (5)(a) inserted "including his medical needs"; inserted (5)(j) relating to cost of day care; inserted (5)(k) relating to custody arrangements; inserted (6) requiring application of standards and guidelines, stating that finding is required for nonapplication of standards and guidelines, and requiring court to state reasons for not ordering child support; inserted (7) relating to health insurance coverage; inserted (8) requiring automatic income withholding, stating circumstances when income is not subject to automatic withholding, and requiring application for and immediate implementation of automatic income withholding; inserted (9) relating to a warning statement concerning required health insurance coverage; and made minor changes in punctuation and form.

Applicability: Section 32, Ch. 702, L. 1989, provided: "[This act] applies to child support orders and modifications of child support orders issued after September 30, 1989."

Guidelines for Determining Child Support: On January 13, 1987, the Supreme Court adopted A Uniform District Court Rule on Child Support Guidelines proposed by the Montana Child Support Advisory Council as the result of a study prompted by the 1984 enactment of 42 U.S.C. 667. The federal statute required establishment of guidelines by each state as a condition for having the state plan approved for participation in Public Health and Welfare programs of the federal government. The guidelines may be found in the State Reporter, Vol. 44, pp. 828-842 (1987). See also 1989 amendment that provides the court shall apply the guidelines in determining the child support obligation.

Findings of District Court Regarding Custody of Child With Mother Not Erroneous Despite Evidence of Inappropriate Physical Contact Between Child and Mother's Relative: As part of a paternity action, the mother was awarded primary physical custody, and the father appealed. An amended parenting plan arrived at during mediation gave each parent physical custody of the child during alternating months. Near the end of one month's visit with the father, the child divulged that inappropriate physical contact with her stepgrandfather had occurred while in the mother's custody. The father moved for modification of the parenting plan. The District Court was faced with conflicting evidence in the case, receiving testimony from the stepgrandfather that no inappropriate touching occurred, as well as testimony from professionals who opined that sexual abuse had occurred. Additional expert testimony suggested that the child's constant travel was a possible cause of her troubling behavior and that the experts who suggested that sexual abuse occurred had not followed standard protocols when interviewing the child. Lay testimony indicated that it was unlikely that the stepgrandfather had an opportunity to commit the alleged abuse. The court ultimately determined that sexual abuse had not been proved. The father appealed on grounds that the court's findings were insufficient, that the court erred in not giving the father custody based on the evidence presented, and that the court erred by apparently rejecting the testimony of the child's clinical psychologist and the disclosures made by the child relating to sexual abuse. The Supreme Court noted that credibility determinations are within the province of the trier of fact and held that, in light of the conflicting testimony, the trial court's findings and conclusions were sufficient to support the court's decision. Although the trial court did not specifically articulate the elements of 40-4-212, it clearly made determinations that it considered to be in the child's best interests. Failure to list the contentions of a particular witness, such as the child's clinical psychologist, was not sufficient to determine a per se abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court. Without a clear showing of abuse of discretion, the Supreme Court declined to disturb the decision and affirmed the denial of the father's motion to modify the parenting plan. Waiver of Back Child Support — Court Retains Discretion Under Guidelines — Constitutional Challenge Raised for First Time on Appeal Not Considered: Following remand from the Supreme Court, the District Court recalculated a child support award but did not order the father to pay any back child support. When the District Court was presented with abundant evidence on the proper amount of past child support due under child support guidelines and the amount of additional back support (none) was within the range of the evidence presented, the District Court did not err in waiving past child support. When the mother's argument that child support statutes discriminate between legitimate and illegitimate children was raised for the first time on appeal, the Supreme Court did not consider argument. In re Paternity of W.L., 270 M 484, 893 P2d 332, 52 St. Rep. 301 (1995).

Application of Child Support Guidelines in Effect at Time of Decision: As set out in In re Marriage of Johnston & Turrin, 255 M 421, 843 P2d 760, 49 St. Rep. 1047 (1992), District Courts are to determine child support obligations according to the guidelines in effect at the time that the court makes its decision. The court has considerable discretion to deviate from the child support guidelines if it finds by clear and convincing evidence that application of the standards and guidelines is unjust to the child or any of the parties or is inappropriate to a particular case. If the court decides to apply an older version of the guidelines, it must state its reasons for finding that the guidelines are not applicable. In re Paternity of W.L., 259 M 187, 855 P2d 521, 50 St. Rep. 751 (1993). For the decision on remand, see In re Paternity of W.L., 270 M 484, 893 P2d 332, 52 St. Rep. 301 (1995).

Lost Wages Not Reasonable Expense of Pregnancy and Confinement: This section may not be interpreted so broadly as to include lost wages as a reasonable expense of the mother's pregnancy and confinement. In re Paternity of W.L., 259 M 187, 855 P2d 521, 50 St. Rep. 751 (1993).

Calculation of Support Obligation — "Carlson" Formula as Guideline Only: As in proceedings for the determination of support under 40-4-204, the formula set out in Carlson v. Carlson, 214 M 209, 693 P2d 496, 41 St. Rep. 2419 (1984), is only a guideline for determination of support in paternity actions. It was not an abuse of District Court discretion, considering the exigencies of the case, to fail to follow the formula. (See 1989 amendment that provides the court shall apply the Uniform Child Support Guidelines adopted by the Supreme Court in 1987 at 44 St. Rep. 828.) State ex rel. Sorenson v. Roske, 229 M 151, 745 P2d 365, 44 St. Rep. 1854 (1987).

Standard Governing Custody and Visitation Decisions — Best Interests of Child — Whether or Not Parents Married: In an action filed under 40-6-115, the father of a child sought to establish paternity of the child and petitioned for joint custody, visitation rights, and settlement of child support. The District Court awarded sole custody to the mother and granted the father limited visitation rights. The father appealed, claiming that it was a denial of equal protection of the law to determine his parental rights under the Uniform Parentage Act, Title 40, ch. 6, part 1, rather than under Title 40, ch. 4, the chapter that would have governed the case had he and the child's mother been married. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that the standard for determination of child custody and visitation, best interests of the child, was the same in both laws, and the legally proper result was the same. Schuman v. Bestrom, 214 M 410, 693 P2d 536, 42 St. Rep. 54 (1985).

Findings of District Court Regarding Custody of Child With Mother Not Erroneous Despite Evidence of Inappropriate Physical Contact Between Child and Mother's Relative: As part of a paternity action, the mother was awarded primary physical custody, and the father appealed. An amended parenting plan arrived at during mediation gave each parent physical custody of the child during alternating months. Near the end of one month's visit with the father, the child divulged that inappropriate physical contact with her stepgrandfather had occurred while in the mother's custody. The father moved for modification of the parenting plan. The District Court was faced with conflicting evidence in the case, receiving testimony from the stepgrandfather that no inappropriate touching occurred, as well as testimony from professionals who opined that sexual abuse had occurred. Additional expert testimony suggested that the child's constant travel was a possible cause of her troubling behavior and that the experts who suggested that sexual abuse occurred had not followed standard protocols when interviewing the child. Lay testimony indicated that it was unlikely that the stepgrandfather had an opportunity to commit the alleged abuse. The court ultimately determined that sexual abuse had not been proved. The father appealed on grounds that the court's findings were insufficient, that the court erred in not giving the father custody based on the evidence presented, and that the court erred by apparently rejecting the testimony of the child's clinical psychologist and the disclosures made by the child relating to sexual abuse. The Supreme Court noted that credibility determinations are within the province of the trier of fact and held that, in light of the conflicting testimony, the trial court's findings and conclusions were sufficient to support the court's decision. Although the trial court did not specifically articulate the elements of 40-4-212, it clearly made determinations that it considered to be in the child's best interests. Failure to list the contentions of a particular witness, such as the child's clinical psychologist, was not sufficient to determine a per se abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court. Without a clear showing of abuse of discretion, the Supreme Court declined to disturb the decision and affirmed the denial of the father's motion to modify the parenting plan. In re Paternity & Custody of A.D.V., 2001 MT 74, 305 M 62, 22 P3d 1124 (2001).

Failure to Provide Child Support for College Education — Continuing Jurisdiction Under Uniform Parentage Act: Mother contended that the District Court erred in failing to order father to pay child support for the child's college education, maintaining that the court could not later modify support to extend beyond the child's emancipation because it was not provided in an original decree. However, the case was brought under the Uniform Parentage Act; therefore, this section rather than 40-4-208 applies. Under this section, the court retains jurisdiction to modify its initial support order to provide for the child's educational needs, and failure to do so as part of the initial order was not error. 40-6-121. Action to declare mother and child relationship.

Commissioners' Comment

This Section permits the declaration of the mother and child relationship where that is in dispute. Since it is not believed that cases of this nature will arise frequently, Sections 4 to 20 [40-6-105 to 40-6-121] are written principally in terms of the ascertainment of paternity. While it is obvious that certain provisions in these Sections would not apply in an action to establish the mother and child relationship, the Committee decided not to burden these—already complex—provisions with references to the ascertainment of maternity. In any given case, a judge facing a claim for the determination of the mother and child relationship should have little difficulty deciding which portions of Sections 4 to 20 [40-6-105 to 40-6-121] should be applied.

Commissioners' Comment

This permits any written promise to furnish support for a child based on a supposed or alleged father and child relationship to be enforced in accordance with its terms, with the exception of stipulations that seek to bar a paternity action. Since existing law adequately covers this area, it was considered unnecessary to spell out that the agreement may be avoided if it is shown that the agreement was based on a mutual mistake or fraud relating to the existence of the father and the child relationship. In view of the possibly sensitive nature of such a promise, the provision relating to confidentiality is considered useful.

Part 2
Obligations of Parents

Part Case Notes

No Standing by Former Parent to Object to Child's Placement or Assert Child's Rights: Once the parent-child relationship is terminated by the District Court, a former parent has no standing to object to the court's subsequent placement of the child with the Department or by adoption. Similarly, a former parent has no standing to assert a violation of the child's rights as guardian ad litem because the former parent no longer represents the child. In re E.A.T. & T.A.T., 1999 MT 281, 296 M 535, 989 P2d 860, 56 St. Rep. 1133 (1999).

No Liability of Parent Guardian for Paternity by Minor Child: Defendants were sued in their capacity as guardians of their minor son for the expenses incurred in connection with the birth of an illegitimate child fathered by their son. A default judgment was rendered against the defendants. The Supreme Court reversed and vacated the default judgment, holding that the guardians' duty to safeguard the rights of their son during the legal proceeding did not subject them to personal liability for their son's allegedly wrongful acts. The Supreme Court also held that because the title of the case, the allegations in the complaint, and all motions at trial addressed the defendants in their capacity as guardians, they had insufficient notice of any likelihood of personal liability. Breuer v. Poe, 245 M 22, 797 P2d 944, 47 St. Rep. 1812 (1990).

Restitution of Child Support Overpayments: There can be no restitution where it was just that the payment should have been made and where, as between the parties, it would be inequitable to require any repayment. Here, however, restitution of overpayment of child support cannot be considered inequitable as between the parties since the defendant has apparently received more child support money than the divorce decree considered adequate. There is no allegation that the amounts decreed were inadequate, and the defendant has never attempted to modify the decree to increase the child support payments. Hereford v. Hereford, 183 M 104, 598 P2d 600 (1979).

Legitimacy Presumed: A child is presumed to be legitimate if the mother and father were married. Spradlin v. U.S., 262 F. Supp. 502 (D.C. Mont. 1967).

Rebuttable Presumption May Be Overcome by a Preponderance of Conflicting Evidence: Disputable presumption that a child born in lawful wedlock is legitimate is successfully controverted by other evidence when the preponderance of the evidence is contrary thereto. In re Wray's Estate, 93 M 525, 19 P2d 1051 (1933).

Evidence Sufficient to Rebut Presumption to Be Strong, Distinct, and Wholly Satisfactory: A child conceived prior to marriage of mother but born in wedlock is presumed legitimate, as presumption cannot be overcome by circumstances which only create doubt or suspicion; to overcome it, the evidence must be strong, distinct, and wholly satisfactory. Case Notes

Elements Necessary for Minor Child to Establish Claim for Loss of Parental Consortium: In Montana, the elements necessary for a minor child to establish a claim for loss of parental consortium are: (1) a third party tortiously causes the parent to suffer a serious, permanent, and disabling mental or physical injury compensable under Montana law; and (2) the parent's ultimate condition of mental or physical impairment must be so overwhelming and severe that it causes the parent-child relationship to be destroyed or nearly destroyed. If the tortfeasor is not subject to liability to the parent under tort principles, the child cannot sustain a cause of action for loss of parental consortium. If the parent could not recover from the tortfeasor for purely mental or emotional injury absent a physical component, the child cannot bring an action for consortium loss resulting from that injury. The destruction or near destruction of the parent-child relationship is a necessary element in establishing the cause of action, not merely a factor in computing damages. Keele v. St. Vincent Hosp. & Health Care Center, 258 M 158, 852 P2d 574, 50 St. Rep. 475 (1993), following Villareal v. Dept. of Transportation, 774 P2d 213 (Ariz. 1989).

Right of Child to Cause of Action for Loss of Parental Consortium — Injury by Third Party: Minor children are entitled to the support, aid, protection, affection, society, discipline, guidance, and training of their parents. Therefore, a minor child who has been deprived of these rights by the tortious injury to a parent by a third party has a separate cause of action for loss of parental consortium. However, any one element of damages for the injury may be recovered only once. Pence v. Fox, 248 M 521, 813 P2d 429, 48 St. Rep. 550 (1991).

Noncustodial Parent Not Relieved of Support Obligation: Father argued that this section precluded relief for children seeking prospective child support unless there was a showing that the mother, as custodial parent, could no longer provide the minor children with support and education suitable to their circumstances. However, this statute does not relieve a noncustodial parent of obligations of support under Montana's child support laws. In re Support of Krug, 231 M 78, 751 P2d 171, 45 St. Rep. 446 (1988).

Interpretation of Decree Provision on Termination of Support Obligation: In the decree of dissolution, the paragraph immediately following the paragraph concerning payment of child support provided that "Upon termination of the child support obligation" the appellant must pay the respondent maintenance until her death or remarriage. A dispute arose over the meaning of "termination of the child support obligation". The Supreme Court held that the District Court's ruling that the obligation terminated when the appellant stopped making monthly child support payments, rather than when the youngest child turned 18, was not clearly erroneous. In re Marriage of Jones, 218 M 441, 709 P2d 158, 42 St. Rep. 1722 (1985).

Payments Made Directly to Children: The obligation to pay child support is not discharged by payment to the children themselves when the support order directs that payment be made to the children's mother. State of Oregon ex rel. Worden v. Drinkwalter, 216 M 9, 700 P2d 150, 42 St. Rep. 599 (1985).

"Child" Defined — Majority Age: Upon attaining the age of 18 a person is an adult and is no longer a "child" within the purview of 40-6-211 of whom parents are entitled to custody or to whom parents are obligated for support, despite the fact that at the time of the decree the legal age was 21. Chrestenson v. Chrestenson, 180 M 96, 589 P2d 148 (1979).

Child Support Money Decreed by District Court to Be Kept Current Until Final Determination of Appeal: Where husband was in arrears of child support payments, court held it will not sanction nonpayment of support money decreed in District Court on appeal where need for such funds are shown, but will require that such support payments be kept current until final determination of appeal. Court ordered appeal to be dismissed, unless payment of arrears was made within 10 days. Woolverton v. Woolverton, 169 M 490, 549 P2d 458 (1976).

Compliance With Section Need Only Be Reasonable: While this section would require a high school education, it is doubtful if the parent could be required to pay tuition at a parochial school.

Certainly a parent is not required to provide a Scout automobile for his children, buy musical instruments, or give them music lessons in the name of education. Brooke v. U.S., 292 F. Supp. 571 (D.C. Mont. 1968), modified in 300 F. Supp. 465 (D.C. Mont. 1969), affirmed in 468 F2d 1155 (9th Cir. 1972).

Reasonable Compliance Required: This section clearly requires support for a high school education. Compliance need only be reasonable however, and parochial school and extravagances are not required. Brooke v. U.S., 292 F. Supp. 571 (D.C. Mont. 1968), modified in 300 F. Supp. 465 (D.C. Mont. 1969), affirmed in 468 F2d 1155 (9th Cir. 1972).

Omission to Perform Act of Support: Evidence that child, 5 months old, died due to starvation, that his weight at death was only 10 ounces over birthweight, and that father and mother had means with which to care for child was sufficient to support conviction of manslaughter. St. v. Bischert, 131 M 152, 308 P2d 969 (1957), distinguished in St. v. Rivers, 133 M 129, 320 P2d 1004 (1958).

Enforcement of Child Support Order: Divorce court possesses power to compel ex-husband to support his minor children. State ex rel. Lay v. District Court, 122 M 61, 198 P2d 761 (1948).

Father's Duty When Mother Has Custody: When mother has custody of children but cannot alone carry the burden of education and support, the burden must, at least in part, be borne by the father, and this may extend to expense of college education for the children. Refer v. Refer, 102 M 121, 56 P2d 750 (1936).

Agreement Between Husband and Wife: While agreement between husband and wife as to custody and child support will be enforced, it cannot, as against the children, divest either parent of the duty to support and educate them as the interest of the children is paramount. Brice v. Brice, 50 M 388, 147 P 164 (1915), explained in Refer v. Refer, 102 M 121, 56 P2d 750 (1936), and State ex rel. Tong v. District Court, 109 M 418, 96 P2d 918 (1939).

Amendment effective April 23, 2001.

Case Notes

State — Third "Person": Including the State as a "person" in the context of 40-6-215 was held proper in an action to recover amounts paid through Aid to Dependent Children (changed to Aid to Families With Dependent Children, now FAIM financial assistance) for the support and necessaries of children, as it was beneficial to the State and general public. St. v. Hultgren, 168 M 257, 541 P2d 1211 (1975).

Wife Not Neglectful Parent: Where wife initiated proceedings under Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (now Uniform Interstate Family Support Act) and claim was settled by agreement with former husband, State cannot recover under this section from wife for reasonable value of necessaries supplied through payments by Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) as husband, not wife, was a neglectful parent in not making his child support payments. 40-6-217. Married person not bound for support of spouse's children by former marriage.

Case Notes

Consideration of Support of Stepchildren in Divorce Proceeding: In an appeal of a decree of dissolution of marriage, the husband claimed District Court error in that the court did not find that the wife made a negative contribution to the marriage because the wife and her two sons consumed three-fourths of the marital income while she contributed only one-third of that income. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that evidence presented by the husband did not rebut the presumption set forth in 40-6-217 that his support of the wife's sons was given as a parent. In re Marriage of Peterson, 211 M 118, 683 P2d 1304, 41 St. Rep. 1252 (1984).

Child Support — Assets of Present Spouse Unavailable: In an action to increase child support payments, the trial court considered the income of the father's present wife in its determination of the father's ability to pay increased child support. The clear effect of the court's order is to make the father's present spouse's property or income indirectly available to pay child support for her husband's children by a previous marriage. This cannot be done. Duffey v. Duffey, 193 M 241, 631 P2d 697, 38 St. Rep. 1105 (1981).

Consideration of Support of Stepchildren in Divorce Proceeding: A stepparent who receives stepchildren into his family and supports them is presumed to do so as a parent. A parent is not bound to compensate the other parent for the voluntary support of his child without an agreement for compensation. Since no agreement was made, the husband's support of his stepchildren during the marriage could not properly be considered in the disposition of the marital estate. Schultz v. Schultz, 183 M 20, 597 P2d 1174 (1979).

Unreasonable Refusal to Return Home as Constituting Abandonment: Where for 4 years wife refused to return to home provided by husband because he declined to also receive into the family her son by a former marriage who was capable of caring for himself, which husband is not legally obligated to do, her refusal was unreasonable and constituted desertion on her part, and under this section husband was not liable for her support. Goodwin v. Elm Orlu Min. Co., 83 M 152, 269 P 403 (1928).

Separate Maintenance: In an action for separate maintenance court cannot under this section make provision for children of plaintiff by former marriage. Decker v. Decker, 56 M 338, 185 P 168 (1919).

Best Interest of Child Standard Unconstitutional in Custody Award to Nonparent Over Natural Parent Absent Finding of Abuse, Neglect, or Dependency: The best interest of the child standard incorporated into 40-4-221 in determining the custody of a child whose custodial parent dies is unconstitutional to the extent that it allows the grant of a petition prior to the termination of the noncustodial parent's constitutional right to custody. Use of the standard is improper in that any showing that a nonparent may be able to provide a better environment than a natural parent is irrelevant to the question of custody between the two in view of the constitutional right of a parent to custody. Although 40-4-221 gives a nonparent standing to request a custody hearing, it does not give the District Court authority to deprive a natural parent of the right to custody absent a finding of abuse, neglect, or dependency on the part of the natural parent. In re A.R.A., 277 M 66, 919 P2d 388, 53 St. Rep. 543 (1996), following In re Doney, 174 M 282, 570 P2d 575 (1977), and overruling Brost v. Jurisdiction to Terminate Parental Right to Custody — Error to Grant Custody to Great Aunt as Opposed to Father: Lisa and John were an unmarried couple who separated after the birth of their son, B.B. A court order established paternity and granted legal and physical custody to Lisa, with visitation by John. After Lisa was convicted of forgery and sentenced to the state prison, John petitioned the District Court for an order granting him physical full custody. At the hearing on the petition, a great aunt introduced substantial evidence of her ability to care for the child and temporary custody was awarded to the aunt. The Supreme Court found that under this section, John had an equal right with Lisa to the custody of B.B. and that before the District Court had jurisdiction to award custody to a great aunt, it must make a finding of abuse or neglect to terminate John's right of custody. Babcock v. Wonnacott, 268 M 149, 885 P2d 522, 51 St. Rep. 1224 (1994). See also In re J.B., 278 M 160, 923 P2d 1096, 53 St. Rep. 901 (1996).

Parent Generally Preferred to Nonparent in Award of Custody: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in finding that a parent was generally preferred to a nonparent in award of custody, given evidence of the parent's good character. Weber v. Van De Kop, 228 M 118, 740 P2d 1139, 44 St. Rep. 1388 (1987).

Providing Alternative Custody Not Considered Abandonment: Upon dissolution of marriage the father was awarded custody of the child. The father, a member of the United States Army, was reassigned to Oklahoma where he lived with the child. Upon discharge, he and the child returned to Great Falls. In May, 1978, the father transferred custody of the child to his brother and sister-in-law in Minnesota in order that he might attend vocational school and become employed. At that time, the father signed and delivered a custodial care authorization to his brother and later requested that his brother adopt the child. The mother contends that this action constituted abandonment and that she was therefore entitled to custody. The trial court held that the father's purpose was to provide a healthy environment for the child rather than to relinquish his parental duties, as his job as a truck driver required extended absences from the child. It was not error to find that no abandonment had occurred under this situation. McLean v. Seright, 187 M 194, 609 P2d 282 (1980).

Basis for Depriving Natural Parent of Custody: The father automatically assumes the right to custody of the children at the moment of the mother's death and a judicial hearing and finding of dependency and neglect under Title 41, ch. 3, part 4, or a judicial finding of willful abandonment or nonsupport under 40-8-111 (now repealed) are the exclusive means by which a natural parent may be involuntarily deprived of custody. Schultz v. Schultz, 184 M 245, 602 P2d 595 (1979), following Henderson v. Henderson, 174 M 1, 568 P2d 177 (1977); In re Guardianship of Doney, 174 M 282, 570 P2d 575 (1977).

Custody of Younger Children Awarded to Father: District Court did not abuse its discretion in awarding custody of two younger children to father who had moved to California, as they have a good home with their father and paternal grandparents, are well cared for and happy, their educational and religious training is being more than adequately fulfilled, and they have lived with their father for more than 5 years. Anderson v. Anderson, 145 M 244, 400 P2d 632 (1965).

"Waiver" as Defense to Habeas Corpus Proceeding: When decree of divorce was rendered in Utah and custody of children was granted to mother, she then had preference right. She waived this right when she offered to give up their custody and father took them to his home in Montana, and she could not deprive father of custody by habeas corpus proceedings in Montana unless he was an unfit person to have custody or unless it was shown that best welfare of children required that they be taken from him. State ex rel. Lessley v. District Court, 132 M 357, 318 P2d 571 (1957).

Presumption in Favor of Parent as Rebuttable: Where custody is in dispute, presumption that best interests of child require that it be awarded to parent is rebuttable; each case must be decided upon its own peculiar facts and circumstances. Haynes v. Fillner, 106 M 59, 75 P2d 802 (1938).

Right of Appeal on Writ of Habeas Corpus: There are two kinds of Writs of Habeas Corpus involving an infant: one directed toward freeing the infant from imprisonment, and the other to exercise powers of court of general equity jurisdiction over custody of person of infant; in the latter class the unsuccessful claimant has right of appeal to Supreme Court. Ex parte Reinhardt, 88 M 282, 292 P 582 (1930).

Favored Position of District Judge's Discretion in Custody Cases on Appeal: Decision of District Judge in a controversy affecting rights to custody of child of tender years ought not be overturned on appeal except upon clear showing of abuse of judicial discretion. Ex parte Bourquin, 88 M 118, 290 P 250 (1930).

Important Consideration as to Custody Preference: A mother who had two infant children sought to regain custody of one by habeas corpus. In determining custody, the court should not overlook the advantage flowing from the companionship of the two, which is important in the development of character and unselfish disposition. Ex parte Bourquin, 88 M 118, 290 P 250 (1930).

Preference of Infant Child as to Custody Between Parent and Grandparent: The law prefers the parent as custodian of an infant child unless parent is incompetent or unfit because of poverty or depravity to provide physical comforts and moral training essential to life and well-being of child. Ex parte Bourquin, 88 M 118, 290 P 250 (1930).

Conduct Which Constitutes Estoppel to Claim Earnings of Minor: While parent is entitled to earnings of minor resulting from obligation of support, privilege may be waived either expressly or by conduct, such as making no objection to employment or where parent testifies in support of claim presented by minor and assigned to and sued upon by another; by so doing parent estops himself from thereafter claiming minor's earnings. Schwab v. Peterson, 80 M 214, 260 P 711 (1927).

Surviving Parent Preferred Over Stranger and Child's Wish: While welfare of child is of paramount interest in determining custody, neither such interest nor the child's wish will justify denial of custody to surviving parent and award of custody to a stranger in absence of showing of unfitness or inability to support child. August v. Burns, 79 M 198, 255 P 737 (1927), followed in Girard v. Williams, 1998 MT 231, 291 M 49, 966 P2d 1155, 55 St. Rep. 965 (1998).

Rights of Custodial Agent in Habeas Corpus Proceeding — Same as Parent: Under this section, father and mother of legitimate, unmarried child are equally entitled to its custody; where father, considering mother unfit to have charge of child, had placed it in care of his sister and her husband, the latter were his agents empowered to resist attempts of mother to regain its custody by habeas corpus, and court could properly permit an investigation into facts which would have been available to father if attempt had been made to take child from him. purpose, it is questionable whether statute can be complied with in that respect by anyone as agent. A child's cause of action for damages for personal injuries is a property right over which, under this section, a parent has no control. Lazich v. Belanger, 111 M 48, 105 P2d 738 (1940).

Child Custody — Remedy for Abuse — Jurisdiction: When a child was present in Montana, having been abandoned by both her natural parents, having been subjected to mistreatment and abuse, and having been threatened with further mistreatment and abuse, her situation met the test for jurisdiction expressed in 40-4-211. Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).

Custody Action as Remedy: Section 40-7-108 describes several criteria by which a District Court may consider whether it is an inconvenient forum but does not create a mandatory duty on the court to dismiss the action upon such grounds. The section is entirely discretionary. The trial court, knowing that the child in question, apparently abandoned by her parents living in California, had been living with relatives in Montana for some time, did not abuse its full discretion in determining it was not an inconvenient forum. Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).

Procedures to Be Rigorously Followed: While there is some overlap in the various statutory schemes governing the termination of parental rights and the custody of children as to general subject matter, each is used for a distinct purpose and sets forth specific procedures which must be rigorously followed before a valid judgment or order may be issued, to insure that the minors involved receive the full protection of these laws. Case Notes

Severance of Parental Rights — Counsel Not Absolutely Required at In-Chambers Interview of Children: In the trial court, a mother's parental rights to her two children were terminated and custody granted to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services). On appeal, the issue was whether the court had erred by interviewing the children in chambers without the presence of the mother and counsel. When the trial court announced to counsel and the mother that it wished to interview both children in chambers, neither counsel nor the mother objected. The mother claimed that the interview of the children without the presence of her counsel violated her rights to due process. She relied on a case in which it was stated that a child may testify out of the parents' presence in abuse and neglect cases subject to the cross-examination by the parents' attorney. The reviewing court noted that nothing in that opinion suggested that it was the duty of the trial judge to assert a parent's right to cross-examination if counsel for the parent does not. Here, in any event, there was no testimony in chambers, just an inquiry into the children's desires regarding custody. A record of the interviews was made and any claimed right of cross-examination was waived by failing to assert that right at the trial level. In re A.C.S. & E.S.S., 190 M 180, 619 P2d 1199, 37 St. Rep. 1868 (1980).

Damage Done on Each of Three Succeeding Days Counts as One Act: When the Legislature enacted the parental liability statutes, it intended that parents not be exposed to substantial liability for their children's damages that were not the fault of the parents. The statutes are clear when they state that the recovery from parents is not to exceed $2,500, plus costs not to exceed $100. Therefore, when multiple acts occur at substantially the same time and to substantially the same property, the parents' maximum liability is $2,500, plus costs not to exceed $100, for each child of the parents. Therefore, when multiple acts occur at substantially the same time and to substantially the same property, the parents' maximum liability is $2,500, plus costs not to exceed $100, for each child of the parents. In this case, a child of the Dempseys and two children of the Doners entered Johnson's salvage yard on each of 3 succeeding days and damaged his property on each day, for a total of claimed damages in excess of $27,750. The Dempseys are liable for $2,500 plus costs for their child, and the Doners are liable for $2,500 plus costs for each of their two children. Johnson v. Dempsey, 273 M 26, 901 P2d 615, 52 St. Rep. 942 (1995).

1993 Amendment: Chapter 435 in (1), near beginning before "ability", inserted "financial" and after "attendance" inserted "and burial, entombment, or cremation costs"; inserted (2) allowing the county or Department to seek reimbursement for burial, entombment, or cremation costs; and made minor changes in style.

Code Commissioner Correction: In (2) the Code Commissioner deleted references to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services and substituted "53-2-804" for "53-3-110". Section 53-2-804 was renumbered 53-3-116 by Ch. 42, L. 1997. Section 53-3-110 was repealed by Ch. 561, L. 1993. Indigent burial responsibility of the Department was removed by Ch. 561, L. 1993, and county authority was enacted in sec. 24, Ch. 561, L. 1993. The authority for the Code Commissioner to make the correction was contained in sec. 84, Ch. 10, L. 1993.

Case Notes

Payments in Support of Nonindigent Parent Not Considered in Modification of Child Support: Parent claimed that the District Court should have deducted, for child support purposes, annual payments of $15,148.58 for a residence, vehicle, and insurance and $225 a month made to his mother for her support, citing his legal obligation under 40-6-301 to support his mother. However, absent proof that his mother was indigent, the trial court was not bound to consider the support of his mother as a legal duty when calculating expenses applicable to child support. Chapter Case Notes

CASES DECIDED UNDER UCCJA

Full Faith and Credit Afforded Out-of-State Renewable Child Support Judgment — Res Judicata Applicable: Article IV, sec. 1, U.S. Const., provides that full faith and credit be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state. As restated in Baker v. Gen. Motors Corp., 522 US 222, 139 L Ed 2d 580, 118 S Ct 657 (1998), a final judgment in one state, if rendered by a court with adjudicatory authority over the subject matter and persons governed by the judgment, qualifies for recognition throughout the land. When issues of jurisdiction have been determined by one court, the doctrine of res judicata precludes a second court from considering jurisdiction as long as the first court fully and fairly considered the issue, and that judgment, as to jurisdiction, is entitled to full faith and credit in the second court. In the present case, a Utah renewable child support judgment, in which the Utah court established jurisdiction of the parties, was entitled to full faith and credit in Montana, despite contentions by the husband that he no longer had minimum contacts with Utah after moving to Montana. The jurisdiction arguments raised before the Montana Supreme Court were identical to the arguments that were previously raised, fairly considered, and finally decided in Utah, precluding relitigation by the Montana court under res judicata. In re Child Support of Mason, 1998 MT 192, 290 M 253, 964 P2d 743, 55 St. Rep. 803 (1998).

Indians — Subject Matter Jurisdiction Over Dissolution of Marriage — Different Residences of Parties — Factors to Be Considered — Bertelson Followed: Stacey, an enrolled member of the Fort Peck Tribes, married Shane, a non-Indian. After the marriage ceremony, Stacey returned to the Fort Peck Indian Reservation and Shane went to Forsyth, where his parents lived and where he worked. Some time later, Stacey had a child who also became an enrolled member and lived with Stacey on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation. Still later, Shane filed a dissolution action in a state District Court. The District Court ordered joint custody and ordered that Shane would be the primary residential custodian. Approximately 1 month later, the Fort Peck Tribal Court awarded temporary custody to Stacey. She then filed a motion in District Court under Rules 12(h) and 60, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), to dismiss Shane's dissolution action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. The District Court held that it had subject matter jurisdiction over the case and issued a final decree of dissolution. In that decree, the District Court held that the parties' child had significant contacts both off and on the reservation, held that the District Court shared concurrent jurisdiction with the tribal court, and therefore denied Stacey's motion to dismiss. The Supreme Court reviewed its previous holdings regarding tribal jurisdiction and child custody jurisdiction under the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act. The Supreme Court also reviewed the purposes of the Indian Child Welfare Act, which, while not strictly applicable to the case before it, cautions that state courts should be careful not to erode the sovereignty of tribes and tribal courts. In reliance upon In re Bertelson, 189 M 524, 617 P2d 121 (1980), the Supreme Court held that the best interests of the child should be determined and followed in deciding whether a state or tribal court has jurisdiction for the purposes of awarding custody but that when an Indian child resides off the reservation, state courts and tribal courts share concurrent jurisdiction. The Supreme Court then held, in further reliance upon Bertelson, that even when jurisdiction is concurrent, it does not mean that states courts should exercise jurisdiction and that in deciding whether to exercise concurrent jurisdiction, the state courts should consider: (1) 40-4-102, 40-4-107, 40-4-211, and 40-7-108; (2) certain policy issues; and (3) the residence of the parties pursuant to 1-1-215. For this reason, the Supreme Court remanded the case to the District Court for a determination of the residence of Stacey and her child, saying that if the District Court determines that both reside on the reservation, the District Court must dismiss the case. However, if the District Court finds that Stacey's child is not a resident of the reservation and that the District Court shares jurisdiction with the tribal court, the District Court must then consider factors from Bertelson, previously discussed by the Supreme Court, to determine whether the District Court or the tribal court is better able to determine the best interests of the child. In re Marriage of Skillen, 1998 MT 43, 287 M 399, 956 P2d 1, 55 St. Rep. 147 (1998).

Jurisdictional Requirements Not Met — Inapplicability of Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act: The Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act does not apply unless the jurisdictional conditions of 40-4-211 are met, including whether: (1) a determination of the child's home state has been made; (2) the child and parents or at least one contestant has a significant connection with Montana and substantial evidence is available in Montana concerning the child's present or future care, training, and personal relationships; (3) the child is physically present in this state and has been abandoned or an emergency situation necessitates the child's protection; or (4) another state has jurisdiction or has declined jurisdiction because Montana is a more appropriate forum and it is in the child's best interest that Montana assume jurisdiction. In re Marriage of Erler, 261 M 65, 862 P2d 12, 50 St. Rep. 1195 (1993).

Lack of Montana Residency and Significant Connections — No Montana Jurisdiction: The statutory considerations of 40-7-104 (now repealed) were not met and thus a Montana court had no jurisdiction over a child custody case when: (1) prior to commencement of the proceeding, the child lived in Pennsylvania for about 8 years, visiting Montana only briefly; (2) the child's significant connections were with Pennsylvania, with only minimal Montana connections; (3) Pennsylvania, under its version of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act, had subject matter jurisdiction and, absent evidence that Pennsylvania had declined to exercise that jurisdiction, jurisdiction did not confer to Montana; and (4) the facts of the case did not constitute such an extraordinary or emergency situation as to confer custody jurisdiction to Montana. In re Marriage of Miller/Beam, 259 M 424, 856 P2d 1378, 50 St. Rep. 863 (1993).

Child Custody Jurisdiction: According to 40-7-104 (now repealed), the provisions of 40-4-211 determine whether a state has a sufficient interest in a child custody dispute to assume jurisdiction. In the present case, Montana does not have the authority under any of the provisions of 40-4-211 to hear the present custody proceeding. Even if Montana had such authority, several provisions of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act (UCCJA), including 40-7-107 and 40-7-108, would confer jurisdiction in the Arizona court. In re Marriage of Brown, 218 M 14, 706 P2d 116, 42 St. Rep. 1360 (1985).

"Forum Non Conveniens" — "Clean Hands": In a proceeding to modify a Kentucky child custody decree, the "forum non conveniens" and "clean hands" provisions come into play only after the following findings are made: (1) Kentucky no longer has jurisdiction; (2) Montana has jurisdiction under 40-4-211; and (3) under 28 U.S.C. §1738A(f), 40-4-211, and 40-7-114 (now repealed), Montana has jurisdiction to modify the Kentucky decree. Pierce v. Pierce, 197 M 16, 640 P2d 899, 39 St. Rep. 315 (1982).

Custody of Indian Children — Appropriate Forum: The District Court ordered Mr. and Mrs. Stanley, members of the Chippewa Cree Tribe, to return their grandchildren to Bertelson, the natural mother. On appeal, the Supreme Court remanded the case to develop a complete evidentiary record and to determine whether the tribal court is the appropriate forum. In re Bertelson, 189 M 524, 617 P2d 121, 37 St. Rep. 1682 (1980), followed in In re Marriage of Skillen, 1998 MT 43, 287 M 399, 956 P2d 1, 55 St. Rep. 147 (1998).

Notice Requirements for Enforcement of Out-of-State Decree: Before the recognition and enforcement provisions of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act (UCCJA) can be applied, the initial decree must be entered in conformity with strict notice requirements. If there is not compliance with the notice requirements of the UCCJA by the state entering the initial decree, Montana courts are not required to recognize and enforce the out-of-state decree. (Following Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).) Here notice of the Wyoming hearing was not given to the Raws, the persons in physical custody of Katherine, and the District Court therefore was not required to recognize or enforce the Wyoming order. Application of Pierce, 184 M 82, 601 P2d 1179 (1979).

Custody — Jurisdiction — Recognition of Foreign Decree: When a custody decree of another state is in force, a question of the applicability of the Full Faith and Credit Clause to custody decrees arises. When the California court heard no testimony on the best interests of the child, the precise question at issue in the Montana action, the Montana court was not bound to follow the California court's decree. Similarly, the Montana court was not prevented by the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act from modifying the California decree. Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).

Jurisdiction to Modify a Foreign Custody Decree: There is no requirement that the Montana court recognize or enforce a foreign court's decree when the foreign court failed to give notice to the person in physical custody of the child as required by the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act. Further, the foreign state did not retain the jurisdiction it had at the time of initial custody proceedings because the foreign state had long since ceased to be the home of the child. Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).

Punitive Order Subject to Modification: Where Montana modification order in custody case was made without any evidence as to circumstances of the children, and solely on the basis of the nonresident father's allegations of interference by the mother with his legal rights of visitation and periodic custody, the order was punitive and therefore subject to appropriate judicial inquiry and modification by court in state in which children were physically present. Brooks v. Brooks, 20 Or. App. 43, 530 P2d 547 (1975).

CASES DECIDED UNDER UCCJA

No Conflict Between UCCJA and "Best Interests of Child" Test: Under the provisions of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act (UCCJA) and 40-4-211, the Montana court properly declined to exercise its jurisdiction. The custody proceedings in Arizona, the children's residence, were filed prior to those in Montana, and Arizona had not stayed its proceedings. The provisions of the UCCJA which are rules for determining jurisdiction do not conflict with this state's rules for determining custody. The former is a procedural determination as to the proper forum, made prior to any substantive inquiry, and the latter is the application of substantive rules. No evidentiary hearing is required in a procedural determination as to the proper forum. In re Marriage of Brown, 218 M 14, 706 P2d 116, 42 St. Rep. 1360 (1985).

Custody — Jurisdiction — Recognition of Foreign Decree: When a custody decree of another state is in force, a question of the applicability of the Full Faith and Credit Clause to custody decrees arises. No Retroactive Application of UCCJA: Absent a clear expression of legislative purpose, retrospective application of even a procedural statute so as to affect prior proceedings of a pending action cannot be justified. Therefore, jurisdictional rulings entered before the effective date of the UCCJA (Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act) are not subject to the UCCJA. Wenz v. Commissioners' Note

Section 1 [former 40-7-102] of the UCCJA was a statement of the purposes of the Act [chapter]. Although extensively cited by courts, it was eliminated because Uniform Acts no longer contain such a section. Nonetheless, this Act [chapter] should be interpreted according to its purposes which are to:

(1) Avoid jurisdictional competition and conflict with courts of other States in matters of child custody which have in the past resulted in the shifting of children from State to State with harmful effects on their well-being;

(2) Promote cooperation with the courts of other States to the end that a custody decree is rendered in that State which can best decide the case in the interest of the child;

(3) Discourage the use of the interstate system for continuing controversies over child custody;

(4) Deter abductions of children;

(5) Avoid relitigation of custody decisions of other States in this State;

(6) Facilitate the enforcement of custody decrees of other States.

40-7-103. Definitions.

Commissioners' Note

The UCCJA did not contain a definition of "child." The definition here is taken from the PKPA.

The definition of "child-custody determination" now closely tracks the PKPA definition. It encompasses any judgment, decree or other order which provides for the custody of, or visitation with, a child, regardless of local terminology, including such labels as "managing conservatorship" or "parenting plan."

The definition of "child-custody proceeding" has been expanded from the comparable definition in the UCCJA. These listed proceedings have generally been determined to be the type of proceeding to which the UCCJA and PKPA are applicable. The list of examples removes any controversy about the types of proceedings where a custody determination can occur. Proceedings that affect access to the child are subject to this Act [chapter]. The inclusion of proceedings related to protection from domestic violence is necessary because in some States domestic violence proceedings may affect custody of and visitation with a child. Juvenile delinquency or proceedings to confer contractual rights are not "custody proceedings" because they do not relate to civil aspects of access to a child. While a determination of paternity is covered under the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act, the custody and visitation aspects of paternity cases are custody proceedings. Cases involving the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction have not been included at this point because custody of the child is not determined in a proceeding under the International Child Abductions Remedies Act. Those proceedings are specially included in the Article 3 [part 3] enforcement process.

"Commencement" has been included in the definitions as a replacement for the term "pending" found in the UCCJA. Its inclusion simplifies some of the simultaneous proceedings provisions of this Act [chapter].

The definition of "home State" has been reworded slightly. No substantive change is intended from the UCCJA.

The term "issuing State" is borrowed from UIFSA. In UIFSA, it refers to the court that issued the support or parentage order. Here, it refers to the State, or the court, which made the custody determination that is sought to be enforced. It is used primarily in Article 3 [part 3].

The term "person" has been added to ensure that the provisions of this Act [chapter] apply when the State is the moving party in a custody proceeding or has legal custody of a child. The definition of "person" is the one that is mandated for all Uniform Acts.

The term "person acting as a parent" has been slightly redefined. It has been broadened from the definition in the UCCJA to include a person who has acted as a parent for a significant period of time prior to the filing of the custody proceeding as well as a person who currently has physical custody of the child. In addition, a person acting as a parent must either have legal custody or claim a right to legal custody under the law of this State. The reference to the law of this State means that a court determines the issue of whether someone is a "person acting as a parent" under its own law. This reaffirms the traditional view that a court in a child custody case applies its own substantive law. The court does not have to undertake a choice-of-law analysis to determine whether the individual who is claiming to be a person acting as a parent has standing to seek custody of the child.

The definition of "tribe" is the one mandated for use in Uniform Acts. Should a State choose to apply this Act [chapter] to tribal adjudications, this definition should be enacted as well as the entirety of Section 104 [40-7-135].

The term "contestant" as has been omitted from this revision. It was defined in the UCCJA §2(1) [former 40-7-103(1)] as "a person, including a parent, who claims a right to custody or visitation rights with respect to a child." It seems to have served little purpose over the years, and whatever function it once had has been subsumed by state laws on who has standing to seek custody of or visitation with a child. In addition UCCJA §2(5) [former 40-7-103(4)] of the which [sic] defined "decree" and "custody decree" has been eliminated as duplicative of the definition of "custody determination."

Compiler's Comments

1999 Amendment: Chapter 91 inserted definitions of abandoned, child, child custody determination, child custody proceeding, commencement, court, issuing court, issuing state, person, tribe, and warrant; deleted definition of contestant that read: ""Contestant" means a person, including a parent, who claims a right to custody or visitation rights with respect to a child"; deleted definition of custody determination that read: ""Custody determination" means a court decision and court orders and instructions providing for the custody of a child, including visitation rights. It does not include a decision relating to child support or any other monetary obligation of any person"; deleted definition of custody proceeding that read: ""Custody proceeding" includes proceedings in which a custody determination is one of several issues, such as an action for divorce or separation, and includes issues of custody in adoption proceedings. A "custody proceeding" is not a proceeding pursuant to Title 41, chapter 3 or 5"; deleted definition of decree or custody decree that read: ""Decree" or "custody decree" means a custody determination contained in a judicial decree or order made in a custody proceeding and includes an initial decree and a modification decree"; in definition of home state in first sentence after "child" deleted "immediately preceding the time involved" and at end inserted "immediately before the commencement of a child custody proceeding" and in third sentence at beginning substituted "A period" for "Periods" and at end before "period" deleted "6-month or other"; substituted definition of initial determination for definition of initial decree that read: ""Initial decree" means the first custody decree concerning a particular child"; substituted definition of modification for definition of modification decree that read: ""Modification decree" means a custody decree which modifies or replaces a prior decree, whether made by the court which rendered the prior decree or by another court"; substituted definition of person acting as a parent for definition of person acting as parent that read: ""Person acting as parent" means a person other than a parent who has physical custody of a child and who has either been awarded custody by a court or claims a right to custody"; in definition of physical custody substituted "means the physical care and supervision of a child" for "means actual possession and control of a child"; substituted present definition of state for former definition that read: ""State" means any state, territory, or possession of the United States, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

CASES DECIDED UNDER UCCJA

Adoption Proceeding in Foreign Jurisdiction — Applicability of Habeas Corpus: A child was born to petitioner in Wyoming in 1980. She relinquished custody to a couple and moved to Montana. Petitioner executed handwritten instruments that were notarized relinquishing custody to the couple and stating she did not know the natural father. The couple began adoption proceedings in Wyoming. Petitioner then executed a written revocation of custody and petitioned for a Writ of Habeas Corpus for the child in Yellowstone County. The District Court deferred jurisdiction to the Wyoming court having jurisdiction of the adoption proceeding. The habeas corpus petition was properly filed in Yellowstone County because the child was currently located there. The District Court properly deferred jurisdiction because although petitioner contended she executed the written instruments under fraud and duress, those issues were equally triable in Wyoming. Under 40-7-108, the District Court could not determine whether Wyoming was an inconvenient forum, only whether the court itself was. The Supreme Court in upholding the District Court's action said in cases of simultaneous proceedings, the provisions of 40-7-107(3) should be followed. In re Application of Peterson, 203 M 305, 661 P2d 40, 40 St. Rep. 465 (1983).

Custody Jurisdiction Under UCCJA and Interstate Compact on Juveniles: Wyoming had jurisdiction over the runaway juvenile as it was her home state. The District Court in Montana therefore did not have jurisdiction to modify the Wyoming court's custody decree. The interaction of the Interstate Compact on Juveniles and the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act (UCCJA) placed the District Court in the following position: (1) under the Compact, it had the authority to deny Wyoming's requisition ordering the juvenile's return to Wyoming and to place her in the custody of her grandparents; and (2) under the UCCJA it was not required to recognize or enforce the Wyoming custody decree but was precluded from modifying the decree. The District Court concluded that the juvenile's best interest would be served by having her in the custody of her grandparents and denied the Wyoming requisition. The court did not modify the Wyoming custody order. This procedure appears to be allowed under the interaction of the Compact and the UCCJA. Application of Pierce, 184 M 82, 601 P2d 1179 (1979).

Notice Requirements for Enforcement of Out-of-State Decree: Before the recognition and enforcement provisions of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act (UCCJA) can be applied, the initial decree must be entered in conformity with strict notice requirements. If there is no compliance with the notice requirements of the UCCJA by the state entering the initial decree, Montana courts are not required to recognize and enforce the out-of-state decree. (Following Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).) Here notice of the Wyoming hearing was not given to the Raws, the persons in physical custody of Katherine, and the District Court therefore was not required to recognize or enforce the Wyoming order. Application of Pierce, 184 M 82, 601 P2d 1179 (1979).

Child Custody — Home State — Jurisdiction: When a child was present in Montana, having been abandoned by both of her natural parents, having been subjected to mistreatment and abuse, and having been threatened with further mistreatment and abuse, her situation met the test for jurisdiction expressed in 40-4-211. Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).

Attorney General's Opinions

Commencement Filing Fee Not Chargeable for Certain Postdissolution Proceedings: The Attorney General relied on the holding in In re Marriage of Billings, 189 M 520, 616 P2d 1104 (1980), in finding that a District Court Clerk may not charge a commencement filing fee for postdissolution of marriage action that is brought under the same cause number as the marital dissolution proceeding and that remains under the continuing jurisdiction of the District Court. 43 A.G. 40-7-105. Notice — opportunity to be heard — joinder.

Commissioners' Note

This section generally continues the notice provisions of the UCCJA. However, it does not attempt to dictate who is entitled to notice. Local rules vary with regard to persons entitled to seek custody of a child. Therefore, this section simply indicates that persons entitled to seek custody should receive notice but leaves the rest of the determination to local law. Parents whose parental rights have not been previously terminated and persons having physical custody of the child are specifically mentioned as persons who must be given notice. The PKPA, §1738A(e), requires that they be given notice in order for the custody determination to be entitled to full faith and credit under that Act.

State laws also vary with regard to whether a court has the power to issue an enforceable temporary custody order without notice and hearing in a case without any interstate element. Such temporary orders may be enforceable, as against due process objections, for a short period of time if issued as a protective order or a temporary restraining order to protect a child from harm. Whether such orders are enforceable locally is beyond the scope of this Act [chapter]. Subsection (b) [(2)] clearly provides that the validity of such orders and the enforceability of such orders is governed by the law which authorizes them and not by this Act [chapter]. An order is entitled to interstate enforcement and nonmodification under this Act [chapter] only if there has been notice and an opportunity to be heard. The PKPA, §1738A(e), also requires that a custody determination is entitled to full faith and credit only if there has been notice and an opportunity to be heard.

Rules requiring joinder of people with an interest in the custody of and visitation with a child also vary widely throughout the country. The UCCJA has a separate section on joinder of parties which has been eliminated. The issue of who is entitled to intervene and who must be joined in a custody proceeding is to be determined by local state law.

A sentence of the UCCJA §4 [40-7-105] which indicated that persons outside the State were to be given notice and an opportunity to be heard in accordance with the provision of that Act has been eliminated as redundant.

Compiler's Comments

1999 Amendment: Chapter 91 in (1) substituted present language concerning notice in a child custody determination for former language that read: "Before making a decree under this chapter, reasonable notice and opportunity to be heard shall be given to the contestants, any parent whose parental rights have not been previously terminated, and any person who has physical custody of the child. If any of these persons are outside this state, notice and opportunity to be heard shall be given pursuant to 40-7-106"; inserted (2) regarding the enforceability of a child custody determination made without notice; and inserted (3) concerning the law governing the obligation or right of a person to intervene in a child custody determination. Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

Jurisdiction to Modify a Foreign Custody Decree: There is no requirement that the Montana court recognize or enforce a foreign court's decree when the foreign court failed to give notice to the person in physical custody of the child as required by the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act. Further, the foreign state did not retain the jurisdiction it had at the time of initial custody proceedings because the foreign state had long since ceased to be the home of the child. Wenz v. 40-7-106. Notice to persons outside state.

Commissioners' Note

This section authorizes notice and proof of service to be made by any method allowed by either the State which issues the notice or the State where the notice is received. This eliminates the need to specify the type of notice in the Act [chapter] and therefore the provisions of Section 5 of the UCCJA [see language of this section prior to 1999 amendment] which specified how notice was to be accomplished were eliminated. The change reflects an approach in this Act [chapter] to use local law to determine many procedural issues. Thus, service by facsimile is permissible if allowed by local rule in either State. In addition, where special service or notice rules are available for some procedures, in either jurisdiction, they could be utilized under this Act [chapter]. For example, if a case involves domestic violence and the statute of either State would authorize notice to be served by a peace officer, such service could be used under this Act [chapter].

Although Section 105 [40-7-136] requires foreign countries to be treated as States for purposes of this Act [chapter], attorneys should be cautioned about service and notice in foreign countries. Countries have their own rules on service which must usually be followed. Attorneys should consult the Hague Convention on the Service Abroad of Judicial and Extrajudicial Documents in Civil or Commercial Matters, 20 U.S.T. 36, T.I.A.S. 6638 (1965).

1999 Amendment: Chapter 91 in (1) substituted present language concerning the manner of giving notice for former language that read: "(1) Notice required for the exercise of jurisdiction over a person outside this state shall be given in a manner reasonably calculated to give actual notice and may be:

(a) by personal delivery outside this state in the manner prescribed for service of process within this state;

(b) in the manner prescribed by the law of the place in which the service is made for service of process in that place in an action in any of its courts of general jurisdiction;

(c) by any form of mail addressed to the person to be served and requesting a receipt; or

(d) as directed by the court, including publication, if other means of notification are ineffective"; deleted former (2) that read: "(2) Notice under this section shall be served, mailed, or delivered or last published at least 10 days before any hearing in this state"; in (3) substituted language concerning proof of service for former (3) that read: "(3) Proof of service outside this state may be made by affidavit of the individual who made the service or in the manner prescribed by the law of this state, the order pursuant to which the service is made, or the law of the place in which the service is made. If service is made by mail, proof may be a receipt signed by the addressee or other evidence of delivery to the addressee"; in (3) substituted "required for the exercise of jurisdiction with respect to a person who" for "required if a person"; and made minor changes in style. Custody — Personal Jurisdiction Unnecessary: Personal jurisdiction over a parent is not necessary to the termination of his parental rights to a minor child so long as the parent has actual notice of the termination or the District Court makes an effort reasonably calculated to provide notice to the parent. 40-7-107. Simultaneous proceedings.

Commissioners' Note

This section represents the remnants of the simultaneous proceedings provision of the UCCJA §6 [see language of this section prior to 1999 amendment]. The problem of simultaneous proceedings is no longer a significant issue. Most of the problems have been resolved by the prioritization of home state jurisdiction under Section 201 [40-7-201]; the exclusive, continuing jurisdiction provisions of Section 202 [40-7-202]; and the prohibitions on modification of Section 203 [40-7-203]. If there is a home State, there can be no exercise of significant connection jurisdiction in an initial child custody determination and, therefore, no simultaneous proceedings. If there is a State of exclusive, continuing jurisdiction, there cannot be another State with concurrent jurisdiction and, therefore, no simultaneous proceedings. Of course, the home State, as well as the State with exclusive, continuing jurisdiction, could defer to another State under Section 207 [40-7-108]. However, that decision is left entirely to the home State or the State with exclusive, continuing jurisdiction.

Under this Act [chapter], the simultaneous proceedings problem will arise only when there is no home State, no State with exclusive, continuing jurisdiction and more than one significant connection State. For those cases, this section retains the "first in time" rule of the UCCJA.

Subsection (b) [(2)] retains the UCCJA's policy favoring judicial communication. Communication between courts is required when it is determined that a proceeding has been commenced in another State.

Subsection (c) [(3)] concerns the problem of simultaneous proceedings in the State with modification jurisdiction and enforcement proceedings under Article 3 [part 3]. This section authorizes the court with exclusive, continuing jurisdiction to stay the modification proceeding pending the outcome of the enforcement proceeding, to enjoin the parties from continuing with the enforcement proceeding, or to continue the modification proceeding under such conditions as it determines are appropriate. The court may wish to communicate with the enforcement court. However, communication is not mandatory. Although the enforcement State is required by the PKPA to enforce according to its terms a custody determination made consistently with the PKPA, that duty is subject to the decree being modified by a State with the power to do so under the PKPA. An order to enjoin the parties from enforcing the decree is the equivalent of a temporary modification by a State with the authority to do so. The concomitant provision addressed to the enforcement court is Section 306 of this Act [40-7-306]. That section requires the enforcement court to communicate with the modification court in order to determine what action the modification court wishes the enforcement court to take.

The term "pending" that was utilized in the UCCJA section on simultaneous proceeding has been replaced. It has caused considerable confusion in the case law. It has been replaced with the term "commencement of the proceeding" as more accurately reflecting the policy behind this section. The latter term is defined in Section 102(5) [40-7-103(5)].

Compiler's Comments

1999 Amendment: Chapter 91 substituted present language concerning the exercise of jurisdiction by a court of this state if a proceeding concerning the custody of the child has been previously commenced in another state for former language that read: "(1) A court of this state may not exercise its jurisdiction under this chapter if at the time of filing the petition a proceeding concerning the custody of the child was pending in a court of another state exercising jurisdiction substantially in conformity with this chapter unless the proceeding is stayed by the court of the other state because this state is a more appropriate forum or for other reasons.

(2) Before hearing the petition in a custody proceeding, the court shall examine the pleadings and other information supplied by the parties under 40-7-110 and shall consult the child custody registry established under 40-7-117 concerning the pendency of proceedings with respect to the child in other states. If the court has reason to believe that proceedings may be pending in another state, it shall direct an inquiry to the state court administrator or other appropriate official of the other state.

(3) If the court is informed during the course of the proceeding that a proceeding concerning the custody of the child was pending in another state before the court assumed jurisdiction, it shall stay the proceeding and communicate with the court in which the other proceeding is pending to the end that the issue may be litigated in the more appropriate forum and that information be exchanged in accordance with 40-7-120 through 40-7-123. If a court of this state has made a custody decree before being informed of a pending proceeding in a court of another state, it shall immediately inform that court of the fact. If the court is informed that a proceeding was commenced in another state after it assumed jurisdiction, it shall likewise inform the other court to the end that the issues may be litigated in the more appropriate forum." 40-7-108. Inconvenient forum.

Commissioners' Note

This section retains the focus of Section 7 of the UCCJA [see language of this section prior to 1999 amendment]. It authorizes courts to decide that another State is in a better position to make the custody determination, taking into consideration the relative circumstances of the parties. If so, the court may defer to the other State.

The list of factors that the court may consider has been updated from the UCCJA. The list is not meant to be exclusive. Several provisions require comment. Subparagraph (1) [subsection (2)(a)] is concerned specifically with domestic violence and other matters affecting the health and safety of the parties. For this purpose, the court should determine whether the parties are located in different States because one party is a victim of domestic violence or child abuse. If domestic violence or child abuse has occurred, this factor authorizes the court to consider which State can best protect the victim from further violence or abuse.

In applying subparagraph (3) [subsection (2)(c)], courts should realize that distance concerns can be alleviated by applying the communication and cooperation provisions of Sections 111 and 112 [40-7-119 and 40-7-140].

In applying subsection (7) [(2)(g)] on expeditious resolution of the controversy, the court could consider the different procedural and evidentiary laws of the two States, as well as the flexibility of the court dockets. It also should consider the ability of a court to arrive at a solution to all the legal issues surrounding the family. If one State has jurisdiction to decide both the custody and support issues, it would be desirable to determine that State to be the most convenient forum. The same is true when children of the same family live in different States. It would be inappropriate to require parents to have custody proceedings in several States when one State could resolve the custody of all the children.

Before determining whether to decline or retain jurisdiction, the court of this State may communicate, in accordance with Section 110 [40-7-139], with a court of another State and exchange information pertinent to the assumption of jurisdiction by either court.

There are two departures from Section 7 of the UCCJA [see language of this section prior to 1999 amendment]. First, the court may not simply dismiss the action. To do so would leave the case in limbo. Rather the court shall stay the case and direct the parties to file in the State that has been found to be the more convenient forum. The court is also authorized to impose any other conditions it considers appropriate. This might include the issuance of temporary custody orders during the time necessary to commence a proceeding in the designated State, dismissing the case if the custody proceeding is not commenced in the other State or resuming jurisdiction if a court of the other State refuses to take the case.

Second, UCCJA, §7(g) [former subsection (7)] which allowed the court to assess fees and costs if it was a clearly inappropriate court, has been eliminated. If a court has jurisdiction under this Act [chapter], it could not be a clearly inappropriate court.

Compiler's Comments

1999 Amendment: Chapter 91 substituted present language pertaining to the determination by a court of this state of whether it is an inconvenient forum for former language that read: "(1) A court which has jurisdiction under this chapter to make an initial or modification decree may decline to exercise its jurisdiction any time before making a decree if it finds that it is an inconvenient forum to make a custody determination under the circumstances of the case and that a court of another state is a more appropriate forum.

(2) A finding of inconvenient forum may be made upon the court's own motion or upon motion of a party or a guardian ad litem or other representative of the child.

(3) In determining if it is an inconvenient forum, the court shall consider if it is in the interest of the child that another state assume jurisdiction. For this purpose it may take into account the following factors, among others:

(a) if another state is or recently was the child's home state;

(b) if another state has a closer connection with the child and his family or with the child and one or more of the contestants;

(c) if substantial evidence concerning the child's present or future care, protection, training, and personal relationships is more readily available in another state;

(d) if the parties have agreed on another forum which is no less appropriate; and

(e) if the exercise of jurisdiction by a court of this state would contravene any of the purposes stated in 40-7-102.

(4) Before determining whether to decline or retain jurisdiction, the court may communicate with a court of another state and exchange information pertinent to the assumption of jurisdiction by either court with a view to assuring that jurisdiction will be exercised by the more appropriate court and that a forum will be available to the parties.

(5) If the court finds that it is an inconvenient forum and that a court of another state is a more appropriate forum, it may dismiss the proceedings or it may stay the proceedings upon condition that a custody proceeding be promptly commenced in another named state or upon any other conditions which may be just and proper, including the condition that a moving party stipulate his consent and submission to the jurisdiction of the other forum.

(6) The court may decline to exercise its jurisdiction under this chapter if a custody determination is incidental to an action for divorce or another proceeding while retaining jurisdiction over the divorce or other proceeding.

(7) If it appears to the court that it is clearly an inappropriate forum, it may require the party who commenced the proceedings to pay, in addition to the costs of the proceedings in this state, necessary travel and other expenses, including attorneys' fees, incurred by other parties or their witnesses. Payment is to be made to the clerk of the court for remittance to the proper party.

(8) Upon dismissal or stay of proceedings under this section the court shall inform the court found to be the more appropriate forum of this fact or, if the court which would have jurisdiction in the other state is not certainly known, transmit the information to the court administrator or other appropriate official for forwarding to the appropriate court.

(9) Any communication received from another state informing this state of a finding of inconvenient forum because a court of this state is the more appropriate forum shall be filed in the custody registry of the appropriate court. Upon assuming jurisdiction, the court of this state shall inform the original court of this fact." Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

CASES DECIDED UNDER UCCJA

Consideration of Statutory Factors Not Mandatory in Determining Continuing Jurisdiction: Mother argued that the District Court erred in failing to address all the factors in subsection (3) of this section as relevant to determining whether Montana was an inconvenient forum for a child custody case. During the pendency of the case, she had moved the child to North Dakota and filed a motion to decline Montana jurisdiction as an inconvenient forum. However, nowhere does subsection (3) of this section mandate that the court consider each of the five factors set forth in the subsection. Instead, the statute simply lists a number of elements that the court may consider in making an inconvenient forum determination. Here, the court considered the first factor and concluded that because the child had not lived in another state for 6 months, Montana was the appropriate forum. Absent any indication that the exercise of continuing jurisdiction by the Montana court contravened any of the general purposes of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act stated in 40-7-102 (now repealed), among which is the deterrence of unilateral removals of children undertaken to obtain custody awards, the District Court's denial of mother's motion to decline jurisdiction was not an abuse of the court's discretion. In re B.E.S., 1998 MT 190, 290 M 188, 963 P2d 449, 55 St. Rep. 773 (1998).

Indians — Subject Matter Jurisdiction Over Dissolution of Marriage — Different Residences of Parties — Factors to Be Considered — Bertelson Followed: Stacey, an enrolled member of the Fort Peck Tribes, married Shane, a non-Indian. After the marriage ceremony, Stacey returned to the Fort Peck Indian Reservation and Shane went to Forsyth, where his parents lived and where he worked. Some time later, Stacey had a child who also became an enrolled member and lived with Stacey on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation. Still later, Shane filed a dissolution action in a state District Court. The District Court ordered joint custody and ordered that Shane would be the primary residential custodian. Approximately 1 month later, the Fort Peck Tribal Court awarded temporary custody to Stacey. She then filed a motion in District Court under Rules 12(h) and 60, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), to dismiss Shane's dissolution action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. The District Court held that it had subject matter jurisdiction over the case and issued a final decree of dissolution. In that decree, the District Court held that the parties' child had significant contacts both off and on the reservation, held that the District Court shared concurrent jurisdiction with the tribal court, and therefore denied Stacey's motion to dismiss. The Supreme Court reviewed its previous holdings regarding tribal jurisdiction and child custody jurisdiction under the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act. The Supreme Court also reviewed the purposes of the Indian Child Welfare Act, which, while not strictly applicable to the case before it, cautions that state courts should be careful not to erode the sovereignty of tribes and tribal courts. In reliance upon In re Bertelson, 189 M 524, 617 P2d 121 (1980), the Supreme Court held that the best interests of the child should be determined and followed in deciding whether a state or tribal court has jurisdiction for the purposes of awarding custody but that when an Indian child resides off the reservation, state courts and tribal courts share concurrent jurisdiction. The Supreme Court then held, in further reliance upon Bertelson, that even when jurisdiction is concurrent, it does not mean that states courts should exercise jurisdiction and that in deciding whether to exercise concurrent jurisdiction, the state courts should consider: (1) 40-4-102, 40-4-107, 40-4-211, and this section; (2) certain policy issues; and (3) the residence of the parties pursuant to 1-1-215. For this reason, the Supreme Court remanded the case to the District Court for a determination of the residence of Stacey and her child, saying that if the District Court determines that both reside on the reservation, the District Court must dismiss the case. However, if the District Court finds that Stacey's child is not a resident of the reservation and that the District Court shares jurisdiction with the tribal court, the District Court must then consider factors from Bertelson, previously discussed by the Supreme Court, to determine whether the District Court or the tribal court is better able to determine the best interests of the child. In re Marriage of Skillen, 1998 MT 43, 287 M 399, 956 P2d 1, 55 St. Rep. 147 (1998).

Family Moved From State — Inconvenient Forum for Ongoing Custody Determinations: Shortly after the marriage was dissolved in a Montana court, the mother moved with the children to California and the father moved to Washington. When the need for further child custody determinations arose, the father maintained that Montana remained the proper forum and that mother created any inconvenience by putting 2,000 miles between herself and the Montana court. The District Court, after careful consideration of where evidence regarding the children's environment and welfare was most readily available, properly exercised its discretion by determining that Montana was an inconvenient forum and that the children's interests would be best served by having a California court assume jurisdiction. This is consistent with the purpose espoused in the U.C.C.J.A. that litigation involving minor children occur in the state in which the child has the closest connection and in which significant evidence concerning the child's care, protection, training, and personal relationships is most readily available. In re Marriage of Irwin, 259 M 176, 855 P2d 525, 50 St. Rep. 741 (1993).

Adoption Agency Placement and Refusal to Consent to Adoption by Foster Parents as Reasonable — No Court Authority to Place Child: An adoption agency placed a child with foster parents for a period of time that, although initially to be of short duration, turned out to be 27 months because of prolonged court proceedings regarding termination of parental rights. The agency had always sought to place the child out of state because of potential threat posed by the birth father and made no indications that the foster parents could adopt the child; nevertheless, they began adoption proceedings and sought preliminary injunctive relief to prevent the child from being removed from their home. In denying the injunction, the District Court held, and the Supreme Court subsequently affirmed, that this section restricts who may place a child for adoption and does not include courts in that designation. Because the agency did not consent to the foster parents' request for adoption or did not place the child for adoption in Montana, the foster parents could not adopt the child. The District Court further reasoned that allowing the injunction could have the broader effect of making agencies fearful of placing children with foster parents if there was no certainty that the child could be placed with the family of the agency's choice. The agency's actions in refusing consent to adoption and placing the child out of state were not unreasonable. Lewis v. Catholic Social Serv. for Mont., 253 M 369, 833 P2d 1023, 49 St. Rep. 448 (1992).

Parental Proclivity to Relocate — Montana Jurisdiction Proper: Mother argued that the Montana District Court should have declined jurisdiction as an inconvenient forum under this section, contending the court overlooked the likelihood that the child's present or future care, protection, training, and personal relationships would be more readily available in California. The Supreme Court disagreed and held that Montana was the best arena for jurisdiction after finding that: (1) the mother and child had only recently moved to California; (2) the mother showed a proclivity to relocate; (3) the mother testified at the final hearing that she intended to make her home in Oregon; and (4) the only stable, permanent home environment for the child was the father's home in Montana. In re Marriage of Klose, 243 M 211, 793 P2d 1311, 47 St. Rep. 1156 (1990).

District Court Deferral of Child Custody to Tribal Court: The District Court properly dismissed a petition for modification of child custody on grounds that the Crow Tribal Court was a more appropriate forum. In re Custody of Zier, 230 M 464, 750 P2d 1083, 45 St. Rep. 356 (1988).

Custody — Factors Considered: Section 40-7-108 permits a court to decline to exercise jurisdiction if it finds that another state is a more appropriate forum. The factors that may be considered include which state is or recently was the child's home state and the availability of evidence in the other state. The Montana District Court's decision in this case to stay proceedings in this state was proper under 40-7-108. The children's residence was in the other state, and any evidence regarding their prior care, protection, training, and personal relationships would have been in their resident state. In re Marriage of Brown, 218 M 14, 706 P2d 116, 42 St. Rep. 1360 (1985).

Adoption Proceeding in Foreign Jurisdiction — Applicability of Habeas Corpus: A child was born to petitioner in Wyoming in 1980. She relinquished custody to a couple and moved to Montana. Petitioner executed handwritten instruments that were notarized relinquishing custody to the couple and stating she did not know the natural father. The couple began adoption proceedings in Wyoming. Petitioner then executed a written revocation of custody and petitioned for a Writ of Habeas Corpus for the child in Yellowstone County. The District Court deferred jurisdiction to the Wyoming court having jurisdiction of the adoption proceeding. The habeas corpus petition was properly filed in Yellowstone County because the child was currently located there. The District Court properly deferred jurisdiction because although petitioner contended she executed the written instruments under fraud and duress, those issues were equally triable in Wyoming. Under 40-7-108, the District Court could not determine whether Wyoming was an inconvenient forum, only whether the court itself was. The Supreme Court in upholding the District Court's action said in cases of simultaneous proceedings, the provisions of 40-7-107(3) should be followed. In re Application of Peterson, 203 M 305, 661 P2d 40, 40 St. Rep. 465 (1983).

Communication With Court of Another State: Prior to a proceeding to determine jurisdiction in a modification of a Kentucky child custody decree, the Montana and Kentucky trial court judges informally communicated to facilitate the decisionmaking process. Such communication was untimely because subsection (4) is intended for situations where it has been determined that two states have concurrent jurisdiction. It serves as a second check on jurisdiction after the other prerequisites have been met. Pierce v. Pierce, 197 M 16, 640 P2d 899, 39 St. Rep. 315 (1982).

Modification of Out-of-State Custody Decree: In a proceeding to modify a Kentucky child custody decree, the "forum non conveniens" and "clean hands" provisions come into play only after the following findings are made: (1) Kentucky no longer has jurisdiction; (2) Montana has jurisdiction under 40-4-211; and (3) under 28 U.S.C. §1738A(f), 40-4-211, and 40-7-114 (now repealed), Montana has jurisdiction to modify the Kentucky decree. Pierce v. Pierce, 197 M 16, 640 P2d 899, 39 St. Rep. 315 (1982).

Custody — Court Discretion, Inconvenient Forum Question: Section 40-7-108 describes several criteria by which a District Court may consider whether it is an inconvenient forum but does not create a mandatory duty on the court to dismiss the action upon such grounds. The section is entirely discretionary. The trial court, knowing that the child in question, apparently abandoned by her parents living in California, had been living with relatives in Montana for some time, did not abuse its full discretion in determining it was not an inconvenient forum. Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979). See also In re Marriage of Cook, 223 M 293, 725 P2d 562, 43 St. Rep. 1732 (1986).

40-7-109. Jurisdiction declined by reason of conduct.

Commissioners' Note

The "Clean Hands" section of the UCCJA has been truncated in this Act [chapter]. Since there is no longer a multiplicity of jurisdictions which could take cognizance of a child-custody proceeding, there is less of a concern that one parent will take the child to another jurisdiction in an attempt to find a more favorable forum. Most of the jurisdictional problems generated by abducting parents should be solved by the prioritization of home State in Section 201 [40-7-201]; the exclusive, continuing jurisdiction provisions of Section 202 [40-7-202]; and the ban on modification in Section 203 [40-7-203]. For example, if a parent takes the child from the home State and seeks an original custody determination elsewhere, the stay-at- home parent has six months to file a custody petition under the extended home state jurisdictional provision of Section 201 [40-7-201], which will ensure that the case is retained in the home State. If a petitioner for a modification determination takes the child from the State that issued the original custody determination, another State cannot assume jurisdiction as long at the first State exercises exclusive, continuing jurisdiction.

Nonetheless, there are still a number of cases where parents, or their surrogates, act in a reprehensible manner, such as removing, secreting, retaining, or restraining the child. This section ensures that abducting parents will not receive an advantage for their unjustifiable conduct. If the conduct that creates the jurisdiction is unjustified, courts must decline to exercise jurisdiction that is inappropriately invoked by one of the parties. For example, if one parent abducts the child pre-decree and establishes a new home State, that jurisdiction will decline to hear the case. There are exceptions. If the other party has acquiesced in the court's jurisdiction, the court may hear the case. Such acquiescence may occur by filing a pleading submitting to the jurisdiction, or by not filing in the court that would otherwise have jurisdiction under this Act [chapter]. Similarly, if the court that would have jurisdiction finds that the court of this State is a more appropriate forum, the court may hear the case.

This section applies to those situations where jurisdiction exists because of the unjustified conduct of the person seeking to invoke it. If, for example, a parent in the State with exclusive, continuing jurisdiction under Section 202 [40-7-202] has either restrained the child from visiting with the other parent, or has retained the child after visitation, and seeks to modify the decree, this section in inapplicable. The conduct of restraining or retaining the child did not create jurisdiction. Jurisdiction existed under this Act [chapter] without regard to the parent's conduct. Whether a court should decline to hear the parent's request to modify is a matter of local law. The focus in this section is on the unjustified conduct of the person who invokes the jurisdiction of the court. A technical illegality or wrong is insufficient to trigger the applicability of this section. This is particularly important in cases involving domestic violence and child abuse. Domestic violence victims should not be charged with unjustifiable conduct for conduct that occurred in the process of fleeing domestic violence, even if their conduct is technically illegal. Thus, if a parent flees with a child to escape domestic violence and in the process violates a joint custody decree, the case should not be automatically dismissed under this section. An inquiry must be made into whether the flight was justified under the circumstances of the case. However, an abusive parent who seizes the child and flees to another State to establish jurisdiction has engaged in unjustifiable conduct and the new State must decline to exercise jurisdiction under this section.

Subsection (b) [(2)] authorizes the court to fashion an appropriate remedy for the safety of the child and to prevent a repetition of the unjustified conduct. Thus, it would be appropriate for the court to notify the other parent and to provide for foster care for the child until the child is returned to the other parent. The court could also stay the proceeding and require that a custody proceeding be instituted in another State that would have jurisdiction under this Act [chapter]. It should be noted that the court is not making a forum non conveniens analysis in this section. If the conduct is unjustifiable, it must decline jurisdiction. It may, however, retain jurisdiction until a custody proceeding is commenced in the appropriate tribunal if such retention is necessary to prevent a repetition of the wrongful conduct or to ensure the safety of the child.

The attorney's fee standard for this section is patterned after the International Child Abduction Remedies Act, 42 U.S.C. §11607(b)(3). The assessed costs and fees are to be paid to the respondent who established that jurisdiction was based on unjustifiable conduct.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 91 inserted present language concerning a court of this state declining to take jurisdiction due to unjustifiable conduct on the part of the person invoking jurisdiction for former language that read: "(1) If the petitioner for an initial decree has wrongfully taken the child from another state or has engaged in similar reprehensible conduct, the court may decline to exercise jurisdiction if this is just and proper under the circumstances.

(2) Unless required in the interest of the child, the court may not exercise its jurisdiction to modify a custody decree of another state if the petitioner, without consent of the person entitled to custody, has improperly removed the child from the physical custody of the person entitled to custody or has improperly retained the child after a visit or other temporary relinquishment of physical custody. If the petitioner has violated any other provision of a custody decree of another state, the court may decline to exercise its jurisdiction if this is just and proper under the circumstances.

(3) In appropriate cases a court dismissing a petition under this section may charge the petitioner with necessary travel and other expenses, including attorneys' fees, incurred by other parties or their witnesses." Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

Modification of Out-of-State Custody Decree: In a proceeding to modify a Kentucky child custody decree, the "forum non conveniens" and "clean hands" provisions come into play only after the following findings are made: (1) Kentucky no longer has jurisdiction; (2) Montana has jurisdiction under 40-4-211; and (3) under 28 U.S.C. §1738A(f), 40-4-211, and 40-7-114 (now repealed), Montana has jurisdiction to modify the Kentucky decree. Pierce v. Pierce, 197 M 16, 640 P2d 899, 39 St. Rep. 315 (1982).

Jurisdiction to Modify a Foreign Custody Decree: There is no requirement that the Montana court recognize or enforce a foreign court's decree when the foreign court failed to give notice to the person in physical custody of the child as required by the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act. Further, the foreign state did not retain the jurisdiction it had at the time of initial custody proceedings because the foreign state had long since ceased to be the home of the child. Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).

Custody — Jurisdiction — Recognition of Foreign Decree: When a custody decree of another state is in force, a question of the applicability of the Full Faith and Credit Clause to custody decrees arises. When the California court heard no testimony on the best interests of the child, the precise question at issue in the Montana action, the Montana court was not bound to follow the California court's decree. Similarly, the Montana court was not prevented by the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act from modifying the California decree. Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).

40-7-110. Information to be submitted to court.

Commissioners' Note

The pleading requirements from Section 9 of the UCCJA [see language of this section prior to 1999 amendment] are generally carried over into this Act [chapter]. However, the information is made subject to local law on the protection of names and other identifying information in certain cases. A number of States have enacted laws relating to the protection of victims in domestic violence and child abuse cases which provide for the confidentiality of victims names, addresses, and other information. These procedures must be followed if the child-custody proceeding of the State requires their applicability. See, e.g., California Family Law Code §3409(a). If a State does not have local law that provides for protecting names and addresses, then subsection (e) [not adopted in Montana] or a similar provision should be adopted. Subsection (e) [not adopted in Montana] is based on the National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judge's, Model Code on Domestic and Family Violence §304(c). There are other models to choose from, in particular UIFSA §312.

In subsection (a)(2) [(1)(b)], the term "proceedings" should be read broadly to include more than custody proceedings. Thus, if one parent was being criminally prosecuted for child abuse or custodial interference, those proceedings should be disclosed. If the child is subject to the Interstate Compact on the Placement of Children, facts relating to compliance with the Compact should be disclosed in the pleading or affidavit.

Subsection (b) [(2)] has been added. It authorizes the court to stay the proceeding until the information required in subsection (a) [(1)] has been disclosed, although failure to provide the information does not deprive the court of jurisdiction to hear the case. This follows the majority of jurisdictions which held that failure to comply with the pleading requirements of the UCCJA did not deprive the court of jurisdiction to make a custody determination.

Commissioners' Note

No major changes have been made to this section which was Section 11 of the UCCJA [see language of this section prior to 1999 amendment]. Language was added to subsection (a) [(1)] to authorize the court to require a non-party who has physical custody of the child to produce the child.

Subsection (c) [(3)] authorizes the court to enter orders providing for the safety of the child and the person ordered to appear with the child. If safety is a major concern, the court, as an alternative to ordering a party to appear with the child, could order and arrange for the party's testimony to be taken in another State under Section 111 [40-7-119]. This alternative might be important when there are safety concerns regarding requiring victims of domestic violence or child abuse to travel to the jurisdiction where the abuser resides.

No Duty of Attorney to Nonclient in Child Custody Case: An attorney must be able to vigorously advocate a client's interests in litigation without being compromised by obligations to nonclients. If an attorney were considered to owe the same duty of care to both a parent and child in an

Because the interests of a parent and those of a child may not be identical, the attorney's duty runs solely to the client except if the conduct rises to the level of deceit or collusion or is intentionally reckless. 40-7-134. Proceedings governed by other law.

Commissioners' Note

Two proceedings are governed by other acts. Adoption cases are excluded from this Act [chapter] because adoption is a specialized area which is thoroughly covered by the Uniform Adoption Act (UAA) (1994). Most States either will adopt that Act or will adopt the jurisdictional provisions of that Act. Therefore the jurisdictional provisions governing adoption proceeding are generally found elsewhere.

However, there are likely to be a number of instances where it will be necessary to apply this Act [chapter] in an adoption proceeding. For example, if a State adopts the UAA then Section 3-101 of the Act specifically refers in places to the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act which will become a reference to this Act [chapter]. Second, the UAA requires that if an adoption is denied or set aside, the court is to determine the child's custody. UAA §3-704. Those custody proceedings would be subject to this Act [chapter]. See Joan Heifetz Hollinger, The Uniform Adoption Act: Reporter's Ruminations, 30 Fam.L.Q. 345 (1996).

Children that are the subject of interstate placements for adoption or foster care are governed by the Interstate Compact on the Placement of Children (ICPC). The UAA §2-107 provides that the provisions of the compact, although not jurisdictional, supply the governing rules for all children who are subject to it. As stated in the Comments to that section: "Once a court exercises jurisdiction, the ICPC helps determine the legality of an interstate placement." For a discussion of the relationship between the UCCJA and the ICPC see J.D.S. v. Franks, 893 P.2d 732 (Ariz. 1995).

Proceedings pertaining to the authorization of emergency medical care for children are outside the scope of this Act [chapter] since they are not custody determinations. All States have procedures which allow the State to temporarily supersede parental authority for purposes of emergency medical procedures. Those provisions will govern without regard to this Act [chapter].

40-7-135. Application to Indian tribes.

Commissioners' Note

This section allows States the discretion to extend the terms of this Act [chapter] to Indian tribes by removing the brackets. The definition of "tribe" is found at Section 102(16) [40-7-103(16)]. This Act [chapter] does not purport to legislate custody jurisdiction for tribal courts. However, a Tribe could adopt this Act [chapter] as enabling legislation by simply replacing references to "this State" with "this Tribe."

Subsection (a) [(1)] is not bracketed. If the Indian Child Welfare Act requires that a case be heard in tribal court, then its provisions determine jurisdiction.

CASES DECIDED UNDER UCCJA

Indians — Subject Matter Jurisdiction Over Dissolution of Marriage — Different Residences of Parties — Factors to Be Considered — Bertelson Followed: Stacey, an enrolled member of the Fort Peck Tribes, married Shane, a non-Indian. After the marriage ceremony, Stacey returned to the Fort Peck Indian Reservation and Shane went to Forsyth, where his parents lived and where he worked. Some time later, Stacey had a child who also became an enrolled member and lived with Stacey on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation. Still later, Shane filed a dissolution action in a state District Court. The District Court ordered joint custody and ordered that Shane would be the primary residential custodian. Approximately 1 month later, the Fort Peck Tribal Court awarded temporary custody to Stacey. She then filed a motion in District Court under Rules 12(h) and 60, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), to dismiss Shane's dissolution action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. The District Court held that it had subject matter jurisdiction over the case and issued a final decree of dissolution. In that decree, the District Court held that the parties' child had significant contacts both off and on the reservation, held that the District Court shared concurrent jurisdiction with the tribal court, and therefore denied Stacey's motion to dismiss. The Supreme Court reviewed its previous holdings regarding tribal jurisdiction and child custody jurisdiction under the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act. The Supreme Court also reviewed the purposes of the Indian Child Welfare Act, which, while not strictly applicable to the case before it, cautions that state courts should be careful not to erode the sovereignty of tribes and tribal courts. In reliance upon In re Bertelson, 189 M 524, 617 P2d 121 (1980), the Supreme Court held that the best interests of the child should be determined and followed in deciding whether a state or tribal court has jurisdiction for the purposes of awarding custody but that when an Indian child resides off the reservation, state courts and tribal courts share concurrent jurisdiction. The Supreme Court then held, in further reliance upon Bertelson, that even when jurisdiction is concurrent, it does not mean that states courts should exercise jurisdiction and that in deciding whether to exercise concurrent jurisdiction, the state courts should consider: (1) 40-4-102, 40-4-107, 40-4-211, and 40-7-108; (2) certain policy issues; and (3) the residence of the parties pursuant to 1-1-215. For this reason, the Supreme Court remanded the case to the District Court for a determination of the residence of Stacey and her child, saying that if the District Court determines that both reside on the reservation, the District Court must dismiss the case. However, if the District Court finds that Stacey's child is not a resident of the reservation and that the District Court shares jurisdiction with the tribal court, the District Court must then consider factors from Bertelson, previously discussed by the Supreme Court, to determine whether the District Court or the tribal court is better able to determine the best interests of the child. 40-7-136. International application.

Commissioners' Note

The provisions of this Act [chapter] have international application to child custody proceedings and determinations of other countries. Another country will be treated as if it were a State of the United States for purposes of applying Articles 1 and 2 of this Act [parts 1 and 2 of this chapter]. Custody determinations of other countries will be enforced if the facts of the case indicate that jurisdiction was in substantial compliance with the requirements of this Act [chapter].

In this section, the term "child-custody determination" should be interpreted to include proceedings relating to custody or analogous institutions of the other country. See generally, Article 3 of The Hague Convention on Jurisdiction, Applicable Law, Recognition, Enforcement and Co-operation in Respect of Parental Responsibility and Measures for the Protection of Children. 35 I.L.M. 1391 (1996).

A court of this State may refuse to apply this Act [chapter] when the child custody law of the other country violates basic principles relating to the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms. The same concept is found in cf the Section 20 of the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction (return of the child may be refused if this would not be permitted by the fundamental principles of the requested State relating to the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms). In applying subsection (c) [(3)], the court's scrutiny should be on the child custody law of the foreign country and not on other aspects of the other legal system. This Act [chapter] takes no position on what laws relating to child custody would violate fundamental freedoms. While the provision is a traditional one in international agreements, it is invoked only in the most egregious cases.

40-7-138. Appearance and limited immunity.

Commissioners' Note

This section establishes a general principle that participation in a custody proceeding does not, by itself, give the court jurisdiction over any issue for which personal jurisdiction over the individual is required. The term "participate" should be read broadly. For example, if jurisdiction is proper under Article 2 [part 2], a respondent in an original custody determination, or a party in a modification determination, should be able to request custody without this constituting the seeking of affirmative relief that would waive personal jurisdictional objections. Once jurisdiction is proper under Article 2 [part 2], a party should not be placed in the dilemma of choosing between seeking custody or protecting a right not to be subject to a monetary judgment by a court with no other relationship to the party.

This section is comparable to the immunity provision of UIFSA §314. A party who is otherwise not subject to personal jurisdiction can appear in a custody proceeding or an enforcement action without being subject to the general jurisdiction of the State by virtue of the appearance. However, if the petitioner would otherwise be subject to the jurisdiction of the State, appearing in a custody proceeding or filing an enforcement proceeding will not provide immunity. Thus, if the non-custodial parent moves from the State that decided the custody determination, that parent is still subject to the state's jurisdiction for enforcement of child support if the child or an individual obligee continues to reside there. See UIFSA §205. If the non-custodial parent returns to enforce the visitation aspects of the custody determination, the State can utilize any appropriate means to collect the back-due child support. However, the situation is different if both parties move from State A after the determination, with the custodial parent and the child establishing a new home State in State B, and the non-custodial parent moving to State C. The non- custodial parent is not, at this point, subject to the jurisdiction of State B for monetary matters. See Kulko v. Superior Court, 436 U.S. 84 (1978). If the non-custodial parent comes into State B to enforce the visitation aspects of the determination, the non-custodial parent is not subject to the jurisdiction of State B for those proceedings and issues requiring personal jurisdiction by filing the enforcement action.

A party also is immune from service of process during the time in the State for an enforcement action except for those claims for which jurisdiction could be based on contacts other than mere physical presence. Thus, when the non- custodial parent comes into State B to enforce the visitation aspects of the decree, State B cannot acquire jurisdiction over the child support aspects of the decree by serving the non-custodial parent in the State. Cf. UIFSA §611 (personally serving the obligor in the State of the residence of the obligee is not by itself a sufficient jurisdictional basis to authorize a modification of child support). However, a party who is in this State and subject to the jurisdiction of another State may be served with process to appear in that State, if allowable under the laws of that State.

As the Comments to UIFSA §314 note, the immunity provided by this section is limited. It does not provide immunity for civil litigation unrelated to the enforcement action. For example, a party to an enforcement action is not immune from service regarding a claim that involves an automobile accident occurring while the party is in the State.

40-7-139. Communication between courts.

Commissioners' Note

This section emphasizes the role of judicial communications. It authorizes a court to communicate concerning any proceeding arising under this Act [chapter]. This includes communication with foreign tribunals and tribal courts. Communication can occur in many different ways such as by telephonic conference and by on- line or other electronic communication. The Act [chapter] does not preclude any method of communication and recognizes that there will be increasing use of modern communication techniques.

Communication between courts is required under Sections 204, 206, and 306 [40-7-107, 40-7-204, and 40-7-306] and strongly suggested in applying Section 207 [40-7-108]. Apart from those sections, there may be less need under this Act [chapter] for courts to communicate concerning jurisdiction due to the prioritization of home state jurisdiction. Communication is authorized, however, whenever the court finds it would be helpful. The court may authorize the parties to participate in the communication. However, the Act [chapter] does not mandate participation. Communication between courts is often difficult to schedule and participation by the parties may be impractical. Phone calls often have to be made after-hours or whenever the schedules of judges allow.

This section does require that a record be made of the conversation and that the parties have access to that record in order to be informed of the content of the conversation. The only exception to this requirement is when the communication involves relatively inconsequential matters such as scheduling, calendars, and court records. Included within this latter type of communication would be matters of cooperation between courts under Section 112 [40-7-140]. A record includes notes or transcripts of a court reporter who listened to a conference call between the courts, an electronic recording of a telephone call, a memorandum or an electronic record of the communication between the courts, or a memorandum or an electronic record made by a court after the communication.

The second sentence of subsection (b) [(2)] protects the parties against unauthorized ex parte communications. The parties' participation in the communication may amount to a hearing if there is an opportunity to present facts and jurisdictional arguments. However, absent such an opportunity, the participation of the parties should not to be considered a substitute for a hearing and the parties must be given an opportunity to fairly and fully present facts and arguments on the jurisdictional issue before a determination is made. This may be done through a hearing or, if appropriate, by affidavit or memorandum. The court is expected to set forth the basis for its jurisdictional decision, including any court-to-court communication which may have been a factor in the decision.

40-7-140. Cooperation between courts — preservation of records.

Commissioners' Note

This section is the heart of judicial cooperation provision of this Act [chapter]. It provides mechanisms for courts to cooperate with each other in order to decide cases in an efficient manner without causing undue expense to the parties. Courts may request assistance from courts of other States and may assist courts of other States.

The provision on the assessment of costs for travel provided in the UCCJA §19 [former 40-7-120] has been changed. The UCCJA provided that the costs may be assessed against the parties or the State or county. Assessment of costs against a government entity in a case where the government is not involved is inappropriate and therefore that provision has been removed. In addition, if the State is involved as a party, assessment of costs and expenses against the State must be authorized by other law. It should be noted that the term "expenses" means out-of-pocket costs. Overhead costs should not be assessed as expenses.

No other substantive changes have been made. The term "social study" as used in the UCCJA was replaced with the modern term: "custody evaluation." The Act [chapter] does not take a position on the admissibility of a custody evaluation that was conducted in another State. It merely authorizes a court to seek assistance of, or render assistance to, a court of another State.

This section combines the text of Sections 19-22 of the UCCJA [former 40-7-120 through 40-7-123].

40-7-201. Initial child custody jurisdiction.

Commissioners' Note

This section provides mandatory jurisdictional rules for the original child custody proceeding. It generally continues the provisions of the UCCJA §3 [former 40-7-104]. However, there have been a number of changes to the jurisdictional bases.

1. Home State Jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of the home State has been prioritized over other jurisdictional bases. Section 3 of the UCCJA [former 40-7-104] provided four independent and concurrent bases of jurisdiction. The PKPA provides that full faith and credit can only be given to an initial custody determination of a "significant connection" State when there is no home State.

This Act [chapter] prioritizes home state jurisdiction in the same manner as the PKPA thereby eliminating any potential conflict between the two acts.

The six-month extended home state provision of subsection (a)(1) [(1)(a)] has been modified slightly from the UCCJA. The UCCJA provided that home state jurisdiction continued for six months when the child had been removed by a person seeking the child's custody or for other reasons and a parent or a person acting as a parent continues to reside in the home State. Under this Act [chapter], it is no longer necessary to determine why the child has been removed. The only inquiry relates to the status of the person left behind. This change provides a slightly more refined home state standard than the UCCJA or the PKPA, which also requires a determination that the child has been removed "by a contestant or for other reasons." The scope of the PKPA's provision is theoretically narrower than this Act [chapter]. However, the phrase "or for other reasons" covers most fact situations where the child is not in the home State and, therefore, the difference has no substantive effect.

In another sense, the six-month extended home state jurisdiction provision is this Act [chapter] is narrower than the comparable provision in the PKPA. The PKPA's definition of extended home State is more expansive because it applies whenever a "contestant" remains in the home State. That class of individuals has been eliminated in this Act [chapter]. This Act [chapter] retains the original UCCJA classification of "parent or person acting as parent" to define who must remain for a State to exercise the six-month extended home state jurisdiction. This eliminates the undesirable jurisdictional determinations which would occur as a result of differing state substantive laws on visitation involving grandparents and others. For example, if State A's law provided that grandparents could obtain visitation with a child after the death of one of the parents, then the grandparents, who would be considered "contestants" under the PKPA, could file a proceeding within six months after the remaining parent moved and have the case heard in State A. However, if State A did not provide that grandparents could seek visitation under such circumstances, the grandparents would not be considered "contestants" and State B where the child acquired a new home State would provide the only forum. This Act [chapter] bases jurisdiction on the parent and child or person acting as a parent and child relationship without regard to grandparents or other potential seekers of custody or visitation. There is no conflict with the broader provision of the PKPA. The PKPA in . (c)(1) authorizes States to narrow the scope of their jurisdiction.

2. Significant connection jurisdiction. This jurisdictional basis has been amended in four particulars from the UCCJA. First, the "best interest" language of the UCCJA has been eliminated. This phrase tended to create confusion between the jurisdictional issue and the substantive custody determination. Since the language was not necessary for the jurisdictional issue, it has been removed.

Second, the UCCJA based jurisdiction on the presence of a significant connection between the child and the child's parents or the child and at least one contestant. This Act [chapter] requires that the significant connections be between the child, the child's parents or the child and a person acting as a parent.

Third, a significant connection State may assume jurisdiction only when there is no home State or when the home State decides that the significant connection State would be a more appropriate forum under Section 207 or 208 [40-7-108 or 40-7-109]. Fourth, the determination of significant connections has been changed to eliminate the language of "present or future care." The jurisdictional determination should be made by determining whether there is sufficient evidence in the State for the court to make an informed custody determination. That evidence might relate to the past as well as to the "present or future."

Emergency jurisdiction has been moved to a separate section. This is to make it clear that the power to protect a child in crisis does not include the power to enter a permanent order for that child except as provided by that section.

Paragraph (a)(3) [subsection (1)(c)] provides for jurisdiction when all States with jurisdiction under paragraphs (a)(1) and (2) [subsections (1)(a) and (1)(b)] determine that this State is a more appropriate forum. The determination would have to be made by all States with jurisdiction under subsection (a)(1) and (2) [subsections (1)(a) and (2)]. Jurisdiction would not exist under this paragraph because the home State determined it is a more appropriate place to hear the case if there is another State that could exercise significant connection jurisdiction under subsection (a)(2) [subsection (1)(b)].

Paragraph (a)(4) [subsection (1)(d)] retains the concept of jurisdiction by necessity as found in the UCCJA and in the PKPA. This default jurisdiction only occurs if no other State would have jurisdiction under subsections (a)(1) through (a)(3) [(1)(a) through (1)(c)].

Subsections (b) and (c) [(2) and (3)] clearly State the relationship between jurisdiction under this Act [chapter] and other forms of jurisdiction. Personal jurisdiction over, or the physical presence of, a parent or the child is neither necessary nor required under this Act [chapter]. In other words neither minimum contacts nor service within the State is required for the court to have jurisdiction to make a custody determination. Further, the presence of minimum contacts or service within the State does not confer jurisdiction to make a custody determination. Subject to Section 204 [40-7-204], satisfaction of the requirements of subsection (a) [(1)] is mandatory.

The requirements of this section, plus the notice and hearing provisions of the Act [chapter], are all that is necessary to satisfy due process. This Act [chapter], like the UCCJA and the PKPA is based on Justice Frankfurter's concurrence in May v. Anderson, 345 U.S. 528 (1953). As pointed out by Professor Bodenheimer, the reporter for the UCCJA, no "workable interstate custody law could be built around [Justice] Burton's plurality opinion... .Bridgette Bodenheimer, The Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act: A Legislative Remedy for Children Caught in the Conflict of Laws, 22 Vand.L.Rev. 1207,1233 (1969). It should also be noted that since jurisdiction to make a child custody determination is subject matter jurisdiction, an agreement of the parties to confer jurisdiction on a court that would not otherwise have jurisdiction under this Act [chapter] is ineffective.

40-7-202. Exclusive, continuing jurisdiction.

Commissioners' Note

This is a new section addressing continuing jurisdiction. Continuing jurisdiction was not specifically addressed in the UCCJA. Its absence caused considerable confusion, particularly because the PKPA, §1738(d), requires other States to give Full Faith and Credit to custody determinations made by the original decree State pursuant to the decree State's continuing jurisdiction so long as that State has jurisdiction under its own law and remains the residence of the child or any contestant.

This section provides the rules of continuing jurisdiction and borrows from UIFSA as well as recent UCCJA case law. The continuing jurisdiction of the original decree State is exclusive. It continues until one of two events occurs:

1. If a parent or a person acting as a parent remains in the original decree State, continuing jurisdiction is lost when neither the child, the child and a parent, nor the child and a person acting as a parent continue to have a significant connection with the original decree State and there is no longer substantial evidence concerning the child's care, protection, training and personal relations in that State. In other words, even if the child has acquired a new home State, the original decree State retains exclusive, continuing jurisdiction, so long as the general requisites of the "substantial connection" jurisdiction provisions of Section 201 [40-7-201] are met. If the relationship between the child and the person remaining in the State with exclusive, continuing jurisdiction becomes so attenuated that the court could no longer find significant connections and substantial evidence, jurisdiction would no longer exist.

The use of the phrase "a court of this State" under subsection (a)(1) [(1)(a)] makes it clear that the original decree State is the sole determinant of whether jurisdiction continues. A party seeking to modify a custody determination must obtain an order from the original decree State stating that it no longer has jurisdiction.

2. Continuing jurisdiction is lost when the child, the child's parents, and any person acting as a parent no longer reside in the original decree State. The exact language of subparagraph (a)(2) [subsection (1)(b)] was the subject of considerable debate. Ultimately the Conference settled on the phrase that "a court of this State or a court of another State determines that the child, the child's parents, and any person acting as a parent do not presently reside in this State" to determine when the exclusive, continuing jurisdiction of a State ended. The phrase is meant to be identical in meaning to the language of the PKPA which provides that full faith and credit is to be given to custody determinations made by a State in the exercise of its continuing jurisdiction when that "State remains the residence of.... "The phrase is also the equivalent of the language "continues to reside" which occurs in UIFSA . 205(a)(1) to determine the exclusive, continuing jurisdiction of the State that made a support order. The phrase "remains the residence of" in the PKPA has been the subject of conflicting case law. It is the intention of this Act [chapter] that paragraph (a)(2) of this section [subsection (1)(b)] means that the named persons no longer continue to actually live within the State. Thus, unless a modification proceeding has been commenced, when the child, the parents, and all persons acting as parents physically leave the State to live elsewhere, the exclusive, continuing jurisdiction ceases.

The phrase "do not presently reside" is not used in the sense of a technical domicile. The fact that the original determination State still considers one parent a domiciliary does not prevent it from losing exclusive, continuing jurisdiction after the child, the parents, and all persons acting as parents have moved from the State.

If the child, the parents, and all persons acting as parents have all left the State which made the custody determination prior to the commencement of the modification proceeding, considerations of waste of resources dictate that a court in State B, as well as a court in State A, can decide that State A has lost exclusive, continuing jurisdiction.

The continuing jurisdiction provisions of this section are narrower than the comparable provisions of the PKPA. That statute authorizes continuing jurisdiction so long as any "contestant" remains in the original decree State and that State continues to have jurisdiction under its own law. This Act [chapter] eliminates the contestant classification. The Conference decided that a remaining grandparent or other third party who claims a right to visitation, should not suffice to confer exclusive, continuing jurisdiction on the State that made the original custody determination after the departure of the child, the parents and any person acting as a parent. The significant connection to the original decree State must relate to the child, the child and a parent, or the child and a person acting as a parent. This revision does not present a conflict with the PKPA. The PKPA's reference in §1738(d) to §1738(c)(1) recognizes that States may narrow the class of cases that would be subject to exclusive, continuing jurisdiction. However, during the transition from the UCCJA to this Act [chapter], some States may continue to base continuing jurisdiction on the continued presence of a contestant, such as a grandparent. The PKPA will require that such decisions be enforced. The problem will disappear as States adopt this Act [chapter] to replace the UCCJA.

Jurisdiction attaches at the commencement of a proceeding. If State A had jurisdiction under this section at the time a modification proceeding was commenced there, it would not be lost by all parties moving out of the State prior to the conclusion of proceeding. State B would not have jurisdiction to hear a modification unless State A decided that State B was more appropriate under Section 207 [40-7-108].

Exclusive, continuing jurisdiction is not reestablished if, after the child, the parents, and all persons acting as parents leave the State, the non- custodial parent returns. As subsection (b) [(3)] provides, once a State has lost exclusive, continuing jurisdiction, it can modify its own determination only if it has jurisdiction under the standards of Section 201 [40-7-201]. If another State acquires exclusive continuing jurisdiction under this section, then its orders cannot be modified even if this State has once again become the home State of the child.

In accordance with the majority of UCCJA case law, the State with exclusive, continuing jurisdiction may relinquish jurisdiction when it determines that another State would be a more convenient forum under the principles of Section 207 [40-7-108].

40-7-203. Jurisdiction to modify determination.

Commissioners' Note

This section complements Section 202 [40-7-202] and is addressed to the court that is confronted with a proceeding to modify a custody determination of another State. It prohibits a court from modifying a custody determination made consistently with this Act [chapter] by a court in another State unless a court of that State determines that it no longer has exclusive, continuing jurisdiction under Section 202 [40-7-202] or that this State would be a more convenient forum under Section 207 [40-7-108]. The modification State is not authorized to determine that the original decree State has lost its jurisdiction. The only exception is when the child, the child's parents, and any person acting as a parent do not presently reside in the other State. In other words, a court of the modification State can determine that all parties have moved away from the original State. The court of the modification State must have jurisdiction under the standards of Section 201 [40-7-201].

Compiler's Comments

40-7-204. Temporary emergency jurisdiction.

Commissioners' Note

The provisions of this section are an elaboration of what was formerly Section 3(a)(3) of the UCCJA [see former 40-7-104]. It remains, as Professor Bodenheimer's comments to that section noted, "an extraordinary jurisdiction reserved for extraordinary circumstances."

This section codifies and clarifies several aspects of what has become common practice in emergency jurisdiction cases under the UCCJA and PKPA. First, a court may take jurisdiction to protect the child even though it can claim neither home State nor significant connection jurisdiction. Second, the duties of States to recognize, enforce and not modify a custody determination of another State do not take precedence over the need to enter a temporary emergency order to protect the child.

Third, a custody determination made under the emergency jurisdiction provisions of this section is a temporary order. The purpose of the order is to protect the child until the State that has jurisdiction under Sections 201-203 [40-7-201 through 40-7-203] enters an order.

Under certain circumstances, however, subsection (b) [(2)] provides that an emergency custody determination may become a final custody determination. If there is no existing custody determination, and no custody proceeding is filed in a State with jurisdiction under Sections 201-203 [40-7-201 through 40-7-203], an emergency custody determination made under this section becomes a final determination, if it so provides, when the State that issues the order becomes the home State of the child.

Subsection (c) [(3)] is concerned with the temporary nature of the order when there exists a prior custody order that is entitled to be enforced under this Act [chapter] or when a subsequent custody proceeding is filed in a State with jurisdiction under Sections 201-203 [40-7-201 through 40-7-203]. Subsection (c) [(3)] allows the temporary order to remain in effect only so long as is necessary for the person who obtained the determination under this section to present a case and obtain an order from the State with jurisdiction under Sections 201-203 [40-7-201 through 40-7-203]. That time period must be specified in the order. If there is an existing order by a State with jurisdiction under Sections 201-203 [40-7-201 through 40-7-203], that order need not be reconfirmed. The temporary emergency determination would lapse by its own terms at the end of the specified period or when an order is obtained from the court with jurisdiction under Sections 202-203 [40-7-202 and 40-7-203]. The court with appropriate jurisdiction also may decide, under the provisions of 207 [40-7-108], that the court that entered the emergency order is in a better position to address the safety of the person who obtained the emergency order, or the child, and decline jurisdiction under Section 207 [40-7-108].

Any hearing in the State with jurisdiction under Sections 201-203 [40-7-201 through 40-7-203] on the temporary emergency determination is subject to the provisions of Sections 111 and 112 [40-7-119 and 40-7-140]. These sections facilitate the presentation of testimony and evidence taken out of State. If there is a concern that the person obtaining the temporary emergency determination under this section would be in danger upon returning to the State with jurisdiction under Sections 201-203 [40-7-201 through 40-7-203], these provisions should be used.

Subsection (d) [(4)] requires communication between the court of the State that is exercising jurisdiction under this section and the court of another State that is exercising jurisdiction under Sections 201-203 [40-7-201 through 40-7-203]. The pleading rules of Section 209 [40-7-110] apply fully to determinations made under this section. Therefore, a person seeking a temporary emergency custody determination is required to inform the court pursuant to Section 209(d) [40-7-110(4)] of any proceeding concerning the child that has been commenced elsewhere. The person commencing the custody proceeding under Sections 201-203 [40-7-201 through 40-7-203] is required under Section 209(a) [40-7-110(1)] to inform the court about the temporary emergency proceeding. These pleading requirements are to be strictly followed so that the courts are able to resolve the emergency, protect the safety of the parties and the child, and determine a period for the duration of the temporary order.

Relationship to the PKPA. The definition of emergency has been modified to harmonize it with the PKPA. The PKPA's definition of emergency jurisdiction does not use the term "neglect." It defines an emergency as "mistreatment or abuse." Therefore "neglect" has been eliminated as a basis for the assumption of temporary emergency jurisdiction. Neglect is so elastic a concept that it could justify taking emergency jurisdiction in a wide variety of cases. Under the PKPA, if a State exercised temporary emergency jurisdiction based on a finding that the child was neglected without a finding of mistreatment or abuse, the order would not be entitled to federal enforcement in other States.

Relationship to Protective Order Proceedings. The UCCJA and the PKPA were enacted long before the advent of state procedures on the use of protective orders to alleviate problems of domestic violence. Issues of custody and visitation often arise within the context of protective order proceedings since the protective order is often invoked to keep one parent away from the other parent and the children when there is a threat of violence. This Act [chapter] recognizes that a protective order proceeding will often be the procedural vehicle for invoking jurisdiction by authorizing a court to assume temporary emergency jurisdiction when the child's parent or sibling has been subjected to or threatened with mistreatment or abuse.

In order for a protective order that contains a custody determination to be enforceable in another State it must comply with the provisions of this Act [chapter] and the PKPA. Although the Violence Against Women's Act (VAWA), 18 U.S.C. §2265, does provide an independent basis for the granting of full faith and credit to protective orders, it expressly excludes "custody" orders from the definition of "protective order," 22 U.S.C. §2266.

Many States authorize the issuance of protective orders in an emergency without notice and hearing. This Act [chapter] does not address the propriety of that procedure. It is left to local law to determine the circumstances under which such an order could be issued, and the type of notice that is required, in a case without an interstate element. However, an order issued after the assumption of temporary emergency jurisdiction is entitled to interstate enforcement and nonmodification under this Act [chapter] and the PKPA only if there has been notice and a reasonable opportunity to be heard as set out in Section 205 [40-7-105]. Although VAWA does require that full faith and credit be accorded to ex parte protective orders if notice will be given and there will be a reasonable opportunity to be heard, it does not include a "custody" order within the definition of "protective order."

VAWA does play an important role in determining whether an emergency exists. That Act [chapter] requires a court to give full faith and credit to a protective order issued in another State if the order is made in accordance with the VAWA. This would include those findings of fact contained in the order. When a court is deciding whether an emergency exists under this section, it may not relitigate the existence of those factual findings.

This section applies the enforcement remedies provided by this article [part] to orders requiring the return of a child issued under the authority of the International Child Abduction Remedies Act (ICARA), 42 U.S.C. §11601 et seq., implementing the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction. Specific mention of ICARA proceedings is necessary because they often occur prior to any formal custody determination. However, the need for a speedy enforcement remedy for an order to return the child is just as necessary.

40-7-303. Duty to enforce.

Commissioners' Note

This section is based on Section 13 of the UCCJA [former 40-7-114] which contained the basic duty to enforce. The language of the original section has been retained and the duty to enforce is generally the same.

Enforcement of custody determinations of issuing States is also required by federal law in the PKPA, 28 U.S.C. §1738A(a). The changes made in Article 2 of this Act [part 2] now make a State's duty to enforce and not modify a child custody determination of another State consistent with the enforcement and nonmodification provisions of the PKPA. Therefore custody determinations made by a State pursuant to the UCCJA that would be enforceable under the PKPA will generally be enforced under this Act [chapter]. However, if a State custody determination made pursuant to the UCCJA would not be enforceable under the PKPA, it will also not be enforceable under this Act [chapter]. Thus a custody determination made by a "significant connection" jurisdiction when there is a home State is not enforceable under the PKPA regardless of whether a proceeding was ever commenced in the home State. Even though such a determination would be enforceable under the UCCJA with its four concurrent bases of jurisdiction, it would not be enforceable under this Act [chapter]. This carries out the policy of the PKPA of strongly discouraging a State from exercising its concurrent "significant connection" jurisdiction under the UCCJA when another State could exercise "home state" jurisdiction.

This section also incorporates the concept of Section 15 of the UCCJA [former 40-7-116] to the effect that a custody determination of another State will be enforced in the same manner as a custody determination made by a court of this State. Whatever remedies are available to enforce a local determination can be utilized to enforce a custody determination of another State. However, it remains a custody determination of the State that issued it. A child-custody determination of another State is not subject to modification unless the State would have jurisdiction to modify the determination under Article 2 [part 2].

The remedies provided by this article [part] for the enforcement of a custody determination will normally be used. This article [part] does not detract from other remedies available under other local law. There is often a need for a number of remedies to ensure that a child-custody determination is obeyed. If other remedies would easily facilitate enforcement, they are still available. The petitioner, for example, can still cite the respondent for contempt of court or file a tort claim for intentional interference with custodial relations if those remedies are available under local law.

40-7-304. Temporary visitation.

Commissioners' Note

This section authorizes a court to issue a temporary order if it is necessary to enforce visitation rights without violating the rules on nonmodification contained in Section 303 [40-7-303]. Therefore, if there is a visitation schedule provided in the custody determination that was made in accordance with Article 2 [part 2], a court can issue an order under this section implementing the schedule. An implementing order may include make-up or substitute visitation.

A court may also issue a temporary order providing for visitation if visitation was authorized in the custody determination, but no specific schedule was included in the custody determination. Such an order could include a substitution of a specific visitation schedule for "reasonable and seasonable."

However, a court may not, under subsection (a)(2) [(1)(b)] provide for a permanent change in visitation. Therefore, requests for a permanent change in the visitation schedule must be addressed to the court with exclusive, continuing jurisdiction under Section 202 [40-7-202] or modification jurisdiction under Section 203 [40-7-203]. As under Section 204 [40-7-204], subsection (b) [(2)] of this section requires that the temporary visitation order stay in effect only long enough to allow the person who obtained the order to obtain a permanent modification in the State with appropriate jurisdiction under Article 2 [part 2].

40-7-305. Registration of child custody determination.

Commissioners' Note

This remainder of this article [part] provides enforcement mechanisms for interstate child custody determinations.

This section authorizes a simple registration procedure that can be used to predetermine the enforceability of a custody determination. It parallels the process in UIFSA for the registration of child support orders. It should be as much of an aid to pro se litigants as the registration procedure of UIFSA.

A custody determination can be registered without any accompanying request for enforcement. This may be of significant assistance in international cases. For example, the custodial parent under a foreign custody order can receive an advance determination of whether that order would be recognized and enforced before sending the child to the United States for visitation. Article 26 of the 1996 Hague Convention on Jurisdiction, Applicable Law, Recognition and Cooperation in Respect of Parental Responsibility and Measures for the Protection of Children, 35 I.L.M. 1391 (1996), requires those States which accede to the Convention to provide such a procedure.

40-7-306. Enforcement of registered determination.

Commissioners' Note

A registered child-custody determination can be enforced as if it was a child- custody determination of this State. However, it remains a custody determination of the State that issued it. A registered custody order is not subject to modification unless the State would have jurisdiction to modify the order under Article 2 [part 2].

40-7-307. Simultaneous proceedings.

Commissioners' Note

The pleading rules of Section 308 [40-7-308], require the parties to disclose any pending proceedings. Normally, an enforcement proceeding will take precedence over a modification action since the PKPA requires enforcement of child custody determinations made in accordance with its terms. However, the enforcement court must communicate with the modification court in order to avoid duplicative litigation. The courts might decide that the court with jurisdiction under Article 2 [part 2] shall continue with the modification action and stay the enforcement proceeding. Or they might decide that the enforcement proceeding shall go forward. The ultimate decision rests with the court having exclusive, continuing jurisdiction under Section 202 [40-7-202], or if there is no State with exclusive, continuing jurisdiction, then the decision rests with the State that would have jurisdiction to modify under Section 203 [40-7-203]. Therefore, if that court determines that the enforcement proceeding should be stayed or dismissed, the enforcement court should stay or dismiss the proceeding. If the enforcement court does not do so, the court with exclusive, continuing jurisdiction under Section 202 [40-7-202], or with modification jurisdiction under Section 203 [40-7-203], could enjoin the parties from continuing with the enforcement proceeding.

40-7-308. Expedited enforcement of child custody determination.

Commissioner's Note

This section provides the normal remedy that will be used in interstate cases: the production of the child in a summary, remedial process based on habeas corpus.

The petition is intended to provide the court with as much information as possible. Attaching certified copies of all orders sought to be enforced allows the court to have the necessary information. Most of the information relates to the permissible scope of the court's inquiry. The petitioner has the responsibility to inform the court of all proceedings that would affect the current enforcement action. Specific mention is made of certain proceedings to ensure that they are disclosed. A "procedure relating to domestic violence" includes not only protective order proceedings but also criminal prosecutions for child abuse or domestic violence.

The order requires the respondent to appear at a hearing on the next judicial day. The term "next judicial day" in this section means the next day when a judge is at the courthouse. At the hearing, the court will order the child to be delivered to the petitioner unless the respondent is prepared to assert that the issuing State lacked jurisdiction, that notice was not given in accordance with Section 108 [40-7-106], or that the order sought to be enforced has been vacated, modified, or stayed by a court with jurisdiction to do so under Article 2 [part 2]. The court is also to order payment of the fees and expenses set out in Section 312 [40-7-312]. The court may set another hearing to determine whether additional relief available under this state's law should be granted.

If the order has been registered and confirmed in accordance with Section 304 [40-7-304], the only defense to enforcement is that the order has been vacated, stayed or modified since the registration proceeding by a court with jurisdiction to do so under Article 2 [part 2].

40-7-310. Hearing and order.

Commissioners' Note

The scope of inquiry for the enforcing court is quite limited. Federal law requires the court to enforce the custody determination if the issuing state's decree was rendered in compliance with the PKPA. 28 U.S.C. §1738A(a). This Act [chapter] requires enforcement of custody determinations that are made in conformity with Article 2's [part 2's] jurisdictional rules.

The certified copy, or a copy of the certified copy, of the custody determination entitling the petitioner to the child is prima facie evidence of the issuing court's jurisdiction to enter the order. If the order is one that is entitled to be enforced under Article 2 [part 2] and if it has been violated, the burden shifts to the respondent to show that the custody determination is not entitled to enforcement.

It is a defense to enforcement that another jurisdiction has issued a custody determination that is required to be enforced under Article 2 [part 2]. An example is when one court has based its original custody determination on the UCCJA . 3(a)(2) [former 40-7-104(1)(b)] (significant connections) and another jurisdiction has rendered an original custody determination based on the UCCJA §3(a)(1) [former 40-7-104(1)(a)] (home State). When this occurs, Article 2 of this Act [part 2], as well as the PKPA, mandate that the home state determination be enforced in all other States, including the State that rendered the significant connections determination.

Lack of notice in accordance with Section 108 [40-7-106] by a person entitled to notice and opportunity to be heard at the original custody determination is a defense to enforcement of the custody determination. The scope of the defense under this Act [chapter] is the same as the defense would be under the law of the State that issued the notice. Thus, if the defense of lack of notice would not be available under local law if the respondent purposely hid from the petitioner, took deliberate steps to avoid service of process or elected not to participate in the initial proceedings, the defense would also not be available under this Act [chapter].

There are no other defenses to an enforcement action. If the child would be endangered by the enforcement of a custody or visitation order, there may be a basis for the assumption of emergency jurisdiction under Section 204 of this Act [40-7-204]. Upon the finding of an emergency, the court issues a temporary order and directs the parties to proceed either in the court that is exercising continuing jurisdiction over the custody proceeding under Section 202 [40-7-202], or the court that would have jurisdiction to modify the custody determination under Section 203 [40-7-203].

The court shall determine at the hearing whether fees should be awarded under Section 312 [40-7-312]. If so, it should order them paid. The court may determine if additional relief is appropriate, including requesting law enforcement officers to assist the petitioner in the enforcement of the order. The court may set a hearing to determine whether further relief should be granted.

The remainder of this section is derived from UIFSA §316 with regard to the privilege of self-incrimination, spousal privileges, and immunities. It is included to keep parallel the procedures for child support and child custody proceedings to the extent possible.

40-7-311. Warrant to take physical custody of child.

Commissioners' Note

The section provides a remedy for emergency situations where there is a reason to believe that the child will suffer imminent, serious physical harm or be removed from the jurisdiction once the respondent learns that the petitioner has filed an enforcement proceeding. If the court finds such harm exists, it should temporarily waive the notice requirements and issue a warrant to take physical custody of the child. Immediately after the warrant is executed, the respondent is to receive notice of the proceedings.

The term "harm" cannot be totally defined and, as in the issuance of temporary retraining orders, the appropriate issuance of a warrant is left to the circumstances of the case. Those circumstances include cases where the respondent is the subject of a criminal proceeding as well as situations where the respondent is secreting the child in violation of a court order, abusing the child, a flight risk and other circumstances that the court concludes make the issuance of notice a danger to the child. The court must hear the testimony of the petitioner or another witness prior to issuing the warrant. The testimony may be heard in person, via telephone, or by any other means acceptable under local law. The court must state the reasons for the issuance of the warrant. The warrant can be enforced by law enforcement officers wherever the child is found in the State. The warrant may authorize entry upon private property to pick up the child if no less intrusive means are possible. In extraordinary cases, the warrant may authorize law enforcement to make a forcible entry at any hour.

The warrant must provide for the placement of the child pending the determination of the enforcement proceeding. Since the issuance of the warrant would not occur absent a risk of serious harm to the child, placement cannot be with the respondent. Normally, the child would be placed with the petitioner. However, if placement with the petitioner is not indicated, the court can order any other appropriate placement authorized under the laws of the court's State. Placement with the petitioner may not be indicated if there is a likelihood that the petitioner also will flee the jurisdiction. Placement with the petitioner may not be practical if the petitioner is proceeding through an attorney and is not present before the court.

This section authorizes the court to utilize whatever means are available under local law to ensure the appearance of the petitioner and child at the enforcement hearing. Such means might include cash bonds, a surrender of a passport, or whatever the court determines is necessary.

40-7-312. Costs, fees, and expenses.

Commissioners' Note

This section is derived from the International Child Abduction Remedies Act, 42 U.S.C. §11607(b)(3). Normally the court will award fees and costs against the non-prevailing party. Included as expenses are the amount of investigation fees incurred by private persons or by public officials as well as the cost of child placement during the proceedings.

The non-prevailing party has the burden of showing that such an award would be clearly inappropriate. Fees and costs may be inappropriate if their payment would cause the parent and child to seek public assistance.

This section implements the policies of Section 8(c) of Pub.L. 96-611 (part of the PKPA) which provides that:

In furtherance of the purposes of section 1738A of title 28, United States Code [this section], as added by subsection (a) of this section, State courts are encouraged to-

(2) award to the person entitled to custody or visitation pursuant to a custody determination which is consistent with the provisions of such section 1738A [this section], necessary travel expenses, attorneys' fees, costs of private investigations, witness fees or expenses, and other expenses incurred in connection with such custody determination....

The term "prevailing party" is not given a special definition for this Act [chapter]. Each State will apply its own standard.

Subsection (b) [(2)] was added to ensure that this section would not apply to the State unless otherwise authorized. The language is taken from UIFSA §313 (court may assess costs against obligee or support enforcement agency only if allowed by local law).

40-7-314. Appeals.

Commissioners' Note

The order may be appealed as an expedited civil matter. An enforcement order should not be stayed by the court. Provisions for a stay would defeat the purpose of having a quick enforcement procedure. If there is a risk of serious mistreatment or abuse to the child, a petition to assume emergency jurisdiction must be filed under Section 204 [40-7-204]. This section leaves intact the possibility of obtaining an extraordinary remedy such as mandamus or prohibition from an appellate court to stay the court's enforcement action. In many States, it is not possible to limit the constitutional authority of appellate courts to issue a stay. However, unless the information before the appellate panel indicates that emergency jurisdiction would be assumed under Section 204 [40-7-204], there is no reason to stay the enforcement of the order pending appeal.

40-7-315. Role of prosecutor.

Commissioners' Note

Sections 315-317 [40-7-315 through 40-7-317] are derived from the recommendations of the Obstacles Study that urge a role for public authorities in civil enforcement of custody and visitation determinations. One of the basic policies behind this approach is that, as is the case with child support, the involvement of public authorities will encourage the parties to abide by the terms of the court order. The prosecutor usually would be the most appropriate public official to exercise authority under this section. However, States may locate the authority described in the section in the most appropriate public office for their governmental structure. The authority could be, for example, the Friend of the Court Office or the Attorney General. If the parties know that prosecutors and law enforcement officers are available to help secure the return of a child, the parties may be deterred from interfering with the exercise of rights established by court order.

The use of public authorities should provide a more effective method of remedying violations of the custody determination. Most parties do not have the resources to enforce a custody determination in another jurisdiction. The availability of the prosecutor or other government official as an enforcement agency will help ensure that remedies of this Act [chapter] can be made available regardless of income level. In addition, the prosecutor may have resources to draw on that are unavailable to the average litigant.

The role of the public authorities should generally not begin until there is a custody determination that is sought to be enforced. The Act [chapter] does not authorize the public authorities to be involved in the action leading up to the making of the custody determination, except when requested by the court, when there is a violation the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction, or when the person holding the child has violated a criminal statute. This Act [chapter] does not mandate that the public authorities be involved in all cases referred to it. There is only so much time and money available for enforcement proceedings. Therefore, the public authorities eventually will develop guidelines to determine which cases will receive priority.

The use of civil procedures instead of, or in addition to, filing and prosecuting criminal charges enlarges the prosecutor's options and may provide a more economical and less disruptive means of solving problems of criminal abduction and retention. With the use of criminal proceedings alone, the procedure may be inadequate to ensure the return of the child. The civil options would permit the prosecutor to resolve that recurring and often frustrating problem.

A concern was expressed about whether allowing the prosecutor to use civil means as a method of settling a child abduction violated either DR 7-105(A) of the Code of Professional Responsibility or Model Rule of Professional Responsibility 4.4. Both provisions either explicitly or implicitly disapprove of a lawyer threatening criminal action to gain an advantage in a civil case. However, the prohibition relates to threats that are solely to gain an advantage in a civil case. If the prosecutor has a good faith reason for pursuing the criminal action, there is no ethical violation. See Committee on Legal Ethics v. Printz, 416 S.E. 2d 720 (W.Va. 1992) (lawyer can threaten to press criminal charges against a client's former employee unless employee made restitution).

It must be emphasized that the public authorities do not become involved in the merits of the case. They are authorized only to locate the child and enforce the custody determination. The public authority is authorized by this section to utilize any civil proceeding to secure the enforcement of the custody determination. In most jurisdictions, that would be a proceeding under this Act [chapter]. If the prosecutor proceeds pursuant to this Act [chapter], the prosecutor is subject to its provisions. There is nothing in this Act [chapter] that would prevent a State from authorizing the prosecutor or other public official to use additional remedies beyond those provided in this Act [chapter].

The public authority does not represent any party to the custody determination. It acts as a "friend of the court." Its role is to ensure that the custody determination is enforced.

Sections 315-317 [40-7-315 through 40-7-317] are limited to cases covered by this Act [chapter], i.e. interstate cases. However, States may, if they wish, extend this part of the Act [chapter] to intrastate cases.

It should also be noted that the provisions of this section relate to the civil enforcement of child custody determinations. Nothing in this section is meant to detract from the ability of the prosecutor to use criminal provisions in child abduction cases.

1983 Amendment: In (1), substituted language allowing court to grant visitation to a grandparent for former text that read: "If the father or mother of an unmarried child is deceased, the district court may grant to the parents of the deceased person reasonable visitation rights with the child"; inserted (3) stating how often one may petition under the section; and inserted (4) allowing court to appoint an attorney to represent child's interests.

Case Notes

Great-Grandparent Visitation: Mother challenged the award of visitation rights to a child's great-grandmother and great-great-grandmother when the child was in the father's custody on grounds that the grandparent visitation statutes do not address great-grandparent visitation. Absent allegations of attempted independent great-grandparent visitation or a trial court finding on independent great-grandparent visitation rights, the issue was moot. In re Marriage of Dreesbach, 265 M 216, 875 P2d 1018, 51 St. Rep. 374 (1994).

Conditional Exercise of Grandparent Visitation: It was not an abuse of District Court discretion to grant grandparents the right of visitation only if the visitation was simultaneous with that of the father. In re Marriage of Kovash, 260 M 44, 858 P2d 351, 50 St. Rep. 934 (1993).

Adoption by Stepparent — No Mandatory Termination of Grandparents' Visitation: There is no clear legislative intent or public policy that mandates termination of visitation for natural grandparents when a grandchild is adopted by a stepparent. Kanvick v. Reilly, 233 M 324, 760 P2d 743, 45 St. Rep. 1524 (1988).

Grant of Grandparents' Visitation in Child's Best Interest Only: This section allows a court to grant a grandparent visitation rights only after a finding that the visitation would be in the child's best interest. The District Court properly refused adoption of a visitation schedule in the grandparents' home, which would subject the child to contact with her father, yet allowed the grandparents to visit the child in her mother's home. Kanvick v. Reilly, 233 M 324, 760 P2d 743, 45 St. Rep. 1524 (1988).

Reasonableness of Grandparent Visitation Schedule: The trial court granted to grandparents a total of 4 weeks per year of visitation, plus holidays, and allowed additional visitation conditioned on the mother's approval. Such a schedule was reasonable and provided adequate access to the child by the grandparents. In re Marriage of Jacobson, 228 M 458, 743 P2d 1025, 44 St. Rep. 1678 (1987).

MINORS

RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS OF MINORS

Part 1
Minority

41-1-101. Minors and adults defined.

Case Notes

Interpretation of Decree Provision on Termination of Support Obligation: In the decree of dissolution, the paragraph immediately following the paragraph concerning payment of child support provided that "Upon termination of the child support obligation" the appellant must pay the respondent maintenance until her death or remarriage. A dispute arose over the meaning of "termination of the child support obligation". The Supreme Court held that the District Court's ruling that the obligation terminated when the appellant stopped making monthly child support payments, rather than when the youngest child turned 18, was not clearly erroneous. In re Marriage of Jones, 218 M 441, 709 P2d 158, 42 St. Rep. 1722 (1985).

Custody and Support — "Child" Defined — Majority Age: Upon attaining the age of 18 a person is an adult and is no longer a "child" within the purview of 40-6-211 of whom parents are entitled to custody or to whom parents are obligated for support, despite the fact that at the time of the decree the legal age was 21. Chrestenson v. Chrestenson, 180 M 96, 589 P2d 148 (1979).

Family Allowance From Estate: When daughter became 18 years old, her right to receive a family allowance under sections 91-2401 through 91-2403, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), terminated. In re Hall's Estate, 124 M 355, 224 P2d 138 (1950).

Admission to State School for Girls: The controlling element in juvenile laws is age, not minority. Hence, contention that female cannot be committed to State Vocational School for Girls (Mountain View School) after she reaches age of majority cannot be sustained. State ex rel. Foot v. District Court, 77 M 290, 250 P 973, 49 ALR 398 (1926).

Case Notes

No Wrongful Death Action for Death of Unborn Child: In view of the rule for calculating the periods of minority set forth in 41-1-102, an unborn fetus is not a "minor child" within the meaning of 27-1-512 and thus an action for the wrongful death of an unborn child cannot be maintained under present state law. Case Notes

Supreme Court Recognizes Wrongful Death Claim for Stillborn Fetus: Alexa Strzelczyk brought a wrongful death action against her physician for the death of her full-term, stillborn fetus. The defendant, Jett, removed the case to federal court because neither party still resided in Montana. The federal court certified the case to the state Supreme Court because of the state court's decision in Kuhnke v. Fisher, 210 M 114, 683 P2d 916 (1984), holding that under state law at that time, wrongful death statutes did not support a claim for the death of a stillborn fetus. The federal court noted that the statutes had been revised since the 1984 decision. The Supreme Court ruled that the revised statutes provided for an action for the wrongful death of a "person", rather than "minor child", and that a child conceived but not yet born is defined as an "existing person" under the law, so far as may be necessary for its interest in the event of its subsequent birth. The Supreme Court noted that "live" birth is not statutorily required. The Supreme Court also held that each case must be considered carefully to determine if the circumstances make it "necessary" for the fetus to be determined to be a person in order to protect some interest. Case Notes

No Attorney Appointed in Estate-Related Proceeding — Minors' Interests Amply Protected: Section 91-4316, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), imposed on the court the responsibility to look after the interests of minors. In a proceeding for the sale of realty brought by the administrator, the interests of the adults were the same as those of the minor heirs. The court might reasonably conclude that the interests of the heirs were amply protected by their adult sisters and that the additional expense of appointing an attorney to represent the minor heirs was unwarranted. That decision was in the court's sound discretion, and the fact that no attorney was appointed did not affect the validity of the proceedings. Haugan v. Yale Oil Corp., 124 M 1, 217 P2d 1084 (1950), following State ex rel. Hamilton v. District Court, 102 M 341, 57 P2d 1227 (1936), and State ex rel. Cotter v. District Court, 34 M 306, 87 P 615 (1906).

Infant Not to Appear Without Guardian: Sections 93-2805 and 93-2806, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), provided that an infant must appear in an action either by his general guardian or by a guardian ad litem appointed by the court. An infant defendant without a general guardian cannot appear until a guardian is appointed. Here, where a default judgment was taken against infant defendant, he could not be held responsible for his counsel's inadvertent failure to appear after consultation with his father prior to the appointment of a guardian. Maloney v. Schandelmier, 65 M 531, 212 P 493 (1923).

Appearance by General Guardian: At common law an infant plaintiff sues by guardian ad litem, but under statutes of this state he appears by his general guardian or his guardian ad litem. Melzner v. N. Pac. Ry., 46 M 162, 127 P 146 (1912); Flaherty v. Butte Elec. Ry., 40 M 454, 107 P 416 (1910).

Emancipation as Not Removing Minority: The emancipation of a minor by his parents does not render him capable of suing without a guardian. Where the complaint showed the plaintiff to be a minor, it was not subject to demurrer (demurrer abolished, Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P. and 25-31-503, now repealed) because of a plaintiff's want of capacity to sue. A guardian should be appointed and his name inserted. Hoskins v. White, 13 M 70, 32 P 163 (1893).

Agency — Parents' Neglect to Give Notice Not Imputable to Child — Child Incapable of Appointing Agent: Neglect of parents of injured child to give 60-day notice under section 11-1305, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), may not be imputed to the child, and since, under this section, a child is incapable of appointing an agent for any purpose, it is questionable whether the statute can be complied with in that respect by anyone as agent. Case Notes

Workers' Compensation — Disaffirmation of Settlement Agreement by Minor: A minor was injured while working and filed for workers' compensation benefits. He subsequently signed a settlement agreement after negotiating with a claims adjuster. The claimant's filing of a petition to reopen his claim resulted in a hearing and the conclusion that the case was closed. The claimant appealed, based on his minority status at the time of the settlement and his concomitant right to disaffirm contracts. The Supreme Court held that the close relationship and continuing awareness of the claimant's mother during the claims negotiations were of no avail to the defendants because only the minor claimant had signed the settlement. The defendants should have required the claimant's legal guardian to sign as well as the claimant. Accordingly, the final compromise settlement was set aside. Parrent v. Midway Toyota, 192 M 118, 626 P2d 848, 38 St. Rep. 559 (1981).

No Form Prescribed: A minor who had purchased an automobile on time redelivered it to the seller in substantially the same condition and waived any claim for the amount paid on the purchase price. He notified the seller of his intention to disaffirm the contract in two notes. No particular form of disaffirmance is prescribed by law. The unequivocal acts on the minor's part by which his intentions were made known to the seller were sufficient. Stanhope v. Shambow, 54 M 360, 170 P 752 (1918).

Contract for Conveyance Upon Majority: The defendants purchased a tract of land from the plaintiff when he was a minor, taking a written obligation from him that he would execute a deed to them when he became of age. The obligation stated that he would execute the deed in consideration of $150 paid to him. The consideration, however, was paid to his father, from whom defendants received a written guaranty that the son would execute said deed when he became of age. Plaintiff upon reaching majority disaffirmed the contract. He was not required to restore the consideration or give notice of disaffirmance prior to the beginning of the suit, as the suit itself was sufficient notice of disaffirmance. Clark v. Tate, 7 M 171, 14 P 761 (1887).

Case Notes

Workers' Compensation — Disaffirmation of Settlement Agreement by Minor: A minor was injured while working and filed for workers' compensation benefits. He subsequently signed a settlement agreement after negotiating with a claims adjuster. The claimant's filing of a petition to reopen his claim resulted in a hearing and the conclusion that the case was closed. The claimant appealed, based on his minority status at the time of the settlement and his concomitant right to disaffirm contracts. The Supreme Court held that the close relationship and continuing awareness of the claimant's mother during the claims negotiations were of no avail to the defendants because only the minor claimant had signed the settlement. The defendants should have required the claimant's legal guardian to sign as well as the claimant. Accordingly, the final compromise settlement was set aside. Parrent v. Midway Toyota, 192 M 118, 626 P2d 848, 38 St. Rep. 559 (1981).

Restoration of Consideration:

Minor may disaffirm contract without restoring consideration to other party when, from the very nature of the consideration, it cannot be returned (as in case of services performed by attorneys under contract of employment to institute an action). Downey v. N. Pac. Ry., 72 M 166, 232 P 531 (1924).

When infant purchaser of automobile disaffirmed contract of purchase and made complete restoration by redelivering it in substantially the same condition as when he bought it, both he and his sureties were discharged from further liability. Stanhope v. Shambow, 54 M 360, 170 P 753 (1918).

An infant may disaffirm contracts made by him, other than those for necessaries and those entered into under express statutory authority or direction, during infancy or within a reasonable time after reaching majority, provided he first makes restoration of consideration, thus placing the other party in status quo. Stanhope v. Shambow, 54 M 360, 170 P 753 (1918).

Limited Emancipation Decisions Not Subject to Appellate Mediation Requirements: Rule 54, M.R.App.P. CASES PRIOR TO 1993 ACT

Immunity of Employer Under Workers' Compensation Act: When a 13 year-old girl, unlawfully employed as operator of a passenger elevator, was killed in the performance of her duties and had failed to serve upon the employer a written notice of her election not to be bound by Workers'

Compensation Act, she being an "employee" under 39-71-118 expressly including minors "whether lawfully or unlawfully employed", it was held that her insured employer was immune from common-law or statutory suits for damages brought by her mother as administratrix. Tarrant v. Helena Bldg. & Realty Co., 116 M 319, 156 P2d 168 (1944).

Defenses Not Available: In an action such as this the defenses of contributory negligence and assumption of risk are not available. Daly v. Swift & Co., 90 M 52, 300 P 265 (1931), distinguished in Shaw v. Kendall, 114 M 323, 136 P2d 748 (1943).

Knowledge: Since a corporate defendant in an action based on a violation of the Child Labor Law can only have vicarious knowledge of any fact, the knowledge of its managing officers that a minor of the prohibited age was being employed in a proscribed labor constitutes the knowledge required by the act. Daly v. Swift & Co., 90 M 52, 300 P 265 (1931).

Negligence Per Se: Violation of the child labor law is negligence per se. Daly v. Swift & Co., 90 M 52, 300 P 265 (1931).

Responsibility for Independent Contractor: The fact that a boy under the age of 16 years was employed by an independent contractor in making repairs on a freight elevator when injured was immaterial, it having been defendant company's duty, being in full possession of the building and elevator and with knowledge that he was engaged in forbidden labor, to see to it that he was not permitted to continue therein. Daly v. Swift & Co., 90 M 52, 300 P 265 (1931).

What Constitutes Cause of Action: Complaint in an action to recover damages for the death of a boy under the age of 12 years alleging, inter alia, that defendant company knowingly and negligently permitted the boy to be employed by an independent contractor in and about heavy elevator machinery while being moved, contrary to the provisions of the child labor law, it was held not open to the objection that it did not state a cause of action in that it showed on its face that deceased was not in the employ of defendant but that of the contractor. Daly v. Swift & Co., 90 M 52, 300 P 265 (1931).

Invalidity of Act as to Dangerous Occupations Not Specifically Enumerated: When the Legislature undertakes to define a new offense, the statute must be so explicit that all persons subject to its penalty may know what acts to avoid, and under that rule the provision of 41-2-101 (now repealed) making it a misdemeanor to employ a child under the age of 16 years "in any occupation ... known to be dangerous" is so uncertain as to the kind and nature of occupations intended to come within the prohibited class as to render it void. Burk v. Mont. Power Co., 79 M 52, 255 P 337 (1927), distinguished in Shaw v. Kendall, 114 M 323, 136 P2d 748 (1943).

Requisites of Complaint for Damages: The complaint in an action by a minor against a railway company to recover damages for personal injuries, making it negligence per se for an employer to hire a child under 16, must allege that defendant employed plaintiff knowing him to have been under that age. Fallon v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry., 61 M 130, 200 P 453 (1921).

CHILD ABUSE AND NEGLECT

Chapter Compiler's Comments

Preamble: The preamble to SB 301 (Ch. 543, L. 1979) provided: "WHEREAS, Governor Judge appointed a task force to recommend ways in which services to families in which abuse and neglect are occurring could be improved; and

WHEREAS, the task force recognizes that the most crucial actions toward improving services to families must be taken by the local community; and

WHEREAS, the task force recognizes that child abuse and neglect is a multifaceted problem and that no one agency or discipline, by itself, has the resources or perspective to resolve or contain the problem; and

WHEREAS, the task force has heard testimony from numerous individuals, legislative staff, and other persons who deal with abused and neglected children and their families; and

WHEREAS, existing child abuse and neglect laws do not meet requirements allowing Montana to qualify for federal grants under Public Law 93-247.

THEREFORE, it is the intent of this bill to address the problems facing the children, families, and communities of this state regarding child abuse and neglect."

Chapter Case Notes

No Authority to Grant Third-Party Petition for Parenting Plan Absent Termination of Parental Rights: A young, single mother left her child in the temporary care of the Knopps, her aunt and uncle, while she sought employment and a place to live. About 2 months after the child was left with them, the Knopps petitioned for a parenting plan and support for the child. Although the document was referred to as a petition for a parenting plan, child support, and medical support, it was the functional equivalent of a petition for permanent custody. The Knopps applied for temporary custody and received it, ex parte, so that when the mother returned and tried to remove the child to their new home, she was not allowed to do so. The mother then sought termination of the guardianship and the return of her child. The mother's parental rights were never terminated or suspended by the state or county, nor were any proceedings ever commenced to demonstrate that the child was abused, dependent, or neglected. The District Court dismissed the petition, relying on In re Guardianship of D.T.N., 275 M 480, 914 P2d 579 (1996), in holding that the mother had a constitutional right to custody of her child and that permanent guardianship could not be granted because the mother's parental rights had not been terminated or suspended. The Knopps appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The rule of law does not permit destruction of a natural parent's fundamental right to the custody of a child based simply on the subjective determination of the child's best interests. Rather, a natural parent cannot be denied custody of a child absent termination of parental rights for abuse or neglect pursuant to this chapter. In re Parenting of J.N.P., 2001 MT 120, 305 M 351, 27 P3d 953 (2001). See also In re A.R.A., 276 M 66, 919 P2d 388 (1996), and Girard v. Williams, 1998 MT 231, 291 M 49, 966 P2d 1155 (1998).

Best Interest of Child Standard Unconstitutional in Custody Award to Nonparent Over Natural Parent Absent Finding of Abuse, Neglect, or Dependency: The best interest of the child standard incorporated into 40-4-221 in determining the custody of a child whose custodial parent dies is unconstitutional to the extent that it allows the grant of a petition prior to the termination of the noncustodial parent's constitutional right to custody. Use of the standard is improper in that any showing that a nonparent may be able to provide a better environment than a natural parent is irrelevant to the question of custody between the two in view of the constitutional right of a parent to custody. Although 40-4-221 gives a nonparent standing to request a custody hearing, it does not give the District Court authority to deprive a natural parent of the right to custody absent a finding of abuse, neglect, or dependency on the part of the natural parent. In re A.R.A., 276 M 66, 919 P2d 388, 53 St. Rep. 543 (1996), following In re Doney, 174 M 282, 570 P2d 575 (1977), and overruling Brost v. Glasgow, 200 M 194, 651 P2d 32 (1982), and In re C.G., 228 M 118, 740 P2d 1139 (1987).

Indian Child Welfare Act — Burden of Proof for Placement in Foster Care: D.F and L.F., natural children of appellant who is an enrolled member of the Three Affiliated Tribes, were taken from appellant and placed in a foster home by the Department of Family Services (now Department of Health and Human Services). The Supreme Court found that the District Court had properly applied the standard of the Indian Child Welfare Act of 1978 requiring "clear and convincing" evidence that continued custody by appellant was likely to result in emotional or physical harm to her children and that clear and convincing evidence was shown to the District Court. All of the expert witnesses who testified gave examples of actions by appellant or her live-in male roommate that endangered the psychological or physical well-being of the children. Therefore, even though the District Court did not specifically state the burden of proof, the proof required by 25 U.S.C. 1912(e) was satisfied. In re L.F. & D.F., 266 M 461, 880 P2d 1365, 51 St. Rep. 900 (1994).

Marriage and Divorce Law Inapplicable to Nonparent Seeking Child Custody: As part of a change in custody proceeding conducted under the marriage and divorce statutes, the District Court erred in granting to a nonparent the custody of a child who was neither a natural child nor adopted. The proper procedure to be followed is contained in the child abuse, neglect, and dependency statutes. Although the nonparent apparently fit the requirements for custodian under either scenario, the case was remanded for correct procedural consideration under this chapter. In re Marriage of Miller, 251 M 300, 825 P2d 189, 49 St. Rep. 36 (1992), following In re Doney, 174 M 282, 570 P2d 575 (1977), and overruling a contrary prior holding in In re Custody of C.C., K.C., & B.C., 215 M 72, 695 P2d 816 (1985).

Exclusion of Evidence on Child Abuse Proceeding Concerning Father — Harmless Error: It was harmless error, in a child custody modification proceeding, for a District Court judge to exclude evidence that a petition for temporary investigative authority (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427), alleging sexual abuse by the father, had been filed under Title 41, ch. 3, and dismissed for lack of evidence after being heard by the same judge who made the custody modification determination. In re Marriage of Stout, 216 M 342, 701 P2d 729, 42 St. Rep. 856 (1985).

No Requirement for Determination on Exact Cause and Nature of Child's Problems: Title 41, ch. 3, does not require a determination of the exact nature and cause of a child's problems before reaching a proper decision. When the trial court's findings were supported by substantial and credible evidence after a thorough and intense examination of all factors presented, the mother cannot prevail under the theory that the evidence did not support the court's findings that her child was a youth in need of care or under the contention that, at most, the nature and cause of her child's problems could not be determined. In re B.L.O., 213 M 164, 689 P2d 1246, 41 St. Rep. 2024 (1984).

Dependent and Neglected Finding Invalid When Entered in Guardianship Proceeding: A District Court finding that children were dependent and neglected was invalid since it was rendered in a guardianship proceeding instituted by the paternal grandparents rather than in a proceeding instituted to have the children declared dependent and neglected, as it must be, by the County Attorney under Title 41, ch. 3. In re Guardianship of Aschenbrenner, 182 M 540, 597 P2d 1156 (1979). However, see also In re L.E.B., 259 M 492, 856 P2d 1382, 50 St. Rep. 895 (1993), in which Aschenbrenner was distinguished in a case brought under adoption proceedings rather than guardianship proceedings.

Procedures to Be Rigorously Followed: While there is some overlap in the various statutory schemes governing the termination of parental rights and the custody of children as to general subject matter, each is used for a distinct purpose and sets forth specific procedures which must be rigorously followed before a valid judgment or order may be issued, to insure that the minors involved receive the full protection of these laws. In re Guardianship of Aschenbrenner, 182 M 540, 597 P2d 1156 (1979).

Termination of Parental Rights: The State may not terminate a parent's right to raise his or her own child merely because a court or state agency feels that a nonparent has more financial resources or pursues a preferable lifestyle. In re Inquiry into J.L.B., Youth in Need of Care, 182 M 100, 594 P2d 1127 (1979).

Names of Parties: The Supreme Court directed that in this and in future cases under 41-3-101, et seq., in both the District and Supreme Courts, all names of parties involved be removed to avoid publicity of the minor parties involved. In re Gore, Youth in Need of Care, 174 M 321, 570 P2d 1110 (1977).

Case Notes

Appropriateness of Treatment Plan Requirement That Parents Provide Explanation of Child's Injuries: Four treatment plans were developed with the parents, the purpose of all of which was to: (1) return the child to parental custody; (2) enable the parents to provide a safe and nurturing environment for the child; (3) enable the parents to develop an awareness of the child's needs and an ability to meet those needs; (4) help the parents develop minimal parenting skills; and (5) resolve the issues that led to the child's abuse, which included a requirement that the parents provide a reasonable and consistent explanation for the child's injuries. The parents were subsequently convicted of endangering the welfare of the child, and the state petitioned for custody. Prior to the permanent custody hearing, the mother moved to strike the task that required an explanation of the child's injuries, but the state never filed a brief in response to the motion. Nevertheless, the motion was denied. Following the termination of the mother's parental rights, she challenged the appropriateness of that task on grounds that the task placed her in the untenable position of having to choose between incriminating herself and failing to complete the treatment plan, in violation of her right against self-incrimination, relying on In re A.N., 2000 MT 35, 298 M 237, 995 P2d 427 (2000). The Supreme Court found her reliance on In re A.N. misplaced. The mother waived her self-incrimination privileges by voluntarily testifying regarding her knowledge of the child's injuries at both the permanent custody hearing and during the criminal proceeding and could not argue later that the disputed task impinged on her constitutional privilege against self-incrimination. Further, the state's duty to protect children, as set out in this section, necessitated that the parents come to terms with the reasons why the child was abused, and without demonstrable willingness from the parents to resolve the abuse issues, the District Court had no assurance that the child would not be abused again. Thus, the task was a fair requirement in the treatment plan, and the District Court did not err in concluding that the plan was appropriate or in denying the motion to strike the task from the plan. Denying the motion was within the court's discretion regardless of whether the state filed a brief in response to the motion. In re A.C., 2001 MT 126, 305 M 404, 27 P3d 960 (2001).

No Duty to Third Party: This section describes a duty parents owe to their children, not to third parties. The rule in Montana is that a parent is not liable for a child's tort except as provided in 27-1-718 and 40-6-237. J.L. v. Kienenberger, 257 M 113, 848 P2d 472, 50 St. Rep. 182 (1993).

County Properly Dismissed From Suit — State Assumption of Responsibility: A county was properly dismissed from a civil rights action brought by father whose children were removed from the state by social workers because the county retained no enforcement authority under an agreement with the state whereby the state assumed all responsibility for enforcement of the dependent and neglected child statutes. Caldwell v. LeFaver, 928 F2d 331 (9th Cir. 1991).

Qualified Immunity of Department Social Workers in Removing Children to Out-of-State Placement: Social workers who removed minor children from father's home without notice or hearing and arranged for them to stay in another state with their mother, who had joint custody, were not entitled to absolute immunity in father's civil rights action because their actions were neither quasi-prosecutorial nor quasi-judicial in nature. However, the social workers were entitled to qualified immunity because of the emergency nature of their actions and because they did not violate any clearly established constitutional or statutory right. Caldwell v. LeFaver, 928 F2d 331 (9th Cir. 1991).

Preservation of Family Unity as Long-Term Goal — Temporary Out-of-State Custody in Furtherance of Goal: The trial court satisfied the policy to preserve family life set forth in this section (see 1995 amendment) even though temporary custody was awarded the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) for treatment of the child outside of Montana. The trial court made its determination after considering all factors and adopted a treatment plan with ultimate goals of assisting the mother in working to regain physical custody of her child and aiding her in establishing herself as capable of providing the type and quality of care that her child requires. In re B.L.O., 213 M 164, 689 P2d 1246, 41 St. Rep. 2024 (1984).

Abuse and Neglect — Custody With Intervening Divorce: Where a couple voluntarily surrendered their child to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) because of abuse and neglect by the mother, the District Court was correct in continuing with the abuse and neglect custody proceeding rather than dismissing it and allowing custody to be determined in the couple's divorce action. Once a determination of abuse and neglect has been made, the court proceeds to a dispositional hearing to determine the custody of the child. In re M.M., 200 M 244, 650 P2d 784, 39 St. Rep. 1716 (1982).

Family Unity Not to Be Preserved at Expense of Children's Best Interests: After an adjudicatory hearing, the District Court terminated the parental rights of the parents of five children and granted custody with authority to consent to adoption to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services). Under Department placement, the children would be separated from each other. The paternal grandmother appealed to the Supreme Court, claiming that the state policy of preserving the unity and welfare of the family as set forth in this section was violated by the separation of the children and by the District Court's refusal to award the children to her. The Supreme Court affirmed because the District Court's findings indicated that it had considered the grandmother's request but that the overriding concern was and ought to have been the best interests of the children. In re M.N., 199 M 407, 649 P2d 749, 39 St. Rep. 1487 (1982).

Protection of Family Unit: Although it is the function of the court to protect the unity of the family, family unity was not a factor when the child's only known natural parent had been confined to a state hospital and the child had been placed in a foster home since birth. The child had never had a viable parent-child relationship with her mother and had never seen or been associated with her natural mother. In re C.M.S., A Dependent and Neglected Child, 187 M 115, 609 P2d 240 (1979).

Voluntary Statements Made to Civilians in Criminal Case — No Invasion of Privacy: On two occasions while the defendant and his stepson were alone, the stepson received serious injuries. On both occasions the defendant made statements to his wife and to several doctors explaining how the injuries occurred. The defendant was charged with aggravated assault and filed a motion to suppress his statements. The defendant contended that the statements violated his right of privacy guaranteed by the Montana Constitution. The court found that there was no element of surreptitious obtaining of the information. Additionally, constitutional provisions on right of privacy permit its invasion upon a showing of a compelling state interest. That compelling state interest is clearly shown in child abuse cases by the declaration of policy contained in 41-3-101. St. v. Hall, 183 M 511, 600 P2d 1180 (1979).

Termination of Parental Rights: When the following things were considered, the record supported the conclusion that the father's rights were adequately considered prior to termination of parental rights and that the decision to terminate them was supported by credible evidence: (1) the father was notified of the hearing, was present, and was represented by counsel; (2) professional testimony indicated the father would not be able to provide enough influence to offset the marked deprivation anticipated to continue for the child; (3) the father was found to have made no effort to assist the mother in learning to become a good parent; (4) the father had visited the child only once in 6 months when the child was in a foster home and had been reported to have abused the child. In re L.F.G., 183 M 239, 598 P2d 1125 (1979).

Youth in Need — Best Interest of Child — Mental Condition of Parent as Sole Factor: When the District Court considered the best interests of a child only after first determining that the child was in fact abused or neglected, it met the required standard. Considering the mental condition of the mother as the primary if not the sole factor, but having evidence that the child would not receive even minimally satisfactory maternal care and would be exposed to extremely high chances of developing a mental condition similar to that of the mother, sufficient credible evidence was before the District Court to support the District Court's decision that the child was a youth in need of care. The Supreme Court rejected the view that mental condition of a parent could not be the sole factor supporting a severance of parental rights. In re L.F.G., 183 M 239, 598 P2d 1125 (1979).

Grounds for Removal From Parents: Under 41-3-102, abuse or neglect can take many forms, some violent, others more passive but just as injurious. The court cannot hold the children hostage while awaiting the good behavior of the parents. It must protect the children's rights as well as the parents. In re T.Y.K., 183 M 91, 598 P2d 593 (1979).

Protection of All Children When Abuse of One Less Than Another: A parent does not have the privilege of inflicting brutal treatment upon each of his children in succession before they individually obtain the protection of the state by virtue of 41-3-101. Section 41-3-101, et seq., grants to the District Court the ability to make a determination of neglect and abuse as to all children in a family based on the policy that abuse of one child has a detrimental effect on the other children's development. In re T.Y.K., 183 M 91, 598 P2d 593 (1979), followed in In re B.T., B.T., M.T., & M.T., 223 M 287, 725 P2d 230, 43 St. Rep. 1728 (1986), In re T.C. & R.C., 240 M 308, 784 P2d 392, 46 St. Rep. 2148 (1989), and In re J.A.B., 1999 MT 173, 295 M 227, 983 P2d 387, 56 St. Rep. 675 (1999).

Preservation of Family Unity: When proof shows a minor child is neglected, it is not possible to preserve family unity. It is when there is a failure of proof that the legislative policy to preserve the unity and welfare of the family must prevail. (See 1995 amendment.) Therefore, the judgment of the District Court awarding permanent custody to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) was proper. Family unity need not be preserved at the expense of a child's best interests. In re Inquiry Into J.J.S., Youth in Need of Care, 176 M 202, 577 P2d 378 (1978).

Insufficient Evidence to Overcome Policy to Preserve Family: Mother's failure to find suitable housing and a decent job after death of father is insufficient adversity to dissolve the family absent a concrete showing that it would be in the best interest of the children. It was a clear abuse of discretion by District Court to award permanent custody to Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public and Human Services) because policy of the State of Montana as declared by the Legislature is to preserve the unity and welfare of the family whenever possible. (See 1995 amendment.) Div. of Child Welfare Serv. v. Fisher, 169 M 254, 545 P2d 654 (1976).

Attorney General's Opinions

Balance of Competing State Interests in Prevention and Reporting of Child Abuse — Abrogation of Communication Privileges by Statute: Although the state has competing interests in the prevention of child abuse and neglect and in protecting the communication privileges between physicians or mental health practitioners and their patients, the communication privilege is abrogated under 41-3-201 in cases where the professional obtains the information as a result of his treatment of the child. 42 A.G. Op. 7 (1987).

County Power — "4-C's": Counties, jointly with the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services), may contract with local "4-C's" projects to provide coordination and support of child abuse prevention and treatment services. 37 A.G. 1993 Amendment: Chapter 439 substituted present definition of abused or neglected for former definition that read: ""Abused or neglected child" means a child whose normal physical or mental health or welfare is harmed or threatened with harm by the acts or omissions of his parent or other person responsible for his welfare"; in (a) of definition of adequate health care, near beginning after "medical", deleted "or nonmedical remedial health" and inserted (b) regarding failure to provide medical care for a child based on religious beliefs; inserted definition of child abuse or neglect; near middle of (c) of definition of harm to a child's health or welfare, before "health", inserted "adequate"; and made minor changes in style.

1989 Amendment: In definition of harm to a child's health or welfare, in (a) after "injury", deleted "including injuries sustained as a result of excessive corporal punishment" and in (b), after "committed", substituted "sexual abuse or exploitation of the child" for "a sexual assault against the child or exploits the child or allows the child to be exploited for sexual purposes or commits or allows to be committed the act of sexual abuse of children as defined in subsection (1) of 45-5-625"; substituted definition of threatened harm to a child's health or welfare for former definition that read: ""Threatened harm" means imminent risk of harm"; in definition of person responsible for a child's welfare, after "foster parent", inserted "a staff person providing care in a day-care facility"; near middle of definition of physical injury inserted "and includes death, permanent or temporary disfigurement, and impairment of a bodily organ or function sustained as a result of excessive corporal punishment"; inserted definitions of sexual abuse and sexual exploitation; and made minor changes in phraseology. Amendment effective April 8, 1989.

Effective Date — Applicability: Section 3, Ch. 474, L. 1989, provided: "[This act] is effective on passage and approval and applies to proceedings begun on or after that date." Approved April 8, 1989.

1987 Amendments: Chapter 463 in (4), after "treatment", inserted "or medically indicated psychological care".

Chapter 609 deleted former (12) that read: "(12) "Supervision" means the authority granted by a youth court or by a voluntary agreement of a parent to determine the foster care placement of a child and the length of stay of a child in foster care and provide for the needs of a child under subsection (1) of 41-3-1122"; in (12) changed definition of department from Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services to Department of Family Services and corrected internal reference; and inserted definition of social worker.

1985 Amendment: In (4) inserted "including the prevention of the withholding of medically indicated treatment"; and inserted definition of "withholding of medically indicated treatment".

Source: Chapter 626, L. 1985, was based on the federal law entitled the Child Abuse Amendments of 1984 (Public Law 98-457).

1983 Amendments: Chapter 465, in (11), changed 41-3-104 to 41-3-1122.

Chapter 564 inserted definition of limited emancipation.

1981 Amendment: Added "or commits or allows to be committed the act of sexual abuse of children as defined in subsection (1) of 45-5-625" at the end of (3)(b); added the language relating to willful surrender of custody at the end of (3)(d); inserted subsection (3)(e) relating to 90-day time period and failure to locate parents; and added definitions of supervision and department.

PROCEDURE

Attempt to Use Writ of Habeas Corpus to Demand Physical Presence of Children Removed From Parent in Abuse and Neglect Proceeding — Petition Properly Denied: The mother petitioned the District Court for a writ of habeas corpus demanding that her children be physically present for an abuse and neglect hearing because they were material witnesses and had been removed from her custody unlawfully. The petition was denied. On appeal, the mother cited In re Bertelson, 189 M 524, 617 P2d 121 (1980), for the proposition that a writ of habeas corpus was the appropriate procedural device to bring the custody matter before a court. The Supreme Court disagreed and distinguished Bertelson because the mother's position ignored the substantial differences between dissolution proceedings and abuse and neglect proceedings, differences that were not at issue in Bertelson. The court also cited its earlier holding in In re B.P. & A.P., 2000 MT 39, 298 M 287, 995 P2d 982 (2000), in which it was held that the children were properly removed from the mother's home. Because temporary custody of the children with the state was legal, relief pursuant to habeas corpus premised on illegal restraint was not available to the mother under these circumstances. In re B.P. & A.P., 2001 MT 219, 306 M 430, 35 P3d 291 (2001).

Denial of Writ of Habeas Corpus to Compel Attendance of Children in Abuse and Neglect Hearing Not Violative of Due Process Rights or Right to Confront Witnesses: The mother petitioned the District Court for a writ of habeas corpus demanding that her children be physically present for an abuse and neglect hearing because they were material witnesses and claiming that the writ was necessary to ensure her due process rights by having the children available to rebut allegations against her at the hearing. The petition was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Although the mother was entitled to an opportunity for a meaningful hearing, that opportunity need not be provided at the expense of the children whose best interests were the paramount focus of the proceeding, and subjecting the children to direct and cross-examination could exacerbate the abuse that they had already experienced. Denial of the petition did not violate the mother's right to confront witnesses because the children were not her accusers and she had no right to confront them. Rather, the abuse and neglect case was brought by the state, and the mother had ample opportunity to confront and examine the state's witnesses and experts at the hearing, so her due process rights were met. In re B.P. & A.P., 2001 MT 219, 306 M 430, 35 P3d 291 (2001).

Parties in Dissolution Proceeding Not Same as Parties in Abuse and Neglect Proceeding — Res Judicata Inapplicable: During marriage dissolution proceedings, the mother was granted custody of the children, but during a subsequent abuse and neglect proceeding, permanent custody was granted to the father. The mother appealed the placement on grounds that it constituted a readjudication of the earlier custody order in her favor in the dissolution action, in violation of the doctrine of res judicata. The Supreme Court disagreed. Four criteria must be met for res judicata to apply, the first of which is that the parties or their privies are the same. The mother failed to meet this criteria because in the dissolution action, the parties were the mother and father, while in the abuse and neglect proceeding, the parties were the state, the children, and the mother. Despite the fact that the state was investigating claims of abuse within the family during the dissolution action, it was not a party to that action and did not petition for investigative authority and protective services (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) for the children until the dissolution was final. In re B.P. & A.P., 2001 MT 219, 306 M 430, 35 P3d 291 (2001).

No Treatment Plan Required to Terminate Parental Rights When Child Abandoned: A mother's parental rights were terminated based on the determination that she had abandoned her children, and the mother appealed. The children had been in out-of-home placement for longer than 1 year, and the mother had no contact with the children for almost 6 years, so no court-approved treatment plan was ever devised for the mother. The Supreme Court found that the mother's minimal efforts to contact the Department of Public Health and Human Services after termination proceedings were initiated were not sufficient to show the mother's intent to resume the care of her children, so the District Court did not err when it terminated the mother's parental rights on grounds of abandonment. A treatment plan is not required when the District Court finds that a parent has abandoned a child. In re J.J. & C.J., 2001 MT 131, 305 M 431, 28 P3d 1076 (2001).

Stipulation Not Considered Sufficient Adjudication of Youth in Need of Care — Lack of Jurisdictional Prerequisite to Terminate Parental Rights: The mother entered into a stipulation with the state that her children were youths in need of care only upon several conditions: (1) her parental rights would remain intact; (2) the children would reside with their grandmother; (3) the Casey Family Program would manage the children's cases; (4) the mother would always have contact with the children even if the program was required to intervene between the mother and grandmother; and (5) at an appropriate time when the mother was ready, the program, the Department, and the mother would devise a treatment plan that would be completed by the mother in order to regain custody of the children. At a subsequent hearing, the Department proposed a permanency plan that involved removing the children from their grandmother. The mother contended that the proposal amounted to a failure to abide by the conditions of the stipulation, thereby voiding the conditional stipulation that the children were youths in need of care and precluding the District Court's authority to terminate her parental rights. The Supreme Court agreed. Although a stipulation may be an acceptable alternative to an adjudicatory hearing in many circumstances, the fundamental nature of the rights of a parent requires that the process by which a stipulation is drafted and signed needs to be closely scrutinized. In this case, the stipulation was drafted by the County Attorney and signed by the mother without the benefit of legal counsel and essentially allowed the court to determine that the youths were in need of care without a finding that they were abused or neglected and without a hearing as required by 41-3-402 (renumbered 41-3-427). The mother had conflicting feelings about the removal of the children from their grandmother's care and relied on her understanding from the stipulation that the Department would not remove the children or terminate her parental rights, so she did not complete her treatment plan. Only a few days after the initial hearing, she promptly began work toward completion of the treatment plan and had made significant progress, particularly considering the unexpected death of her mother, by the time of the next hearing. Despite the change in circumstances resulting from the death, the Department did not grant the mother any additional time to complete the treatment plan, nor did the Department offer any evidence that the mother had abused or neglected the children. Under the unique facts of this case, the Supreme Court held that the District Court incorrectly found that the stipulation sufficed as an adjudication that the children were youths in need of care. Without that adjudication, the District Court lacked the jurisdictional prerequisite to terminate the mother's parental rights, so the Supreme Court reversed. In Re Custody and Parental Rights of M.W. & C.S., 2001 MT 78, 305 M 80, 23 P3d 206 (2001).

Finding That Child Is Youth in Need of Care Prerequisite to Transfer of Custody: The exigent protection of the health and welfare of a child is paramount when the state's initial intervention into otherwise private family matters reveals an actual or potentially dangerous or unhealthy environment requiring the removal of the child from a custodial caregiver. The legal determination that a child is a youth in need of care is a jurisdictional prerequisite for a court-ordered transfer of custody. The first question in a termination proceeding is whether the District Court correctly adjudicated the child as a youth in need of care, and the state need only offer clear and convincing evidence that the court properly adjudicated the child as a youth in need of care in order for the court to inquire into the actual fitness of the parent. In re A.M., 2001 MT 60, 304 M 379, 22 P3d 185 (2001).

Parent Not Represented by Counsel During Show Cause Hearing Regarding Whether Child a Youth in Need of Care — Due Process Rights Not Violated: At the time of a show cause hearing on whether her child was a youth in need of care, the mother was an indigent mental patient civilly committed to the state hospital. She appeared at the hearing without representation of counsel. The mother contended that the District Court violated her due process rights by making that critical determination regarding the child when she was unrepresented. Although in In re A.S.A., J.L.A., G.A., & A.J.A., 258 M 194, 852 P2d 127 (1993), the Supreme Court held that the constitutional right to due process guarantees an indigent parent the right to court-appointed counsel in parental rights termination proceedings, the court has not extended the right to counsel to a pretermination proceeding in which the focal issue is whether a child is a youth in need of care.

Rather, appointment of counsel at any time prior to the initiation of termination proceedings is within the discretion of the District Court. In this case, the initial determination that the child was a youth in need of care was made by order pursuant to a finding of probable cause even before the mother's first appearance in any proceedings when the District Court relied on a report submitted by a social worker showing that the child was abused or neglected or in danger of abuse or neglect and that removal from the home was necessary to protect the child's welfare. Subsequent to the initial determination, the District Court reached the same conclusion on at least three separate occasions when the mother was represented by counsel, including one hearing when the social worker was subjected to cross-examination by the mother's counsel. The Supreme Court applied In re M.F., 201 M 277, 653 P2d 1205 (1982), and in re D.S., H.S., R.S., R.S., J.S., R.S., & K.S., 253 M 484, 833 P2d 1090 (1992), and in holding that the state is not required to provide counsel at proceedings concerning temporary investigative authority or temporary custody. Thus, the mother's due process rights were not violated when the District Court made the determination that the child was a youth in need of care at a time when the mother was not represented by counsel. In re A.M., 2001 MT 60, 304 M 379, 22 P3d 185 (2001).

Petition Need Not Allege Abuse or Neglect — Facts Establishing Probable Cause Sufficient to Issue Order for Protective Services: A petition for temporary investigative authority (TIA) and protective services (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) must state the authority requested and facts establishing probable cause that the youth is abused or neglected or in danger of being so and must be accompanied by an affidavit or Department report stating in detail the facts on which the request is based. There is no statutory requirement that the petition contain an allegation of abuse or neglect or the evidence that the Department would present in support of its petition. The fact that the mother stipulated to a 90-day TIA, but not to protective services or the removal of the children from the home, believing that she would retain custody of the children during the 90-day period, did not preclude the District Court from ordering removal of the children from the home. The best interests of the child is paramount and takes precedence over parental rights in abuse and neglect proceedings. In re B.P. & A.P., 2000 MT 39, 298 M 287, 995 P2d 982, 57 St. Rep. 179 (2000).

Threatened Harm to Child — Denial of Motion to Dismiss Proper: When the mother surreptitiously contacted the father, who had had his parental rights terminated after being convicted of murdering the couple's other child, the state petitioned to terminate the mother's parental rights as well. Although witnesses unanimously agreed that the mother and child enjoyed a caring, nurturing, well-bonded mother-son relationship, there was also evidence that the mother would require a period of years to overcome her tendency to enter into addictive relationships with men in which she would not keep her child safe from abuse by her partner. The mother moved to dismiss the petition as inadequate as a matter of law, contending that there was not a sufficient basis to find that the child was a youth in need of care or evidence that she had abused the child. A youth in need of care is one who is abused or neglected, which means that the child has suffered harm or threatened harm to the child's health or welfare. Harm means, inter alia, harm that occurs when a parent exposes or allows the child to be exposed to an unreasonable risk by failing to intervene or eliminate the risk. Threatened harm means substantial risk of harm to the child's health or welfare. The absence of proof of physical abuse by the mother did not mean that the petition must fail because a parent does not have the privilege of inflicting brutal treatment upon each child in succession before the children may individually obtain the protection of the state. Under the circumstances, the motion to dismiss the petition was properly denied. In re J.A.B., 1999 MT 173, 295 M 227, 983 P2d 387, 56 St. Rep. 675 (1999), following In re T.Y.K., 183 M 91, 598 P2d 593 (1979).

Statute Constitutional — Abandonment by Noncustodial Parent: Father whose parental rights were terminated questioned the constitutionality of 41-3-609 with regard to noncustodial parents. The Supreme Court found that the legal relationship between father and child did not change despite the facts that the mother was awarded custody and that the father failed to continue in his obligations to the child. In determining what constitutes abandonment, this section considers the action of the parent responsible for the child's welfare, not the action of the custodial or noncustodial parent. In re M.W., 234 M 530, 764 P2d 1279, 45 St. Rep. 2107 (1988).

Finding of Abuse, Neglect, or Dependency Necessary Before Consideration of Best Interests of the Child: M.G.M. was born out of wedlock and had little contact with her natural father until the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) placed M.G.M. in a foster home and terminated her mother's parental rights. The Department then sought to terminate the father's parental rights. To terminate his parental rights, the court must first find that the child is abused, neglected, or dependent (see 1995 amendment). Only when such a finding has been made can the court apply the best interests of the child test. In re M.G.M., 201 M 400, 654 P2d 994, 39 St. Rep. 2191 (1982).

Prior Felony Conviction — Factor to Be Considered in Parental Termination Proceedings: Although a criminal background does not disqualify one from having custody of his children, it is a factor and should be considered in child abuse and neglect proceedings under 41-3-102. Although the crime itself may not be relevant to the proceeding, the conduct of the father on parole may be, thus the admission of a prior felony conviction at such a hearing was not error. In re T.J.D., J.L.D. & R.J.W., 189 M 147, 615 P2d 212 (1980).

Standard of Proof: The State must show by clear and convincing evidence that the child is neglected or abused before parental rights may be terminated. This standard more adequately furthers the policy of family unity than does the preponderance of evidence standard. In re T.J.D., J.L.D. & R.J.W., 189 M 147, 615 P2d 212 (1980); In re Inquiry Into J.L.B., Youth in Need of Care, 182 M 100, 594 P2d 1127 (1979), followed in In re T.A., 249 M 186, 814 P2d 994, 48 St. Rep. 634 (1991).

Removal of Children Warranted: The District Court did not abuse its discretion when it granted the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services' (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) petition for permanent custody and authority to consent to adoption of three children since they were adjudged dependent (see 1995 amendment) and neglected and there was ample evidence to warrant removal from their parents. In re G., Youth in Need of Care, 174 M 321, 570 P2d 1110 (1977).

Failure to Make Required Findings: The District Court abused its discretion in awarding permanent custody to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) because it patently failed to make the required findings that the child was "abused, dependent [see 1995 amendment], or neglected" and therefore was without power to effect a permanent transfer of custody to a nonparent. In re Fish, 174 M 201, 569 P2d 924 (1977).

Custody Awarded Nonparent: Permanent custody cannot be awarded to a nonparent on the basis of the "best interest" test, it being appropriate only to determine custody rights between natural parents, but rather when natural parents forfeit their rights by not meeting the minimum standards of the child abuse, neglect, and dependent (see 1995 amendment) statutes. Henderson v. Henderson, 174 M 1, 568 P2d 177 (1977).

Constitutionality: This section is not unconstitutionally vague, ambiguous, or uncertain. In re Burgdorf, 170 M 116, 551 P2d 656 (1976).

Constitutionality — Due Process — Least Drastic Alternative: This section is not unconstitutionally vague. When no showing of prejudice is made, mother is represented by counsel in neglect proceeding, and when no demand for a hearing is made, there is not a denial of due process. Mother's attitude may cause court to dispense with evaluation of least restrictive alternative. In re Burgdorf, 170 M 116, 551 P2d 656 (1976).

Sufficiency of Evidence: When the record clearly reflects an established, continuing pattern of abuse and neglect, the decision of the court declaring children to be abused and neglected and awarding custody to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) with the right to grant an adoption will be sustained. In re Bessette, 170 M 122, 551 P2d 653 (1976).

Insufficient Evidence to Overcome Policy to Preserve Family: Mother's failure to find suitable housing and a decent job after death of father is insufficient adversity to dissolve the family absent a concrete showing that it would be in the best interest of the children. It was a clear abuse of discretion by District Court to award permanent custody to Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) because policy of the State of Montana as declared by the Legislature is to preserve the unity and welfare of the family whenever possible. Div. of Child Welfare Serv. v. Fisher, 169 M 254, 545 P2d 654 (1976).

"Dependent" and "Neglected" Distinguished: A "dependent child" (see 1995 amendment) is one who must be supported by someone other than its natural or legal guardians, while a "neglected child", which is a broader term, describes a situation where there has been parental failure to exercise the degree of care demanded by family circumstances. In re Vikse, 147 M 417, 413 P2d 876 (1966).

ABUSE AND NEGLECT

Substantial Risk of Harm to Child — Parental Rights Terminated Despite Lack of Evidence of Abuse or Neglect: A girl was born to a mother who was later divorced and remarried. When the girl was 15, she had sexual intercourse with her stepfather and conceived a baby. The state petitioned for temporary investigative authority (TIA) and emergency protective services (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) over both the girl and her baby, pursuant to 41-3-402 (renumbered 41-3-427). The mother then agreed to divorce the stepfather so that he could marry the girl. The petition regarding the girl was dismissed because she was married and was no longer subject to the mother's parental control. At the show cause hearing on the petition regarding protection of the baby, a state social worker testified that, although there was no indication of actual abuse or neglect of the baby, there was concern for the baby's safety should the baby be placed in the home with the girl and stepfather. The state ultimately petitioned to terminate the girl's parental rights to the baby. The District Court determined that the baby was a youth in need of care and terminated the girl's parental rights. The girl appealed on grounds that the court's determination that the baby was a youth in need of care was erroneous, absent any evidence of abuse, neglect, or abandonment, and that the petition for TIA (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) was insufficient on its face because it contained no allegations that the baby was abused or neglected. However, the definition of abuse or neglect in this section includes either actual harm or the substantial risk of harm. Thus, the report required by 41-3-427 need set forth in detail only facts supporting the petition's request for TIA (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) based on the assertion that a child is abused or neglected or is in danger of being abused or neglected. The social worker's testimony was considered sufficient to support a finding that there was substantial risk of harm to the baby if returned to the girl's custody; therefore, the District Court's determination that the baby was a youth in need of care was correct. The court's finding that under the circumstances, the baby had little hope of a normal emotional, moral, and psychological development with his parents was also supported by substantial evidence and was not clearly erroneous, based on the social worker's testimony that the girl's relationship with the stepfather was unhealthy, that the family unit exhibited extremely poor boundaries, and that the girl had obvious psychological damage from being sexually abused by her father and would, without successful treatment, be unable to set appropriate boundaries for the baby or be able to understand the risk of harm that her relationship with the stepfather posed to the baby. The Supreme Court affirmed. In re D.T.H., 2001 MT 138, 305 M 502, 29 P3d 1003 (2001).

Child in Danger of Abuse and Neglect Subject to Adjudication Regardless of Whether Actual Abuse or Neglect Occurred: A child who is in danger of being abused or neglected may be considered a youth in need of care regardless of whether actual abuse or neglect occurred, irrespective of a parent's care for the child prior to the parent's incarceration or commitment to a mental hospital. In re A.M., 2001 MT 60, 304 M 379, 22 P3d 185 (2001).

Source of Children's PTSD Not Traceable to Father — No Abuse of Discretion by Court That Held Children Not Suffering From Abuse and Neglect Caused by Father — Temporary Investigative Authority (See 2001 Amendment to 41-3-427) and Temporary Legal Custody Properly Terminated: John, who pleaded guilty to negligent homicide in the death of his psychotic wife, Nancy, petitioned the District Court for the termination of temporary investigative authority (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) and temporary legal custody of the Department of Public Health and Human Services, and the petition was granted. The Supreme Court held that the Department's authority was properly terminated because the District Court could not and did not find that the posttraumatic stress disorder (PTSD) suffered by John's children was caused by their father's behavior. The expert testimony given at trial showed that the children's PTSD could have been caused by living with their psychotic mother and not by their father's killing of their mother and his subsequent attempt to cover up the murder. The Supreme Court held that the District Court properly found that the children were not abused or neglected by their father and that the District Court therefore did not abuse its discretion when it granted John's petition and terminated the Department's authority. In re Inquiry Into J.L. & D.L., 2000 MT 289, 302 M 254, 14 P3d 473, 57 St. Rep. 1219 (2000).

Failure to Detect and Prevent Abuse: In an action to terminate a mother's parental rights, although the District Court found that the mother knew of her daughters' sexual abuse, the court specifically stated that her knowledge of the abuse was irrelevant to its ultimate determination because the mother failed to notice what was occurring and repeatedly left the children with persons who were not competent or safe caretakers. Such conduct satisfies the requirements of this section. In re Inquiry Into M.M., 274 M 166, 906 P2d 675, 52 St. Rep. 1170 (1995).

Proof of Sexual Abuse Not Necessary to Conclusion That Child Is Youth in Need of Care: A finding that a child was sexually abused was not a prerequisite to a conclusion that the child was a youth in need of care warranting placement of the child with the Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services). The conclusion was proper in light of the combination of the testimony of four expert witnesses, a video deposition of the child, a series of nude photos of the child taken by the parents, evidence of spousal physical abuse in the presence of the child, and the fact that the father did not provide as evidence the results of his court-ordered psychological evaluation. In re H.D., 256 M 70, 844 P2d 114, 49 St. Rep. 1141 (1992).

Evidence of Abuse and Neglect Sufficient to Find Youth in Need of Care: When a mother's actions over a 4-year period were marked by indifference to and neglect of her parental responsibilities, including failure to assume physical care of her son and insensitivity to his emotional needs, the District Court did not err in determining that the child was a youth in need of care and that his well-being would be best served by remaining in the custody of his grandparents. In re R.T.L.P., 238 M 384, 777 P2d 892, 46 St. Rep. 1354 (1989).

Custody Transfer Supported by Evidence of Substantial Impairment: A psychologist testified that a child suffered substantial impairment of psychological function during her stay with her natural father and would be at risk of increased emotional stress if the placement continued. The evidence presented was sufficient to prove that the child was a youth in need of care and to support the lower court transfer of custody to the state, with reasonable visitation rights maintained by the father. In re M.G.M., 228 M 184, 741 P2d 770, 44 St. Rep. 1443 (1987).

Three Prerequisites for Termination of Parental Rights: The Supreme Court found substantial credible evidence that the three prerequisites for termination of parental rights were met: (1) that S.B. was a youth in need of care under the statutory definitions of 41-3-102 since the child failed to thrive due to carelessness of the parent (citing In re C.A.R. & P.J.R., 214 M 174, 693 P2d 1214, 41 St. Rep. 2395 (1984)); (2) that a court-approved treatment plan was unsuccessful (citing In re R.J.W., 197 M 286, 642 P2d 1072, 39 St. Rep. 568 (1982)); and (3) that the conduct or condition rendering the parent unfit to provide adequate care was unlikely to change within a reasonable time (citing In re R.J.W., supra). In re S.B., 223 M 36, 724 P2d 168, 43 St. Rep. 1512 (1986).

Mother's Lack of Care — Harm Caused to Children's Physical and Mental Welfare — Children Abused and Neglected: In applying the applicable definitions to the present case, the trial court properly determined the two children were youths in need of care because they had been abused and neglected by their mother. This abuse and neglect resulted from their mother's failure to care for and attend to the children, causing serious physical problems and injury to their cognitive and emotional development. Also, their mother allowed a sexual assault to be committed against one of the children, which resulted in harm to the child's welfare. The mother's conduct was unlikely to change significantly in the future. Under these circumstances, the court properly terminated the mother's parental rights and awarded permanent custody with the authority to consent to adoption to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services). In re C.A.R. & P.J.R., 214 M 174, 693 P2d 1214, 41 St. Rep. 2395 (1984).

Evidence Supporting Designation as Youth in Need of Care: Evidence that the child failed to thrive in the family home, that both parents refused to comply with recommended drug and alcohol abuse treatment programs, and that the mother had been unsuccessful in learning how to care properly for her child was sufficient to support designation of the child as a youth in need of care. In re R.J.W., 197 M 286, 642 P2d 1072, 39 St. Rep. 568 (1982).

Extreme and Prolonged Uncleanliness: Regardless of any actual proof that a parent intentionally inflicted injuries upon his child, the occurrence of serious and frequent, yet unexplained, physical injuries to the child is sufficient to properly bring the child within the statutory definition of abuse or neglect. Additionally, the statute is broad enough to include extreme and prolonged uncleanliness under the definition of neglect. In re A.J.S., 193 M 79, 630 P2d 217, 38 St. Rep. 947 (1981).

Substantial Evidence to Support Finding of Neglect or Abuse: Where the evidence offered in a proceeding to declare youths in need of care included testimony by two clinical psychologists that the mental and physical state of appellant's offspring deteriorated when the offspring was in the care of appellant and that appellant's newborn child would also suffer the same consequences, and also testimony to the effect that appellant was physically abusive, there is substantial credible evidence to support the District Court's conclusion that appellant's offspring were in need of care and termination of parental rights was justified. Based upon examination of the offered evidence, in relation to the declared policy of this state to promote normal childhood development and to provide for the protection of children whose health and welfare are or may be adversely affected by the conduct of those responsible for their care, the District Court found the offspring abused or neglected as those terms are defined in 41-3-102. In re J.L.F. and H.A.F., 192 M 63, 626 P2d 253, 38 St. Rep. 533 (1981). See also In re C.A.R. & P.J.R., 214 M 174, 693 P2d 1214, 41 St. Rep. 2395 (1984).

Declaration of Child as Youth in Need of Care — Custody Awarded to Agency — Evidence of Abuse or Neglect: A child diagnosed as failing to thrive was given to foster parents. Professional personnel all agreed that the child in question was failing to thrive and that the child's condition deteriorated while in the care of the natural mother. The child's condition improved dramatically while in foster care. The District Court's finding and conclusion that the child was a neglected child was supported by "clear and convincing" evidence and the court was justified in permanently depriving the natural mother of the child and transferring legal custody to SRS (now Department of Public Health and Human Services). In re M.R.L., 186 M 468, 608 P2d 134 (1980).

Termination of Parental Rights — Factors Considered: When the following things were considered, the record supported the conclusion that the father's rights were adequately considered prior to termination of parental rights and that the decision to terminate them was supported by credible evidence: (1) the father was notified of the hearing, was present, and was represented by counsel; (2) professional testimony indicated the father would not be able to provide enough influence to offset the marked deprivation anticipated to continue for the child; (3) the father was found to have made no effort to assist the mother in learning to become a good parent; (4) the father had visited the child only once in 6 months when the child was in a foster home and had been reported to have abused the child. In re L.F.G., 183 M 239, 598 P2d 1125 (1979).

Youth in Need — Best Interests of Child — Mental Condition of Parent as Sole Factor: When the District Court considered the best interests of a child only after first determining that the child was in fact abused or neglected, it met the required standard. Considering the mental condition of the mother as the primary if not the sole factor, but having evidence that the child would not receive even minimally satisfactory maternal care and would be exposed to extremely high chances of developing a mental condition similar to that of the mother, sufficient credible evidence was before the District Court to support the District Court's decision that the child was a youth in need of care. The Supreme Court rejected the view that mental condition of a parent could not be the sole factor supporting a severance of parental rights. In re L.F.G., 183 M 239, 598 P2d 1125 (1979).

Protection of All Children When Abuse of One Less Than Another: A parent does not have the privilege of inflicting brutal treatment upon each of his children in succession before they individually obtain the protection of the state by virtue of 41-3-101. Section 41-3-101, et seq., grants to the District Court the ability to make a determination of neglect and abuse as to all children in a family based on the policy that abuse of one child has a detrimental effect on the other children's development. In re T.Y.K., 183 M 91, 598 P2d 593 (1979), followed in In re B.T., B.T., M.T., & M.T., 223 M 287, 725 P2d 230, 43 St. Rep. 1728 (1986), In re T.C. & R.C., 240 M 308, 784 P2d 392, 46 St. Rep. 2148 (1989), and in In re J.A.B., 1999 MT 173, 295 M 227, 983 P2d 387, 56 St. Rep. 675 (1999).

Definition of Neglect: The definition of neglect includes emotional deprivation, inadequate nutrition, and extreme and prolonged uncleanliness of the child. In re Inquiry Into J.L.B., Youth in Need of Care, 182 M 100, 594 P2d 1127 (1979).

Termination of Parental Rights: The state may not terminate a parent's right to raise his or her own child merely because a court or state agency feels that a nonparent has more financial resources or pursues a preferable lifestyle. In re Inquiry Into J.L.B., Youth in Need of Care, 182 M 100, 594 P2d 1127 (1979).

Absence of Abuse or Neglect: Judgment was reversed and custody of two children taken from their maternal aunt and returned to the natural father since there was no showing that the children were abused or neglected. The court improperly deprived the father of custody by means of the subterfuge of a guardianship that had outlived the purpose for which it was created. In re Guardianship of Doney, 174 M 282, 570 P2d 575 (1977), followed in Babcock v. Wonnacott, 268 M 149, 885 P2d 522, 51 St. Rep. 1224 (1994). See also In re J.B., 278 M 160, 923 P2d 1096, 53 St. Rep. 901 (1996).

Youth in Need of Care — Transfer of Custody: It was clear from the record that appellant was unwilling or unable to provide care necessary for the physical and emotional well-being of her children, and testimony supported the court's finding that the children were abused and neglected youths in need of care within the meaning of this section and its judgment transferring permanent legal custody of the children to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) pursuant to 41-3-406 (renumbered 41-3-438). In re Moyer, 173 M 208, 567 P2d 47 (1977).

Children's Best Interest and Welfare Paramount Concern: Substantial credible evidence that father maltreated children and was incompetent, coupled with evidence mother did not provide proper or sufficient food, clothing, or sanitary or medical care was sufficient to support finding and judgment that children were dependent and neglected, awarding permanent care, custody, and control to proper state agency, with right to consent to children's adoption. In re Jones, 168 M 1, 539 P2d 1193 (1975).

Mental Retardation Due to Emotional Deprivation: Children who have become mentally retarded due to emotional deprivation and lack of environmental stimulation are neglected children within the meaning of the law. In re Olson, 164 M 431, 524 P2d 779 (1974).

Fitness of Parents:

Minor children were dependent (see 1995 amendment) and neglected within meaning of the statutory definition, notwithstanding possible fitness of natural mother for their custody, when she had acquiesced and permitted them to remain in care and custody of welfare department. In re Bad Yellow Hair, 162 M 107, 509 P2d 9 (1973).

A child was properly found dependent and neglected based on mother's declaration in waiver and the consent to adoption that she could not provide care and guidance and could not perform duties of a parent. Application of Hendrickson, 159 M 217, 496 P2d 1115 (1972).

Evidence of mother's use of welfare funds to supply her alcoholic needs, lack of medical care for her children, threats to kill the children, and other failures to make proper provision for the children warranted a finding that the children were neglected and the entry of an order committing them to custody of the state. In re Corneliusen, 159 M 6, 494 P2d 908 (1972).

ABANDONMENT

Improper Termination of Rights of Noncustodial Parent on Grounds of Abandonment Absent Showing of Willful Surrender of Custody: The District Court terminated a father's parental rights after finding that he abandoned his children by willfully surrendering physical custody for a period of 6 months without manifesting a firm intention to resume physical custody or making permanent physical arrangements for care of the children. The father appealed on grounds that he could not have willfully surrendered custody because he did not have physical custody of the children, who were initially with the mother and then in state foster care. The Supreme Court agreed. Acknowledging that pursuant to In re M.W., 234 M 530, 764 P2d 1279 (1988), it is possible for a court to find that a noncustodial parent has abandoned children, that finding must be based on evidence that the parent did not intend to resume the children's care, which was not the case here. Rather, the District Court in this case found that the father willfully surrendered physical custody, which was directly controverted by the fact that the father could not surrender custody that he did not have. Termination of the father's parental rights under that theory of abandonment was reversible error. In re T.C. & W.C., 2001 MT 264, 307 M 244, 37 P3d 70 (2001).

Abandonment Held to Constitute Abuse or Neglect: The father appealed the termination of his parental rights, arguing that the trial court's finding of abandonment did not constitute a finding of abuse or neglect required by statute to terminate parental rights. The Supreme Court ruled that in the past, it had implicitly upheld terminations on the basis of abandonment and that it was clarifying its earlier rulings by holding that abandonment is "harm to a child's welfare" and that "harm to a child's welfare" is a statutory ground for a finding of "child abuse or neglect" upon which a termination of parental rights may be founded. In re M.J.W., 1998 MT 142, 289 M 232, 961 P2d 105, 55 St. Rep. 563 (1998).

Father Objects to Wrong Period Used to Determine Abandonment: The father appealed the termination of his parental rights on the basis that the court relied on statements by a social worker that pertained to a period before she had any personal knowledge of the case and therefore the statements were hearsay. The Supreme Court upheld the lower court's ruling, stating that only one sentence of the social worker's statement pertained to the early period and the rest of the report dealt with the period after the social worker had personal knowledge of the case. In re M.J.W., 1998 MT 142, 289 M 232, 961 P2d 105, 55 St. Rep. 563 (1998).

Evidence of Intent to Remedy Child's Situation During Time of Alleged Abandonment — Finding of Abandonment Reversed: The state alleged abandonment by father from September 1994 to January 1995. Evidence showed that father had an unimpressive history as a parent, offering little or no financial or emotional support during the first 5 years of his son's life. Nevertheless, father's actions during the time in question, including a petition to modify the dissolution decree to allow him visitation, contact with the mother to arrange visitation, and a trip from Wisconsin to visit his son, precluded a finding of abandonment during that finite period. In re W.Z., 285 M 16, 946 P2d 125, 54 St. Rep. 1019 (1997).

Termination of Parental Rights Based on Abandonment — Sporadic Attempts to Maintain Custody of Child Held Insufficient: Linda, the natural mother of P.E., left P.E. at a camping site with persons barely known to Linda. For the next 14 months, Linda traveled with persons with known criminal records, failed to give social workers her address and phone number on several occasions, failed to accept or maintain gainful employment, and failed to keep appointments with social workers or to appear at hearings to determine the status of P.E. Despite her expressed intent to resume physical custody, the District Court terminated her parental rights. Citing In re Adoption of C.R.D., 240 M 106, 782 P2d 1280 (1989), the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that Linda's sporadic attempts to maintain physical custody of P.E. did not constitute "a firm intention to resume physical custody" pursuant to this section. In re P.E., 282 M 52, 934 P2d 206, 54 St. Rep. 237 (1997).

Record to Reflect Parent's Intention to Abandon Child: The District Court held that the mother had been in prison for more than 6 months prior to the adoption hearing and that absence constituted abandonment. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that nothing in the record showed any intention on the mother's part to abandon her children and that a showing of such an intention was required in addition to an absence exceeding 6 months. In re Adoption of Jane, John, & Mary Doe, 277 M 251, 921 P2d 875, 53 St. Rep. 631 (1996).

Inability to Contribute Financial Support to Child Not Abandonment — Third-Party Petition to Adopt Properly Dismissed: Parents of S.P.M. were divorced and granted joint custody of the child. After a period of time, the father took sole custody after a Department of Family Services (now Department of Health and Human Services) worker filed a report concluding that the mother's new partner was abusing the child. The original joint custody decree was not modified. The father and child moved out of state for 4 years. On their return, the mother petitioned for custody and visitation. In response, the father's new wife petitioned to adopt the child. The District Court dismissed the wife's petition on the grounds that the mother's consent to adoption was required and that the mother had not abandoned the child. The 6-month requirement for abandonment in this section applies only to the willful surrender of custody, and even though the mother had not supported the child for 4 years, this did not constitute abandonment when the mother was not capable of providing financial support. Adoption of S.P.M., 266 M 269, 880 P2d 297, 51 St. Rep. 808 (1994).

Six-Month Abandonment Requirement Applicable Only to Willful Surrender of Physical Custody: The requirement in this section that applies a 6-month period to the definition of abandonment that is part of the definition of harm to a child's health or welfare is applicable only to the willful surrender of physical custody of the child. It was therefore proper to terminate the parental rights of a parent who left children for a 5-month period under circumstances that made reasonable the belief that the parent did not intend to resume care of them. In re A.E., C.E., S.R., & J.R., 255 M 56, 840 P2d 572, 49 St. Rep. 877 (1992), followed in In re W.Z., 285 M 16, 946 P2d 125, 54 St. Rep. 1019 (1997).

Natural Father's Consent to Adoption Not Required When Evidence Clear He Abandoned Child: The father had only visited with his daughter twice and called her on the telephone twice in 8 years and during that time never paid support. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's finding that the record contained clear and convincing evidence that the natural father had willfully abandoned his daughter, and therefore his consent to the child's adoption by her grandparents was not required. Adoption of C.R.D., 240 M 106, 782 P2d 1280, 46 St. Rep. 1979 (1989), followed in In re P.E., 282 M 52, 934 P2d 206, 54 St. Rep. 237 (1997).

Lack of Contact for Three Years Constituting Abandonment: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in terminating the parental rights of a father who abandoned his child by having no contact for 3 years and by indicating at no time his intention to resume custody until he learned his parental rights had been terminated. In re M.W., 234 M 530, 764 P2d 1279, 45 St. Rep. 2107 (1988).

Question of Abandonment Not Within Subject Matter Jurisdiction Regarding Modification: Husband was served a petition for adoption of his children by wife's new husband. The petition alleged abandonment. The District Court improperly considered the question of abandonment during the postdissolution hearing, which centered around the issues of visitation and unpaid child support. The question was outside the scope of issues included within the original dissolution decree, was to be decided by the court hearing the adoption proceedings, and should have been dismissed under Rule 12(h)(3), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). In re Marriage of Callahan, 233 M 465, 762 P2d 205, 45 St. Rep. 1639 (1988).

Sufficiency of Evidence of Abused or Neglected Child: Evidence of failure to supply an adequate home environment and of abandonment for a 6-month period, plus evidence that a parent never complied with a court-approved treatment plan, was sufficient to warrant finding a youth to be abused or neglected and to allow temporary custody with the state. In re C.G., 230 M 117, 747 P2d 1369, 45 St. Rep. 63 (1988).

Evidence of Abandonment — Termination Proper: Evidence of abandonment warranting termination of parental rights was sufficient when the father had no contact and did not state any intention of resuming care of his children for a period of 2 years and did not make known his intention to acquire custody until 3 months after he was informed of the custody proceedings filed by the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services). In re M.J.D., C.K.D., & A.R.D., 225 M 200, 731 P2d 937, 44 St. Rep. 167 (1987).

Abandonment — Termination Proceedings to Be Fundamentally Fair: Termination of a natural parent's right to care and custody of a child is a fundamental liberty interest in Montana, which must be protected by fundamentally fair procedures. In a proceeding to terminate parental rights, the mother testified that on the advice of a social worker she refused to disclose to the father, who was in prison, the name of the child's foster parents; the father testified that while in prison he had tried to contact his son and see how he was doing. The Supreme Court held that this testimony contradicted the District Court's finding that father had abandoned child, and the Supreme Court remanded the case to the District Court for additional findings of fact and conclusions in light of specific requirements of 41-3-102. The Supreme Court also found the District Court record insufficient to conclude whether or not implementation of a treatment plan was attempted or feasible. The rights of parents cannot be terminated unless the parents have failed to comply with a court-approved treatment plan. In re R.B., 217 M 99, 703 P2d 846, 42 St. Rep. 1055 (1985), followed in In re W.Z., 285 M 16, 946 P2d 125, 54 St. Rep. 1019 (1997), and In re A.W-M., 1998 MT 157, 289 M 333, 960 P2d 779, 55 St. Rep. 628 (1998).

Child Custody — Normal Development — Jurisdiction: When a child was present in Montana, having been abandoned by both of her natural parents, having been subjected to mistreatment and abuse, and having been threatened with further mistreatment and abuse, her situation met the test for jurisdiction expressed in 40-4-211. Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).

Abandonment: Mother leaving infant with babysitter for 1 night and not returning for approximately 1 month supports a finding of abandonment and a dependency upon the public for support when 2 days after mother's departure welfare department was awarded temporary custody. Case Notes

Jurisdiction Based on Presence of Child in Montana: In a case in which the natural parents were residents of Wyoming but the child was born in Montana and present in Montana, the District Court had jurisdiction in an action to terminate parental rights under the abuse and neglect statutes, based on the presence of the child in Montana. In re Parental Rights of Baby Girl W., 249 M 206, 814 P2d 976, 48 St. Rep. 643 (1991).

Youth Court Jurisdiction Concurrent With District Court: The Youth Court has concurrent jurisdiction with the District Court over all youths who are within the state for any purpose. (See 2001 amendment.) Upon the petition for temporary custody filed by the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services), the Youth Court had the authority to determine that the child in question was a youth in need of care, to remove her from her mother's abusive home, and, following a dispositional hearing, to place her in the custody of her natural father. Voluntary Relinquishment of Custody — Intervening Divorce — Custody Determined in Abuse and Neglect Proceeding: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in awarding custody of a child to his father after the parents, while still married, surrendered temporary custody to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) because of the actions of the mother. Subsequent to the surrender of the child but prior to the award of custody, the couple began dissolution proceedings. The mother contended the court should have terminated the abuse and neglect proceeding. There was substantial evidence that the father was stable and nonabusive and the mother had potential for further abuse. Once a determination of abuse or neglect has been made, the court proceeds to a dispositional hearing. The intervening divorce and collateral custody matter were not relevant to the court in this matter. In re M.M., 200 M 244, 650 P2d 784, 39 St. Rep. 1716 (1982).

Jurisdiction Based on Service: The District Court lacked jurisdiction to find a minor child dependent and neglected and to award her to the care of the child welfare service when service of citation was by publication and there was no service of notice of the action on the father who was a resident of the county. In re Young, 143 M 230, 388 P2d 379 (1964).

Residence of Petitioner:

Case Notes

Denial of Request to Remove Guardian Ad Litem Not Error: At the hearing on the petition for TIA and protective services (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427), the mother requested removal of the guardian ad litem who had worked with the family for 2 years. The District Court declined, which was not error in light of the lack of evidence that the guardian had not performed the required statutory duties. In re B.P. & A.P., 2000 MT 39, 298 M 287, 995 P2d 982, 57 St. Rep. 179 (2000), affirmed in In re B.P. & A.P., 2001 MT 219, 306 M 430, 35 P3d 291 (2001).

No Standing by Former Parent to Object to Child's Placement or Assert Child's Rights: Once the parent-child relationship is terminated by the District Court, a former parent has no standing to object to the court's subsequent placement of the child with the Department or by adoption. Similarly, a former parent has no standing to assert a violation of the child's rights as guardian ad litem because the former parent no longer represents the child. In re E.A.T. & T.A.T., 1999 MT 281, 296 M 535, 989 P2d 860, 56 St. Rep. 1133 (1999).

No Requirement That Parent Pay Fees and Costs of Guardian Ad Litem: Pursuant to a petition for temporary investigative authority and protective services (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427), three minor children were removed from their home and later returned to their parents' care. The District Court ordered the parents to reimburse the county for the fees and costs of the guardian ad litem appointed to represent the children. However, neither the plain language of 41-3-303 (renumbered 41-3-112), its legislative history, nor its statutory context suggest any intent by the Legislature to require parents to pay for guardian ad litem representation following a petition for protective services. The District Court order constituted reversible error. In re Inquiry Into A.W., D.G., & M.G., Jr., 1999 MT 42, 293 M 358, 975 P2d 1250, 56 St. Rep. 186 (1999).

Failure to Notify Guardian Ad Litem of Adoption Proceedings — Reversible Error: A guardian ad litem is required to represent a child in every case in which child abuse or neglect is alleged, and that representation continues until the child is permanently placed. Therefore, failure by the court to notify an unplaced child's guardian ad litem of a hearing on a petition for permanent adoption constituted reversible error. 2001 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 311 in (1) substituted "district court judge" for "youth court judge"; and in (2) at end substituted "the Adoption and Safe Families Act of 1997, as enacted" for "federal law and may not be later than the 12-month anniversary date of the child's placement into foster care". Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

Chapter 570 in (2) in third sentence after "comply with" substituted "the Adoption and Safe Families Act of 1997" for "federal law and may not be later than the 12-month anniversary date of the child's placement into foster care"; in (4) inserted second sentence requiring that rules be consistent with provisions regarding notice, written findings and recommendations, conflict of interest, recordkeeping, sibling reviews, disclosure and immunity, and deliberation; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 610 at beginning of (1) inserted exception clause; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

1987 Amendments: Chapter 260 inserted (1)(e) requiring that, for Indian child whose care is under review, foster care review committee appoint, if possible, Indian person knowledgeable about Indian culture.

Chapter 609 in first sentence of (2), after "department", deleted "or the youth court" and after "41-3-1122" deleted "or 41-3-1121(2)".

1983 Amendment: Chapter 201, in (1), increased minimum committee membership from four to five; inserted (1)(e) requiring appointment of foster parent to foster care review committee.

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to SB 228 [Ch. 297, L. 1981] provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because in addition to amending sections 41-3-104, 41-3-501, 41-5-801 [renumbered 41-3-1122; 41-3-1102; and 41-3-1121, now repealed], and 53-4-112 [renumbered 52-2-112], the bill creates rulemaking authority for the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services [now Department of Public Health and Human Services] to administer a review of children in foster care under the department's supervision or for whom the department is making payment under section 41-3-104(2) or 41-5-801(2) [renumbered 41-3-1122(2); and 41-3-1121(2), now repealed].

It is the intent of this bill to indicate the legislature's support of permanency planning for children in foster care and to direct the department to continue its efforts in this area. This bill is intended to encourage reduction of the numbers of children in foster care; to expediently return children to their natural homes when possible, or to free the children for alternate permanent placements; thereby assuring the appropriate utilization of public funds and that the best interest of children in placement in Montana are being met by the department's program.

Rulemaking is primarily necessary to implement Section 2 [41-5-807] [renumbered 41-3-1115] and subsection (3) of Section 1 of the bill [41-3-104] [renumbered 41-3-1122]. These sections require that a foster care review committee be established by the court to conduct reviews of children in foster care and provide written reports to the youth court and the department. Rules would identify which children are to be reviewed, and would list precisely what information is to be shared with the review committee, when the committees are to conduct business, the general guidelines for the committees' operation, the time limitations for conducting the reviews, and who may participate in the review. As for the information to be reported, the rules will ask for:

(1) summary reports of the review to include the recommendations of the committee regarding the continuation or discontinuation of foster care and reasons; treatment needs of the child; and court action;

(2) sufficient information to allow the tracking of the reviews; to facilitate: follow-up services, compliance with court orders, agency decisions, and response to committee recommendations; and to provide necessary reports on the department's foster care program."

Findings of District Court Regarding Custody of Child With Mother Not Erroneous Despite Evidence of Inappropriate Physical Contact Between Child and Mother's Relative: As part of a paternity action, the mother was awarded primary physical custody, and the father appealed. An amended parenting plan arrived at during mediation gave each parent physical custody of the child during alternating months. Near the end of one month's visit with the father, the child divulged that inappropriate physical contact with her stepgrandfather had occurred while in the mother's custody. The father moved for modification of the parenting plan. The District Court was faced with conflicting evidence in the case, receiving testimony from the stepgrandfather that no inappropriate touching occurred, as well as testimony from professionals who opined that sexual abuse had occurred. Additional expert testimony suggested that the child's constant travel was a possible cause of her troubling behavior and that the experts who suggested that sexual abuse occurred had not followed standard protocols when interviewing the child. Lay testimony indicated that it was unlikely that the stepgrandfather had an opportunity to commit the alleged abuse. The court ultimately determined that sexual abuse had not been proved. The father appealed on grounds that the court's findings were insufficient, that the court erred in not giving the father custody based on the evidence presented, and that the court erred by apparently rejecting the testimony of the child's clinical psychologist and the disclosures made by the child relating to sexual abuse. The Supreme Court noted that credibility determinations are within the province of the trier of fact and held that, in light of the conflicting testimony, the trial court's findings and conclusions were sufficient to support the court's decision. Although the trial court did not specifically articulate the elements of 40-4-212, it clearly made determinations that it considered to be in the child's best interests. Failure to list the contentions of a particular witness, such as the child's clinical psychologist, was not sufficient to determine a per se abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court. Without a clear showing of abuse of discretion, the Supreme Court declined to disturb the decision and affirmed the denial of the father's motion to modify the parenting plan. In re Paternity & Custody of A.D.V., 2001 MT 74, 305 M 62, 22 P3d 1124 (2001).

Jury to Be Informed of Duty to Report: In a negligence action alleging abuse of a foster child, the Supreme Court reversed, ruling that the District Court erred in refusing to instruct the jury of the Department's statutory duty to notify the County Attorney of a child abuse report. Newville v. St., 267 M 237, 883 P2d 793, 51 St. Rep. 758 (1994).

Reporting Mandate and Immunity Applied to Social Worker Reporting Event Sixteen Years Previous: A clinical social worker running a therapy group was subject to the reporting mandate of this section, despite assurances of strict confidentiality and despite the fact that alleged incidents of sexual abuse occurred 16 years earlier. Absent evidence that the social worker acted in bad faith or with malicious purpose, the immunity granted by 41-3-203 was properly extended. Gross v. Myers, 229 M 509, 748 P2d 459, 44 St. Rep. 2176 (1987).

Ability to Support Child: Since ability of parents to support children was not determined in compliance with sections 10-506 and 10-507, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), but was left to testimony to be elicited at a later hearing, order compelling parents to pay support costs in action depriving them of the children was set aside. In re Phelps, 145 M 557, 402 P2d 593 (1965).

Balance of Competing State Interests in Prevention and Reporting of Child Abuse — Abrogation of Communication Privileges by Statute: Although the state has competing interests in the prevention of child abuse and neglect and in protecting the communication privileges between physicians or mental health practitioners and their patients, the communication privilege is abrogated under 41-3-201 in cases where the professional obtains the information as a result of his treatment of the child. 42 A.G. Op. 7 (1987).

Statutory Reporting Requirements Not Preempted by Federal Confidentiality Provisions: The provisions of this section requiring disclosure of child abuse or neglect known by a chemical dependency counselor are not preempted by the confidentiality provisions of the federal Comprehensive Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism Prevention, Treatment, and Rehabilitation Act amendments of 1974, 42 U.S.C. 290dd-3. 42 A.G. Chapter 564 at beginning of second sentence in (1) inserted exception clause; in (3)(d) inserted "or person designated by a parent or guardian"; inserted second sentence in (4) prohibiting use of subsection to compel confidentiality; inserted (5) exempting news organization or its employee from liability for reporting facts or statements made by family member if child's confidentiality is maintained; and made minor changes in style.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 564, L. 1995, provided: "WHEREAS, the Legislature finds it necessary to restore public confidence in the child protective system and to provide protection of individual and family civil rights as guaranteed by the state and federal constitutions."

1993 Amendment: Chapter 610 in (3)(1), after "41-3-1115", inserted "or, when applicable, a local citizen review board established under Title 41, chapter 3, part 10"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

1991 Amendments: Chapter 510 inserted (3)(n) relating to county interdisciplinary child information team; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Chapter 655 inserted (3)(o) relating to local interagency staffing group; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

1989 Amendments: Chapter 110 inserted (3)(j) authorizing disclosure to youth probation officer; and made minor changes in form. Amendment effective March 15, 1989.

Chapter 126 inserted (3)(m) relating to a school employee participating in an interview of a child. Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

1987 Amendments: Chapter 287 deleted former (2) that read: "(2) Records may be used by interagency interdisciplinary child protective teams as authorized under 41-3-108 for the purposes of assessing the needs of the child and family, formulating a treatment plan, and monitoring the plan. Members of the team are required to keep information about the subject individuals confidential"; inserted (3) listing persons or entities authorized to receive confidential records concerning child abuse and neglect; and inserted (4) requiring a person authorized to receive records concerning child abuse and neglect to maintain confidentiality and prohibiting disclosure to anyone other than authorized persons or entities.

Chapter 609 near beginning of (1), after "rehabilitation services", inserted "the department of family services".

1987 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 287, L. 1987, provided: "This bill requires a statement of intent because it authorizes the department of social and rehabilitation services [now department of public health and human services] to adopt rules to govern the disclosure of case records on reports of child abuse and neglect. The legislature intends that the rules should include procedures or criteria for:

(1) requesting and disclosing information in the records;

(2) protecting the identity of person named in the records if rights of privacy require such protection;

(3) preparing records or reports (psychological, psychiatric, and medical) written by persons other than employees of the department;

(4) documenting disclosure of the records;

(5) amending, correcting, or expunging information in the records;

(6) approving or denying requests for disclosure of the records."

Denial of Defendant's Access to Rape Victim's Counselor and Counselor's Records Upheld: Muir was convicted of sexual intercourse without consent with a victim under 16 years of age. Prior to and during trial, Muir requested access to the victim's psychological counselor and to the counselor's records because the counselor was listed as a potential witness. However, after an in camera review of the records by the District Court, Muir was given access only to an investigator's note of an interview with the victim's counselor. The Supreme Court held that Muir was properly denied access to the counselor and the counselor's records because the victim's conversations with the counselor are privileged and the District Court found no exculpatory evidence in the records. Citing St. v. Reynolds, 243 M 1, 792 P2d 1111 (1990), the Supreme Court also reasoned that a defendant's right to pretrial discovery is not equivalent to a defendant's constitutional right of confrontation and that Muir had shown no correlation between the victim's emotional problems and her consent to sexual intercourse. St. v. Muir, 263 M 241, 867 P2d 1094, 51 St. Rep. 19 (1994).

Termination of Parental Rights — Father Not Allowed "In Camera" Inspection of Entire File: In proceedings to terminate a father's parental rights, when the father moved for an "in camera" inspection of the entire Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) file and the Department objected to disclosure of reports prepared by the foster parents, it was not clearly erroneous for the District Court to deny disclosure of evidence in view of failure on the part of the father's counsel to attempt to limit or specify in any manner the information requested. In re M.A.W. & K.M.W., 256 M 296, 846 P2d 985, 50 St. Rep. 64 (1993).

Limited Discovery of Department Files Proper: It was proper for the District Court to conduct its own inspection of the Department of Family Services' (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) files and to produce for defendant's use those documents the court felt were relevant and necessary to the defense. Limited discovery, rather than complete disclosure, was warranted under this section. St. v. Goodwin, 249 M 1, 813 P2d 953, 48 St. Rep. 539 (1991).

Examination of Social Worker's File Not Allowed — No Violation of Constitutional Rights: Defendant in a child abuse case claimed his constitutional rights were violated by the District Court's refusal to allow him to examine the file of the social worker assigned to his case. The Supreme Court relied on Pa. v. Ritchie, 480 US 39, 94 L Ed 2d 40, 107 S Ct 989 (1987), in holding that Montana's child abuse confidentiality statute, this section, as it applies to file review, does not violate a defendant's right to confront his accusers. Further, as long as the trial court has the statutory authority to review the file in camera and to release material information from the file to the accused, defendant's right to a fair trial is fully protected. St. v. Thiel, 236 M 63, 768 P2d 343, 46 St. Rep. 182 (1989), followed in St. v. Donnelly, 244 M 371, 798 P2d 89, 47 St. Rep. 1600 (1990), and in St. v. Little, 260 M 460, 861 P2d 154, 50 St. Rep. 1124 (1993). See also St. v. Imlay, 249 M 82, 813 P2d 979, 48 St. Rep. 588 (1991), which overruled Donnelly with regard to augmentation of sentence for failure to admit guilt.

Censure of Attorney Disseminating Confidential Information Protected by Statute: A lawyer was publicly censured by the Montana Supreme Court for obtaining confidential information from his law firm's files and from the files of the County Attorney and for disseminating the information to parties not entitled to it, notwithstanding the confidentiality requirements of this section.

Censure was changed from oral censure in the Supreme Court's courtroom to censure in writing by that court and placed in the court's records, because it would be a financial burden for him to appear in court as he lived out of state. In re Wyse, 215 M 82, 697 P2d 94, 42 St. Rep. 198 (1985).

Confidentiality of Records on Child Abuse and Neglect — Not Violative of Confrontation Rights: An attorney being disciplined for violating the confidentiality provisions of 41-3-205 did not prevail in his contention that the section conflicted with the right of confrontation guaranteed by Art. II, sec. 24, Mont. Const., and the sixth amendment to the United States Constitution because the attorney, in his zeal to get information relevant to his client, did not make an application to the court for permission to disseminate the information. In re Wyse, 212 M 339, 688 P2d 758, 41 St. Rep. 1780 (1984).

"Unauthorized Dissemination" and "Public Disclosure" Not Synonymous: The terms "unauthorized dissemination" in subsection (1) and "public disclosure" in subsection (3) are not synonymous. Any unauthorized dissemination, public or private, is prohibited under subsection (1); the term "public disclosure" comes into play if a request is made to the court to permit the same and the court finds such public disclosure necessary for the fair resolution of the issue before it. In re Wyse, 212 M 339, 688 P2d 758, 41 St. Rep. 1780 (1984).

Contempt for Violation — Defense Barred: Attorney charged with contempt of court for unauthorized dissemination, in violation of this section, of information in records of dependent and neglected child proceeding could not argue this section was vague where he admitted that he knew such a statute existed and that a court order was probably needed to obtain the information but did not bother to look up the statute prior to his dissemination. Wyse v. District Court, 195 M 434, 636 P2d 865, 38 St. Rep. 2005 (1981). See also In re Wyse, 212 M 339, 688 P2d 758, 41 St. Rep. 1780 (1984).

Contempt for Violation — Standards for Attorneys: Attorney charged with contempt of court for violating this section was a licensed professional and an officer of the court and was not subject to the reasonable man standard but to a higher standard, one dictated by the nature of his profession. Wyse v. District Court, 195 M 434, 636 P2d 865, 38 St. Rep. 2005 (1981). See also In re Wyse, 212 M 339, 688 P2d 758, 41 St. Rep. 1780 (1984).

Inclusion of Juvenile Record in Presentence Report: Section 41-3-205 does not support appellant's contention that it was improper to include his juvenile record in a presentence report since that section applies only to dependence and neglect situations and not to proceedings for delinquents under the Montana Youth Court Act. Section 41-5-604 (renumbered 41-5-216) does not support appellant's contention either, because the prevention of public dissemination of a juvenile record once that individual attains an age of majority is accomplished by sealing the presentence report. St. v. Radi, 185 M 38, 604 P2d 318 (1979).

Exception to Confidentiality: The confidentiality of privileged communications did not prevent disclosure of information obtained by school nurse, public nurse, and social welfare workers as evidence at custody hearing for dependent and neglected children. In re Jones & Peterson Children, 168 M 1, 539 P2d 1193 (1975).

Disclosure of Case Records and Reports of Child Abuse and Neglect: Absent a court order, 41-3-205 prohibits the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) from disclosing case records and reports of child abuse and neglect to: (1) the natural parents or parent or other person having legal custody of a child who is the subject of a dependency and neglect action filed under 41-3-401; (2) health care professionals who are treating a child suspected of being abused or neglected; (3) the noncustodial parent of a child who has been removed from the custodial parent following an incident of abuse or neglect; and (4) the natural parents or parent or other person having legal custody of a child who has been abused or neglected while in the care of foster parents. 41 A.G. (6) approving or denying requests for disclosure of the records."

1979 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to HB 813 (Ch. 567, L. 1979) provided: "The provision of law dealing with abused, neglected, or dependent children; delinquent youths; and youths in need of supervision [now youth in need of intervention] recognize the principle that the parents or guardian of the minor is responsible for a fair share of the costs of supporting the minor when the minor is placed in a foster home, group home, or other form of custodial care. This bill is intended to provide a mechanism for determining the parents' or guardians' share of financial support in those situations involving the department of social and rehabilitation services [now department of public health and human services]. Three guiding principles interact to provide the thrust of the legislation. First, the welfare of the minor is of utmost concern. The focus is on the youth, and the law is designed to provide an opportunity for the youth to realize his potential. Secondly, the traditional privacy and security of the family are to be preserved. Thirdly and referred to above, the parents or guardian of a minor is responsible for the financial support of the minor. These three principles can and often do conflict with one another. This bill addresses investigations as to the ability of the parents or guardian to bear all or part of the cost of supporting a youth taken from their custody and attempts to strike a balance between these three principles by requiring that an investigation by the county welfare department [now local office of public assistance] into matters of financial status may not be made until a court, or, in the case of an informal adjustment under the Youth Court Act, a probation officer places the child in a foster home, child care agency, group home, or private treatment facility.

Rules developed pursuant to authority granted under this bill should provide procedures that insure the parents or guardian have access to the reports and data developed by both the department of social and rehabilitation services [now department of public health and human services] and the county welfare department and that guarantee investigations into financial and other matters will not intrude into private lives beyond the level necessary to protect the welfare of the child."

Case Notes

Failure to Dismiss Petition Not Reversible Error Despite Failure to Follow Forty-Eight-Hour Rule: Even though a petition for termination (now abuse and neglect petition—see 2001 amendment) and permanent custody was not filed until 13 days after emergency placement of the children, in violation of the 48-hour rule of this section, any error in not following the strict statutory procedure was harmless since the best interest of the children was the primary concern and the parent's due process rights were not violated. In re F.H., J.K., & B.K., 266 M 36, 878 P2d 890, 51 St. Rep. 649 (1994).

Qualified Immunity of Department Social Workers in Removing Children to Out-of-State Placement: Social workers who removed minor children from father's home without notice or hearing and arranged for them to stay in another state with their mother, who had joint custody, were not entitled to absolute immunity in father's civil rights action because their actions were neither quasi-prosecutorial nor quasi-judicial in nature. However, the social workers were entitled to qualified immunity because of the emergency nature of their actions and because they did not violate any clearly established constitutional or statutory right. Caldwell v. LeFaver, 928 F2d 331 (9th Cir. 1991).

Timely Filing of Petition: The filing of a petition for temporary investigative authority and protective services (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) as to children who may be abused and neglected was timely and proper because of the exclusion of intermediate Saturdays, Sundays, and holidays from the computation time (clarified by 2001 amendment). Exclusive Tribal Jurisdiction of Indian Children — No Departmental Jurisdiction: The Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) has no jurisdiction to provide child protection services to Indian children who are subject to exclusive tribal jurisdiction under the Indian Child Welfare Act, 25 U.S.C. 1901, et seq., or to children residing on the reservation and eligible for tribal membership. The scope of the Department's responsibility is unaffected by the child's eligibility, or lack thereof, for participation in Bureau of Indian Affairs programs, and the Department is not obligated to provide child protective services and benefits to the extent the federal program offers comparable assistance. 41 A.G. Determination of Staffing Patterns of County Public Assistance Offices: Both the Department of Public Health and Human Services and county welfare boards have an interest in staffing patterns for county public assistance offices, and when possible, staffing patterns should be determined through a process of consultation and negotiation between the Department and the county welfare board. However, if an agreement cannot be reached through that process, the Department has the final authority for determining staffing patterns for the county public welfare office in a nonassumed county. (See 2001 amendments.) 48 A.G. Op. 18 (2000).

Retroactive Foster Care Payments: In the absence of a determination that foster care assistance was improperly denied, neither a County Department of Public Welfare nor the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) is required to retroactively pay foster care costs on behalf of a relinquished child. Where there is a determination made that foster care assistance was improperly denied, only the foster home involved is entitled to foster care payments. 38 A.G. Op. 11 (1979).

Public and Private Placement Agencies: County Departments of Public Welfare may not deny foster care payments solely because the child receiving foster care has been relinquished to a private rather than public placement agency. If eligibility is established, County Departments of Public Welfare are required to approve foster care payments to a foster home on behalf of a child who has been relinquished to a private placement agency. 38 A.G. Op. 11 (1979).

County Power — "4-C's": Counties, jointly with the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services), may contract with local "4-C's" projects to provide coordination and support of child abuse prevention and treatment services. 37 A.G. Part 4
Abuse or Neglect Proceedings

Dismissal of Petition for Temporary Investigative Authority (See 2001 Amendment to 41-3-427) Without Review of Guardianship Action — Harmless Error in Light of Requirements of Indian Child Welfare Act: In compliance with 41-3-403 (renumbered 41-3-423), the District Court ordered a show cause hearing at which to consider a petition for temporary investigative authority (TIA) (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) regarding two Indian children. At the hearing, the Deputy County Attorney offered an order and memorandum from a previously dismissed guardianship proceeding as evidence. The court did not admit the documentation as evidence, but took judicial notice of it. However, at the end of the hearing, the court dismissed the petition for TIA (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) without reviewing any records from the guardianship proceeding and ordered the Department of Public Health and Human Services to immediately place the children with their father. The mother contended that it was error to dismiss the petition without reviewing the guardianship file. In order for courts to grant TIA (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) petitions when Indian children are involved, the requirements of the Indian Child Welfare Act must be met. Under 25 U.S.C. 1912, active efforts must be made to provide remedial services and rehabilitation programs to prevent the breakup of the Indian family. In addition, any finding that continued custody of the child by the parent or Indian custodian is likely to result in serious emotional or physical damage to the child must be based on the testimony of qualified expert witnesses. Because these requirements were not met, the court could not have granted TIA (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) even if it had reviewed the guardianship file, so its failure to do so, if erroneous, was harmless. In re M.P.M. & A.R.M., 1999 MT 78, 294 M 87, 976 P2d 988, 56 St. Rep. 327 (1999).

Error in Placing Custody With One Parent Following Dismissal of Petition for Temporary Investigative Authority (See 2001 Amendment to 41-3-427): In compliance with 41-3-403 (renumbered 41-3-423), the District Court ordered a show cause hearing at which to consider a petition for temporary investigative authority (TIA) (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) regarding two Indian children. At the end of the hearing, the court dismissed the petition for TIA (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) and ordered the Department of Public Health and Human Services to immediately place the children with their father. The Department argued on appeal that the court exceeded its authority in ordering transfer of custody to the father after the petition for TIA (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) was dismissed. The Supreme Court held that when the District Court vacated the orders issued following filing of the petition for TIA (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427), it did not have authority to place custody with the father because nothing in the statutory framework or legislative intent authorizes the placement of a child with one parent, as opposed to the other, following dismissal of a petition for TIA (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427). The order transferring custody to the father was reversed. In re M.P.M. & A.R.M., 1999 MT 78, 294 M 87, 976 P2d 988, 56 St. Rep. 327 (1999).

Federal Indian Child Welfare Act — Temporary Custody Not in Compliance With Act — Otherwise Valid Parental Termination Not Invalidated: Child of Indian parents was placed in the temporary custody of the state in proceedings that may not have complied with the federal Indian Child Welfare Act (25 U.S.C. §1901, et seq.). Later, in proceedings that complied with the Act and before a different judge with different witnesses, the parents' rights were terminated and permanent custody was granted the state. The Supreme Court held that any failure to comply with the Act in the temporary proceedings would not invalidate the later termination because the proceedings are separate actions involving separate petitions and statutory guidelines. Foster Care or Adoption Placement of Indian Children — No Department Payments Under Social Security Act: The Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) may not make payments under Title IV-E of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 670 through 676) to Indian children whose foster care or adoption placement is subject to exclusive tribal jurisdiction under the Indian Child Welfare Act (25 U.S.C. 1901, et seq.). 41 A.G. Op. 76 (1986).

Transfer of Child Custody Proceeding to Tribal Jurisdiction — No Continuance of State Child Protection Services: Once a child custody proceeding has been transferred from state District Court to tribal jurisdiction under sec. 101(b) of the Indian Child Welfare Act (25 U.S.C. 1911(b)), the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) may not continue to provide child protection services or benefits to the Indian child. 41 A.G. Op. 76 (1986).

GENERAL

Attempt to Use Writ of Habeas Corpus to Demand Physical Presence of Children Removed From Parent in Abuse and Neglect Proceeding — Petition Properly Denied: The mother petitioned the District Court for a writ of habeas corpus demanding that her children be physically present for an abuse and neglect hearing because they were material witnesses and had been removed from her custody unlawfully. The petition was denied. On appeal, the mother cited In re Bertelson, 189 M 524, 617 P2d 121 (1980), for the proposition that a writ of habeas corpus was the appropriate procedural device to bring the custody matter before a court. The Supreme Court disagreed and distinguished Bertelson because the mother's position ignored the substantial differences between dissolution proceedings and abuse and neglect proceedings, differences that were not at issue in Bertelson. The court also cited its earlier holding in In re B.P. & A.P., 2000 MT 39, 298 M 287, 995 P2d 982 (2000), in which it was held that the children were properly removed from the mother's home. Because temporary custody of the children with the state was legal, relief pursuant to habeas corpus premised on illegal restraint was not available to the mother under these circumstances. In re B.P. & A.P., 2001 MT 219, 306 M 430, 35 P3d 291 (2001).

Denial of Writ of Habeas Corpus to Compel Attendance of Children in Abuse and Neglect Hearing Not Violative of Due Process Rights or Right to Confront Witnesses: The mother petitioned the District Court for a writ of habeas corpus demanding that her children be physically present for an abuse and neglect hearing because they were material witnesses and claiming that the writ was necessary to ensure her due process rights by having the children available to rebut allegations against her at the hearing. The petition was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Although the mother was entitled to an opportunity for a meaningful hearing, that opportunity need not be provided at the expense of the children whose best interests were the paramount focus of the proceeding, and subjecting the children to direct and cross-examination could exacerbate the abuse that they had already experienced. Denial of the petition did not violate the mother's right to confront witnesses because the children were not her accusers and she had no right to confront them. Rather, the abuse and neglect case was brought by the state, and the mother had ample opportunity to confront and examine the state's witnesses and experts at the hearing, so her due process rights were met. In re B.P. & A.P., 2001 MT 219, 306 M 430, 35 P3d 291 (2001).

Parties in Dissolution Proceeding Not Same as Parties in Abuse and Neglect Proceeding — Res Judicata Inapplicable: During marriage dissolution proceedings, the mother was granted custody of the children, but during a subsequent abuse and neglect proceeding, permanent custody was granted to the father. The mother appealed the placement on grounds that it constituted a readjudication of the earlier custody order in her favor in the dissolution action, in violation of the doctrine of res judicata. The Supreme Court disagreed. Four criteria must be met for res judicata to apply, the first of which is that the parties or their privies are the same. The mother failed to meet this criteria because in the dissolution action, the parties were the mother and father, while in the abuse and neglect proceeding, the parties were the state, the children, and the mother. Despite the fact that the state was investigating claims of abuse within the family during the dissolution action, it was not a party to that action and did not petition for investigative authority and protective services (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) for the children until the dissolution was final. In re B.P. & A.P., 2001 MT 219, 306 M 430, 35 P3d 291 (2001).

Parent Not Represented by Counsel During Show Cause Hearing Regarding Whether Child a Youth in Need of Care — Due Process Rights Not Violated: At the time of a show cause hearing on whether her child was a youth in need of care, the mother was an indigent mental patient civilly committed to the state hospital. She appeared at the hearing without representation of counsel. The mother contended that the District Court violated her due process rights by making that critical determination regarding the child when she was unrepresented. Although in In re A.S.A., J.L.A., G.A., & A.J.A., 258 M 194, 852 P2d 127 (1993), the Supreme Court held that the constitutional right to due process guarantees an indigent parent the right to court-appointed counsel in parental rights termination proceedings, the court has not extended the right to counsel to a pretermination proceeding in which the focal issue is whether a child is a youth in need of care. Rather, appointment of counsel at any time prior to the initiation of termination proceedings is within the discretion of the District Court. In this case, the initial determination that the child was a youth in need of care was made by order pursuant to a finding of probable cause even before the mother's first appearance in any proceedings when the District Court relied on a report submitted by a social worker showing that the child was abused or neglected or in danger of abuse or neglect and that removal from the home was necessary to protect the child's welfare. Subsequent to the initial determination, the District Court reached the same conclusion on at least three separate occasions when the mother was represented by counsel, including one hearing when the social worker was subjected to cross-examination by the mother's counsel. The Supreme Court applied In re M.F., 201 M 277, 653 P2d 1205 (1982), and in re D.S., H.S., R.S., R.S., J.S., R.S., & K.S., 253 M 484, 833 P2d 1090 (1992), and in holding that the state is not required to provide counsel at proceedings concerning temporary investigative authority or temporary custody. Thus, the mother's due process rights were not violated when the District Court made the determination that the child was a youth in need of care at a time when the mother was not represented by counsel. In re A.M., 2001 MT 60, 304 M 379, 22 P3d 185 (2001).

Retroactive Application of Amendment: Subsection (2) of 41-3-401 (renumbered 41-3-422) was amended in 1985 to require adjudicatory hearing within 20 days of filing of petition but was amended in 1987 to remove the 20-day requirement. Hearing in this case was held after effective date of 1985 amendment but not within 20 days of filing petition. Appellant contended 1985 amendment was procedural and applied retroactively to require hearing within 20 days. The Supreme Court, citing Boehm v. Alanon Club, 222 M 373, 722 P2d 1160, 43 St. Rep. 1341 (1986), held that even though this provision may be procedural and therefore not subject to 1-2-109 (which states no law is retroactive unless expressly so declared), the 1987 amendment was likewise retroactive and therefore voided the 20-day requirement. Custody of R.A.D., 44 St. Rep. 2018 (1987). Opinion withdrawn but issue affirmed in Custody of R.A.D. & J.D., 231 M 143, 753 P2d 862, 45 St. Rep. 496 (1988).

Evidence of Sexual Abuse — Treatment Plan Ordered: Acting on evidence of sexual abuse and other problems within the family, the trial court properly found S.L.T. to be an abused and neglected child. The court granted temporary custody to the county welfare department and required that the child and her parents follow a treatment plan submitted by the welfare department. Section 41-3-404 (renumbered 41-3-437) gives the trial court authority to order any of the forms of relief listed in 41-3-403 (renumbered 41-3-423) once the court determines a child is abused or neglected. This includes the relief ordered in this case. In re S.L.T., 215 M 289, 697 P2d 472, 42 St. Rep. 366 (1985).

Failure to Serve Natural Father — Mother's Lack of Standing to Contest: In a youth in need of care proceeding, the mother has no standing to contest the failure to serve the natural father when she has not shown a personal interest that would be adversely affected by such failure to serve. In re B.L.O., 213 M 164, 689 P2d 1246, 41 St. Rep. 2024 (1984).

Finding of Abuse, Neglect, or Dependency Necessary Before Consideration of Best Interests of the Child: M.G.M. was born out of wedlock and had little contact with her natural father until the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Family Services) placed M.G.M. in a foster home and terminated her mother's parental rights. The Department then sought to terminate the father's parental rights. To terminate his parental rights, the court must first find that the child is abused, neglected, or dependent. Only when such a finding has been made can the court apply the best interests of the child test. In re M.G.M., 201 M 400, 654 P2d 994, 39 St. Rep. 2191 (1982).

Matter Submitted With Petition: The Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (SRS) (now Department of Family Services) first had contact with the mother of three minor children in 1967. During the period from 1976 through 1981, SRS received numerous complaints alleging abuse and neglect of the children. In 1981, proceedings were begun to terminate the mother's parental rights. The mother contended that the submission of a social worker's report to the court, along with the petition for permanent custody, was error. The Supreme Court held that where the report contained information essentially the same as that testified to by the author, who was cross-examined at the hearing, there is a presumption that the trial court has disregarded all inadmissible material in making its decision. The decision of the lower court was upheld. In re M.F., J.F., & R.W., 201 M 277, 653 P2d 1205, 39 St. Rep. 2103 (1982).

Interval Between Removal and Final Order: Although the interval of 20 months between the time of removal from the home until the final order was long and District Courts are exhorted to give preference to custody cases, reversal here would be an ill-advised and improper sanction because of the best interests of the child. In re A.J.S., 193 M 79, 630 P2d 217, 38 St. Rep. 947 (1981). (Annotator's note: Chapter 659, sec. 5, L. 1985, amended 41-3-401 (renumbered 41-3-422) and 41-3-404 (renumbered 41-3-437) to require that the 41-3-404 (renumbered 41-3-437) adjudicatory hearing must be held within 20 days of the filing of the petition and the 41-3-406 (renumbered 41-3-438) dispositional hearing must be held within 30 days of the adjudicatory hearing. Chapter 388, sec. 2, L. 1985, amended 41-3-607 to require that a dispositional hearing on a petition to terminate parental rights must be held within 180 days of the filing of the petition.)

Names of Parties: The Supreme Court directed that in this and in future cases under 41-3-101, et seq., in both the District and Supreme Courts, all names of parties involved be removed to avoid publicity of the minor parties involved. In re G., Youth in Need of Care, 174 M 321, 570 P2d 1110 (1977).

Failure to Make Required Findings: The District Court abused its discretion in awarding permanent custody to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Family Services) because it patently failed to make the required findings that the child was "abused, dependent, or neglected" and therefore was without power to effect a permanent transfer of custody to a nonparent. In re Fish, 174 M 201, 569 P2d 924 (1977).

Hearsay in Child Custody Procedure: The Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, including the hearsay rule, must be strictly followed in a child custody procedure to avoid abuse. Therefore, Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Family Services) reports containing hearsay that are not excepted from the rule as either business records or written reports by state officers are inadmissible. In re Swan, 173 M 311, 567 P2d 898 (1977).

Prehearing Report — Petition for Permanent Custody: The Supreme Court avoided deciding whether or not it is proper for a County Attorney to file a prehearing report in support of a petition under 41-3-401 (renumbered 41-3-422) for permanent custody since the only report in the record was filed in support of a temporary investigative authority and protective services (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) petition under 41-3-402(3) (renumbered 41-3-427(3)). In re Moyer, 173 M 208, 567 P2d 47 (1977).

Temporary Custody: When petitioners had requested temporary custody of neglected children and no petition had been filed by the welfare department for permanent custody, the District Court was without authority to enter an order of permanent custody. Flathead County Welfare Dept. v. Endres, 166 M 379, 533 P2d 959 (1975).

JURISDICTION

Expiration of Temporary Custody Order — No Effect on Jurisdiction: At the time that the Department of Family Services filed a petition for temporary investigative authority (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427), the mother and her children were not living on the reservation. Subsequently, the mother moved back to the reservation and sought to have the action transferred to the tribal court. The mother argued that the District Court had lost jurisdiction over the matter when its order of temporary custody expired. The Supreme Court ruled that the child abuse and neglect statutes do not make provisions for the expiration of custody in the state or for the loss of jurisdiction by the court, other than by a finding by the court that the children are not in danger of being abused or neglected and by vacating any order made pursuant to 41-3-403 (renumbered 41-3-423). In re W.L., C.L., & B.L., 260 M 325, 859 P2d 1019, 50 St. Rep. 1081 (1993).

Jurisdiction Respecting Indian Children — Domicile at Time Action Commenced: At the time that the Department of Family Services filed a petition for temporary investigative authority (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427), the mother and her children were not living on the reservation. Subsequently, the mother moved back to the reservation and sought to have the action transferred to the tribal court. The Supreme Court held that domicile is determined at the commencement of an action and that the lower court had jurisdiction based on the fact that the mother and her children were not living on the reservation when the petition was filed. In re W.L., C.L., & B.L., 260 M 325, 859 P2d 1019, 50 St. Rep. 1081 (1993).

Lack of Personal Notice — Due Process Not Violated: Mother abandoned her children after two failed treatment plans and neglected to apprise the Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) of her whereabouts for over 90 days prior to initiation of termination proceedings, during which time Department efforts to contact her were unsuccessful. Relying on 41-3-401 (renumbered 41-3-422), she later argued that because she was not personally served with notice of the termination proceedings, her due process rights were violated. However, 41-3-608 outlines the notice requirements applicable to parent-child relationship termination proceedings. The District Court, after noting the Department's efforts to locate mother and the fact that she was under actual notice from the onset of Department involvement that her parental rights could be terminated if she failed to follow court-ordered treatment plans, properly held that the notice requirements of 41-3-608 were satisfied. In re A.E., C.E., S.R., & J.R., 255 M 56, 840 P2d 572, 49 St. Rep. 877 (1992).

Failure to Transfer Jurisdiction of Eskimo Child to Alaska Tribe Proper — Application of Indian Child Welfare Act: The District Court denied an Eskimo tribe's motion to transfer jurisdiction of child custody proceedings of an Eskimo child under the Indian Child Welfare Act of 1978. The Supreme Court found that denial of the motion was proper under the rationale of 25 U.S.C. 1911(a) and (b) and the previous ruling in In re M.E.M., 195 M 329, 635 P2d 1313 (1981). The child was not residing or domiciled within the tribal reservation. Further, good cause existed for retaining jurisdiction in Montana rather than transferring jurisdiction to Alaska, including evidence of potentially devastating damage to the child's best interests and stability, as well as undue hardship on parties and witnesses. In re T.S., 245 M 242, 801 P2d 77, 47 St. Rep. 2149 (1990), replacing previous opinion, subsequently withdrawn, at 47 St. Rep. 1888.

Refusal to Relinquish Custody of Indian Children to Tribe — No Abuse of Discretion: Although a tribe participated in the dispositional hearing and presented a formal resolution asking for custody of the children, who were tribal members, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to relinquish custody to the tribe when it was determined that the children's best interests would be better served by leaving them in their foster home placement, with the ultimate goal of placing them in a Native American home. In re M.J.D., C.K.D., & A.R.D., 225 M 200, 731 P2d 937, 44 St. Rep. 167 (1987).

Transfer of Child Proceeding From Montana Court to Tribal Court — Due Process Requirements: One of the purposes of the Indian Child Welfare Act, 25 U.S.C. §1901, et seq., is to ensure due process for all those involved, which requires a Montana court, when entertaining a tribal court motion for transfer to the tribal court of jurisdiction of children who are the subject of a Montana court proceeding, to hold a hearing on the transfer request and give a parent who claims indigency an appointed counsel if the court finds indigency. In re G.L.O.C., Youth in Need of Care, 205 M 352, 668 P2d 235, 40 St. Rep. 1354 (1983).

Parental Consent Not Required: Parental consent is not a jurisdictional necessity under this chapter to declare a child abused, dependent, or neglected or to grant permanent custody of the child to persons other than the natural parents. In re C.M.S., A Dependent and Neglected Child, 187 M 115, 609 P2d 240 (1979).

Jurisdiction Dependent on Statutory Compliance: In a consolidated proceeding based on a petition for a Writ of Habeas Corpus by a natural parent and a petition by a nonparent for guardianship, the District Court was without jurisdiction to find the children involved dependent and neglected and to enter an order granting custody to the nonparent petitioners. Unless 41-3-401 (renumbered 41-3-422) is followed, the court is without jurisdiction to deprive the parent of custody. In re the Marriage of Schultz v. Schultz, 184 M 245, 602 P2d 595 (1979), following Guardianship of Aschenbrenner, 182 M 540, 597 P2d 1156 (1979), and Guardianship of Evans, 179 M 438, 587 P2d 372 (1978).

Jurisdiction Based on Service: Under section 10-504, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), District Court had jurisdiction over petition by state seeking permanent custody and right to consent to adoption of three children despite the facts that proper citation was not issued or served on the parents, when father of one of the children had consented to the proceeding, father of other two children was deceased, mother who was represented by counsel appeared at the hearing voluntarily, and the hearing on the petition in question was preceded by a series of hearings and postponements regarding temporary custody of the children. Bonser v. Cascade County, 162 M 1, 507 P2d 1064 (1973).

Jurisdiction Over Indians: Under section 10-503, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), when child was taken from Indian reservation and abandoned outside the reservation, court for the county where the child was found could take jurisdiction and provide for the child despite the fact that the mother remained on the reservation and committed no acts of neglect outside the reservation. In re Cantrell, 159 M 66, 495 P2d 179 (1972).

FACTORS TO BE CONSIDERED

Termination of Parental Rights: When the following things were considered, the record supported the conclusion that the father's rights were adequately considered prior to termination of parental rights and that the decision to terminate them was supported by credible evidence: (1) the father was notified of the hearing, was present, and was represented by counsel; (2) professional testimony indicated the father would not be able to provide enough influence to offset the marked deprivation anticipated to continue for the child; (3) the father was found to have made no effort to assist the mother in learning to become a good parent; (4) the father had visited the child only once in 6 months when the child was in a foster home and had been reported to have abused the child. In re L.F.G., 183 M 239, 598 P2d 1125 (1979).

Youth in Need — Best Interest of Child — Mental Condition of Parent as Sole Factor: When the District Court considered the best interests of a child only after first determining that the child was in fact abused or neglected, it met the required standard. Considering the mental condition of the mother as the primary if not the sole factor, but having evidence that the child would not receive even minimally satisfactory maternal care and would be exposed to extremely high chances of developing a mental condition similar to that of the mother, sufficient credible evidence was before the District Court to support the District Court's decision that the child was a youth in need of care. The Supreme Court rejected the view that mental condition of a parent could not be the sole factor supporting a severance of parental rights. In re L.F.G., 183 M 239, 598 P2d 1125 (1979).

APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIAN OR COUNSEL

Appointed Counsel — Termination of Parental Rights — Factors Considered: The Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (SRS) (now Department of Family Services) first had contact with the mother of three minor children in 1967. During the period from 1976 through 1981, SRS received numerous complaints alleging abuse and neglect of the children. In 1980, SRS filed a petition for temporary investigative authority (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) regarding the children. In 1981, judgment was entered terminating the mother's parental rights. On appeal, the mother contended that the District Court erred in failing to appoint counsel for her at the time the application for temporary investigative authority (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) was filed. The Supreme Court, relying on Lassiter v. Dept. of Social Services, 452 US 18 (1981), held that appointed counsel is required if the factors enumerated in Mathews v. Eldridge, 424 US 319, 47 L Ed 2d 18, 96 S Ct 893 (1976), outweigh the presumption against appointment of counsel. The factors to be considered are the private interests, the government's interest, and the risk of erroneous decision. The court found that the mother's due process rights were adequately protected by having counsel appointed prior to the hearings for termination of her parental rights and resting permanent custody in the Department (now Department of Family Services). M.F., J.F., & R.W., 201 M 277, 653 P2d 1205, 39 St. Rep. 2103 (1982), followed in In re A.B., 239 M 344, 780 P2d 622, 46 St. Rep. 1734 (1989), and in In re T.C. & R.C., 240 M 308, 784 P2d 392, 46 St. Rep. 2148 (1989).

Appointment of Counsel — Indian Child Welfare Act: In a proceeding for termination of parental rights in a dependency and neglect action involving a Sioux Indian child, the District Court was required to apply the Indian Child Welfare Act (25 U.S.C.A. §§1901-1963). The mother of the child was indigent and had an IQ of 53. Counsel should have been appointed under the Indian Child Welfare Act and 41-3-401 (renumbered 41-3-422), even though not requested. The Supreme Court held that it was reversible error not to appoint counsel for the mother, particularly in light of her indigency and IQ level. In re M.E.M., 195 M 329, 635 P2d 1313, 38 St. Rep. 1895 (1981).

Child and Indigent Parents' Right to Appointed Counsel: When indigent parents are involved in dependency proceedings, the District Court must make a judicial decision in each case as to whether such parents are entitled to counsel appointed by the court whenever the indigent parent, unable to present his or her case properly, faces a substantial possibility of the loss of custody or prolonged separation from the child. The factors which the District Court may consider in determining whether to appoint such counsel will vary from case to case, but should the District Court refuse a request for counsel, the grounds for refusal must be stated in the record so that meaningful judicial review of the refusal can be had. The same is true for children involved in the proceedings. In re M.D.Y.R., Youth in Need of Care, 177 M 521, 582 P2d 758 (1978), following Cleaver v. Wilcox, 499 F2d 940 (9th Cir. 1974).

Appointment of Counsel: Only in cases heard and decided after Gullette, 173 M 132, 566 P2d 396 (1977) (overruled in McDowell v. McDowell, 263 M 252, 868 P2d 1250, 51 St. Rep. 42 (1994)), is a finding on the appointment of counsel for a minor child required. Further, appointment of counsel is only necessary when the child needs an advocate to represent his position as to the issues in dispute or to ensure the development of an adequately complete record concerning his best interests. In re Inquiry Into J.J.S., Youth in Need of Care, 176 M 202, 577 P2d 378 (1978).

Adequate Representation in Neglect Case: County Department of Welfare adequately and properly represented children in neglect proceeding. Judge exercised discretion and did not err in failing to appoint counsel. Stubben v. Dept. of Public Welfare, 171 M 111, 556 P2d 904 (1976).

Attorney General's Opinions

Child Abuse, Neglect, and Dependency Proceedings — Duty of County Attorney: It is the duty of the County Attorney to represent the Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) in child abuse, neglect, and dependency proceedings brought under Title 41, ch. 3. 42 A.G. Op. 45 (1987).

Authority to Prevent Withholding of Treatment: The Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) has authority to initiate legal proceedings to prevent the withholding of medically indicated treatment for disabled infants with life-threatening conditions under the 1985 amendments to the child abuse, neglect, and dependency statutes. 41 A.G. Op. 85 (1986).

Disclosure of Case Records and Reports of Child Abuse and Neglect: Absent a court order, 41-3-205 prohibits the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) from disclosing case records and reports of child abuse and neglect to: (1) the natural parents or parent or other person having legal custody of a child who is the subject of a dependency and neglect action filed under 41-3-401 (renumbered 41-3-422); (2) health care professionals who are treating a child suspected of being abused or neglected; (3) the noncustodial parent of a child who has been removed from the custodial parent following an incident of abuse or neglect; and (4) the natural parents or parent or other person having legal custody of a child who has been abused or neglected while in the care of foster parents. 41 A.G. Op. 49 (1986).

County Power — "4-C's": Counties, jointly with the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services), may contract with local "4-C's" projects to provide coordination and support of child abuse prevention and treatment services. 37 A.G. Op. 105 (1978).

2001 Amendments — Composite Section — Coordination: Chapter 83 in (1)(b) in first sentence after "served" deleted "pursuant to the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure" and after "order" inserted "as provided in 41-3-428 and 41-3-429"; and in (6)(e) inserted "including the name and address of a putative father, as defined in 42-2-201, for the purpose of obtaining service of process in the proceeding". Amendment effective March 20, 2001. The amendment by Ch. 281 rendered the amendment by Ch. 83 void.

Chapter 281 deleted former (1) and (2) that read: "(1) (a) Upon the filing of a petition for temporary investigative authority and protective services, the court, after consideration of the parents' statements, if any, included with the petition and any accompanying affidavit or report to the court, may issue an order granting relief that may be required for the immediate protection of the youth.

(b) The order, along with the petition and supporting documents, must be served pursuant to the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure on the person or persons named in the order. When the youth is placed in a medical facility or protective facility, the department shall notify the parents or parent, guardian, or other person having legal custody of the youth, at the time the placement is made or as soon after placement as possible.

(c) The order must require the person served to comply immediately with the terms of the order and to appear before the court issuing the order on the date specified for a show cause hearing. The show cause hearing must be conducted within 20 days of the issuance of the order by the judge or a master appointed by the judge. The person filing the petition has the burden of presenting evidence establishing probable cause for the issuance of the order. At the show cause hearing, the court shall provide an opportunity for a parent or guardian, if present, and any other person having relevant knowledge to provide relevant testimony. The court may consider all relevant evidence in accordance with the rules of civil procedure as modified by this part, but may in its discretion limit testimony and evidence to only that which is relevant to the issues of removal from the home and the child's need for continued protection. The court may amend the order. Except as otherwise provided in this part, the rules of civil procedure apply. Hearsay evidence of statements made by the affected youth is admissible at the hearing or at a contested case proceeding held pursuant to Title 2, chapter 4, part 6, that results from adverse licensing action taken by the department.

(d) If the child is not returned home after the show cause hearing, the person served may request that a local citizen review board, if available pursuant to part 10, review the case within 30 days of the show cause hearing and make a recommendation to the district court, as provided in 41-3-1010.

(e) Upon a failure to comply or show cause, the court may hold the person in contempt or place temporary physical custody of the youth with the department until further order.

(2) At the conclusion of a show cause hearing, in an order granting or denying relief, the court shall make a finding regarding the reasonableness of agency efforts to prevent the child's removal from the home or to make it possible to safely return the child to the child's home. In determining preservation or reunification services to be provided and in making reasonable efforts at providing preservation or reunification services, the child's health and safety are of paramount concern"; inserted (1) requiring reasonable efforts to prevent the necessity of removal of a child from the child's home and to reunify families that have been separated by the state; in (2) inserted first two sentences allowing the department to request a determination that preservation or reunification services need not be provided and providing for appointment of counsel for indigent parents; inserted (4) requiring that a finding that preservation or reunification services are not necessary be supported by clear and convincing evidence; in (5) near beginning inserted reference to subsection (3); deleted former (6) through (9) that read: "(6) The court may grant the following kinds of relief:

(a) right of entry by a peace officer or department worker;

(b) medical and psychological evaluation of the youth or parents, guardians, or person having physical or legal custody;

(c) requirement that the youth, parents, guardians, or person having physical or legal custody receive counseling services;

(d) placement of the youth in a temporary medical facility or a facility for protection of the youth;

(e) requirement that the parents, guardian, or other person having physical or legal custody furnish information that the court may designate;

(f) inquiry into the financial ability of the parents, guardian, or other person having custody of the youth to contribute to the costs for the care, custody, and treatment of the youth and requirement of a contribution for those costs pursuant to the requirements of 41-3-411; or

(g) other temporary disposition that may be required in the best interests of the youth that does not require an expenditure of money by the department unless the department is notified and a court hearing is set in a timely manner on the proposed expenditure. The department is the payor of last resort after all family, insurance, and other resources have been examined.

(7) An order for temporary investigative authority and protective services may not be issued for a period longer than 90 days following the show cause hearing and must be limited to one extension of 90 days. Before the expiration of the time provided for in an order for temporary investigative authority and protective services, the county attorney, the attorney general, or an attorney hired by the county shall file a petition for one of the following:

(a) limited emancipation;

(b) temporary legal custody;

(c) termination of the parent-child legal relationship and permanent legal custody with the right to consent to adoption; or

(d) dismissal.

(8) Notwithstanding the above time limits, the court may continue an order for temporary investigative authority pending a hearing on a petition provided for in subsection (7).

(9) If the time limitations of this section are not met, the court shall review the reasons for the failure and order an appropriate remedy that considers the best interests of the child"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

Chapter 311 throughout (1) substituted references to a child for references to a youth; in (1)(c) near middle substituted reference to Montana Rules of Evidence for reference to rules of civil procedure and deleted former next-to-last sentence that read: "Except as otherwise provided in this part, the rules of civil procedure apply"; in (6) at end inserted last sentence referring to concurrent planning; in (7) at end of first sentence deleted "and must be limited to one extension of 90 days"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2001. The amendment by Ch. 281 rendered the amendment by Ch. 311, other than the insertion of the sentence in (6) referring to concurrent planning, void.

The amendment to subsection (6) of this section made by sec. 9, Ch. 311, L. 2001, was rendered void by sec. 18(3), Ch. 281, L. 2001, a coordination section.

Section 19, Ch. 281, L. 2001, was a saving clause.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 566 near beginning of (1)(b) substituted "served pursuant to the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure" for "served by a peace officer or a representative of the department"; in (2) at beginning of first sentence inserted "At the conclusion of a show cause hearing", after "agency efforts to" deleted "rehabilitate the family to", and end inserted "or to make it possible to safely return the child to the child's home" and inserted last two sentences and (2)(a) through (2)(e) providing that child's health and safety are paramount concern in determining preservation and reunification services to be provided and establishing criteria for when reasonable efforts to provide preservation or reunification services are not required; inserted (3) establishing criteria for when preservation or reunification services are not required for putative father; inserted (4) requiring permanency hearing within 30 days of finding that preservation or reunification services are not necessary; inserted (5) requiring department to make reasonable efforts to permanently place child if court determines efforts to return child to home are inconsistent with permanency plan and allowing permanent placement efforts to be conducted concurrently with efforts to return child to home; in (6)(e) substituted "furnish information" for "furnish services"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

1997 Amendments: Chapter 501 in (1)(a), near middle, inserted "after consideration of the parents' statements, if any, included with the petition and any accompanying affidavit or report to the court". Amendment effective May 2, 1997.

Chapter 516 in (1)(c), in first sentence after "terms of the order", substituted "and" for "or" and at end substituted "for a show cause hearing" for "and show cause why the person has not complied with the order" and inserted fourth through sixth sentences regarding evidence at the show cause hearing and the court's ability to amend an order; inserted (1)(d) regarding case review by a local citizen review board; in (1)(e), near middle after "temporary", substituted "physical" for "legal"; inserted (2) requiring a finding regarding the reasonableness of agency efforts; in (3)(b) and (3)(c), after "having", inserted "physical or"; in (3)(e), after "having", inserted "physical or legal"; in (3)(f), at end, substituted "41-3-411" for "41-3-406(3) through (6)"; in (3)(g), near beginning of first sentence after "best", substituted "interests" for "interest"; inserted (4) limiting an order for temporary investigative authority; inserted (5) regarding continuance of an order for temporary investigative authority; and inserted (6) requiring the court to review reasons why time limits have not been met and order an appropriate remedy.

Applicability: Section 20, Ch. 516, L. 1997, provided that this section applies to proceedings commenced on or after October 1, 1997.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 458 in (1)(c), in last sentence, inserted final clause regarding contested case hearing resulting from adverse licensing action. Amendment effective April 14, 1995.

1993 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 112 at end of (1)(c) inserted "Hearsay evidence of statements made by the affected youth is admissible at the hearing"; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 362 throughout section, after "department", deleted "of family services"; in (2)(g), at end after "youth", inserted "that does not require an expenditure of money by the department unless the department is notified and a court hearing is set in a timely manner on the proposed expenditure. The department is the payor of last resort after all family, insurance, and other resources have been examined"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 16, 1993.

In the phrase "Except as otherwise provided herein", Ch. 112, near end of (1)(c) changed "herein" to "in this part" and Ch. 362 changed "herein" to "in this section". The codifier used "in this part" because it is the broader reference.

1991 Amendment: Inserted (2)(f) allowing a court to inquire into the financial ability of parent, guardian, or custodian to contribute to costs for care, custody, and treatment of a youth and to order contribution for those costs. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

1987 Amendment: Substituted "department of family services" for "department of social and rehabilitation services".

1985 Amendment: In (1)(b), near beginning after "order", inserted "along with the petition and supporting documents", and inserted second sentence requiring the Department to notify parents or guardians when youth is placed in medical facility or protective facility; and in (1)(c), in first sentence, near middle after "terms thereof or", deleted "upon failure to so comply", and inserted second and third sentences requiring a show cause hearing within 20 days of protection order and requiring the petitioner to present evidence establishing probable cause for the protective order.

Case Notes

Circumstances Related to Termination of Parental Rights to First Child Relevant to Ability to Care for Second Child: The District Court noted that a mother's parental rights to her first child, S.P., had been terminated and concluded that, because the circumstances related to the termination in S.P.'s case were still present and relevant to the mother's ability to care for her second child, C.P., the mother's parental rights to C.P. should be terminated as well. The mother appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Pursuant to 41-3-609(1)(d), the parent-child relationship may be terminated if the parent has subjected the child to any of the circumstances listed in subsection (2) of this section, including when a parent has had parental rights to the child's sibling or other child of the parent involuntarily terminated and the circumstances related to the termination of parental rights are relevant to the parent's ability to adequately care for the child at issue. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in holding that the circumstances related to the termination in S.P.'s case were still present and relevant to the mother's ability to care for C.P., that continuation of the parent-child relationship would likely result in substantial risk of harm to C.P., and that it was in C.P.'s best interests that parental rights be terminated. In re C.P., 2001 MT 187, 306 M 238, 32 P3d 754 (2001).

Parent Not Represented by Counsel During Show Cause Hearing Regarding Whether Child a Youth in Need of Care — Due Process Rights Not Violated: At the time of a show cause hearing on whether her child was a youth in need of care, the mother was an indigent mental patient civilly committed to the state hospital. She appeared at the hearing without representation of counsel. The mother contended that the District Court violated her due process rights by making that critical determination regarding the child when she was unrepresented. Although in In re A.S.A., J.L.A., G.A., & A.J.A., 258 M 194, 852 P2d 127 (1993), the Supreme Court held that the constitutional right to due process guarantees an indigent parent the right to court-appointed counsel in parental rights termination proceedings, the court has not extended the right to counsel to a pretermination proceeding in which the focal issue is whether a child is a youth in need of care. Rather, appointment of counsel at any time prior to the initiation of termination proceedings is within the discretion of the District Court. In this case, the initial determination that the child was a youth in need of care was made by order pursuant to a finding of probable cause even before the mother's first appearance in any proceedings when the District Court relied on a report submitted by a social worker showing that the child was abused or neglected or in danger of abuse or neglect and that removal from the home was necessary to protect the child's welfare. Subsequent to the initial determination, the District Court reached the same conclusion on at least three separate occasions when the mother was represented by counsel, including one hearing when the social worker was subjected to cross-examination by the mother's counsel. The Supreme Court applied In re M.F., 201 M 277, 653 P2d 1205 (1982), and in re D.S., H.S., R.S., R.S., J.S., R.S., & K.S., 253 M 484, 833 P2d 1090 (1992), and in holding that the state is not required to provide counsel at proceedings concerning temporary investigative authority (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) or temporary custody. Thus, the mother's due process rights were not violated when the District Court made the determination that the child was a youth in need of care at a time when the mother was not represented by counsel. In re A.M., 2001 MT 60, 304 M 379, 22 P3d 185 (2001).

Source of Children's PTSD Not Traceable to Father — No Abuse of Discretion by Court That Held Children Not Suffering From Abuse and Neglect Caused by Father — Temporary Investigative Authority (See 2001 Amendment to 41-3-427) and Temporary Legal Custody Properly Terminated: John, who pleaded guilty to negligent homicide in the death of his psychotic wife, Nancy, petitioned the District Court for the termination of temporary investigative authority (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) and temporary legal custody of the Department of Public Health and Human Services, and the petition was granted. The Supreme Court held that the Department's authority was properly terminated because the District Court could not and did not find that the posttraumatic stress disorder (PTSD) suffered by John's children was caused by their father's behavior. The expert testimony given at trial showed that the children's PTSD could have been caused by living with their psychotic mother and not by their father's killing of their mother and his subsequent attempt to cover up the murder. The Supreme Court held that the District Court properly found that the children were not abused or neglected by their father and that the District Court therefore did not abuse its discretion when it granted John's petition and terminated the Department's authority. In re Inquiry Into J.L. & D.L., 2000 MT 289, 302 M 254, 14 P3d 473, 57 St. Rep. 1219 (2000).

Limited Emancipation Decisions Not Subject to Appellate Mediation Requirements: Rule 54, M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21), provides that certain domestic relations cases are subject to appellate mediation, but those cases do not include limited emancipation decisions, which are more akin to severing parental rights than to delineating how, when, and under what circumstances parental rights may be exercised. Thus, limited emancipation actions are not subject to appellate mediation requirements. In re Emancipation of Dammarell, 2000 MT 46, 298 M 391, 3 P3d 597, 57 St. Rep. 230 (2000).

Denial of Request to Remove Guardian Ad Litem Not Error: At the hearing on the petition for TIA and protective services (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427), the mother requested removal of the guardian ad litem who had worked with the family for 2 years. The District Court declined, which was not error in light of the lack of evidence that the guardian had not performed the required statutory duties. In re B.P. & A.P., 2000 MT 39, 298 M 287, 995 P2d 982, 57 St. Rep. 179 (2000), affirmed in In re B.P. & A.P., 2001 MT 219, 306 M 430, 35 P3d 291 (2001).

Interlocutory Order Granting Temporary Investigative Authority and Protective Services Not Appealable: An order for temporary investigative authority and protective services (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) issued under 41-3-403 (renumbered 41-3-423) is not a "final judgement", a specified interlocutory order, or "an allowance for a widow or a child" and is not appealable under Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21). In re B.P. & A.P., 2000 MT 39, 298 M 287, 995 P2d 982, 57 St. Rep. 179 (2000).

Order for Psychiatric Evaluation in Child Abuse Case Not Violative of Privilege Against Self-Incrimination: The District Court hearing a child abuse and neglect case ordered the mother to submit to a psychiatric evaluation, participate in counseling, and follow through with the therapist's recommendations. The mother claimed that the order violated her privilege against self-incrimination under the fifth amendment to the U.S. Constitution. The Supreme Court found no suggestion of criminal liability attending the mother's participation in counseling and noted that a child abuse and neglect proceeding is not a criminal case. Further, 41-3-403 (renumbered 41-3-423) specifically authorizes medical and psychological evaluations of and counseling services for the parents in such cases. Thus, a constitutional violation was not established. In re B.P. & A.P., 2000 MT 39, 298 M 287, 995 P2d 982, 57 St. Rep. 179 (2000).

Petition Need Not Allege Abuse or Neglect — Facts Establishing Probable Cause Sufficient to Issue Order for Protective Services: A petition for temporary investigative authority (TIA) and protective services (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) must state the authority requested and facts establishing probable cause that the youth is abused or neglected or in danger of being so and must be accompanied by an affidavit or Department report stating in detail the facts on which the request is based. There is no statutory requirement that the petition contain an allegation of abuse or neglect or the evidence that the Department would present in support of its petition. The fact that the mother stipulated to a 90-day TIA, but not to protective services or the removal of the children from the home, believing that she would retain custody of the children during the 90-day period, did not preclude the District Court from ordering removal of the children from the home. The best interests of the child is paramount and takes precedence over parental rights in abuse and neglect proceedings. In re B.P. & A.P., 2000 MT 39, 298 M 287, 995 P2d 982, 57 St. Rep. 179 (2000).

Protective Removal of Children From Home Not Violative of Parent's Right of Religious Freedom — Best Interests of Children Prevail: The District Court hearing a child abuse and neglect case ordered the children removed from the home in their best interests. The mother contended that the order violated her constitutional right to religious freedom by removing her ability to participate in and control the children's religious upbringing because she couldn't see them pending her psychiatric evaluation. The Supreme Court found nothing in the record suggesting that the District Court was hostile to the mother's religious views or had based its order on those views. Rather, the order was based on evidence that the children were emotionally disturbed and threatened with harm, and the temporary restriction on the mother's access to the children was warranted. The mother remained free to pursue her religious beliefs, and the order did not infringe on that freedom. In re B.P. & A.P., 2000 MT 39, 298 M 287, 995 P2d 982, 57 St. Rep. 179 (2000), affirmed in In re B.P. & A.P., 2001 MT 219, 306 M 430, 35 P3d 291 (2001).

Dismissal of Petition for Temporary Investigative Authority (See 2001 Amendment to 41-3-427) Without Review of Guardianship Action — Harmless Error in Light of Requirements of Indian Child Welfare Act: In compliance with 41-3-403 (renumbered 41-3-423), the District Court ordered a show cause hearing at which to consider a petition for temporary investigative authority (TIA) (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) regarding two Indian children. At the hearing, the Deputy County Attorney offered an order and memorandum from a previously dismissed guardianship proceeding as evidence. The court did not admit the documentation as evidence, but took judicial notice of it. However, at the end of the hearing, the court dismissed the petition for TIA (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) without reviewing any records from the guardianship proceeding and ordered the Department of Public Health and Human Services to immediately place the children with their father. The mother contended that it was error to dismiss the petition without reviewing the guardianship file. In order for courts to grant TIA (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) petitions when Indian children are involved, the requirements of the Indian Child Welfare Act must be met. Under 25 U.S.C. 1912, active efforts must be made to provide remedial services and rehabilitation programs to prevent the breakup of the Indian family. In addition, any finding that continued custody of the child by the parent or Indian custodian is likely to result in serious emotional or physical damage to the child must be based on the testimony of qualified expert witnesses. Because these requirements were not met, the court could not have granted TIA (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) even if it had reviewed the guardianship file, so its failure to do so, if erroneous, was harmless. In re M.P.M. & A.R.M., 1999 MT 78, 294 M 87, 976 P2d 988, 56 St. Rep. 327 (1999).

Error in Placing Custody With One Parent Following Dismissal of Petition for Temporary Investigative Authority (See 2001 Amendment to 41-3-427): In compliance with 41-3-403 (renumbered 41-3-423), the District Court ordered a show cause hearing at which to consider a petition for temporary investigative authority (TIA) (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) regarding two Indian children. At the end of the hearing, the court dismissed the petition for TIA (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) and ordered the Department of Public Health and Human Services to immediately place the children with their father. The Department argued on appeal that the court exceeded its authority in ordering transfer of custody to the father after the petition for TIA (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) was dismissed. The Supreme Court held that when the District Court vacated the orders issued following filing of the petition for TIA (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427), it did not have authority to place custody with the father because nothing in the statutory framework or legislative intent authorizes the placement of a child with one parent, as opposed to the other, following dismissal of a petition for TIA (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427). The order transferring custody to the father was reversed. In re M.P.M. & A.R.M., 1999 MT 78, 294 M 87, 976 P2d 988, 56 St. Rep. 327 (1999).

Expiration of Temporary Custody Order — No Effect on Jurisdiction: At the time that the Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) filed a petition for temporary investigative authority (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427), the mother and her children were not living on the reservation. Subsequently, the mother moved back to the reservation and sought to have the action transferred to the tribal court. The mother argued that the District Court had lost jurisdiction over the matter when its order of temporary custody expired. The Supreme Court ruled that the child abuse and neglect statutes do not make provisions for the expiration of custody in the state or for the loss of jurisdiction by the court, other than by a finding by the court that the children are not in danger of being abused or neglected and by vacating any order made pursuant to 41-3-403 (renumbered 41-3-423). In re W.L., C.L., & B.L., 260 M 325, 859 P2d 1019, 50 St. Rep. 1081 (1993).

Continuing Court Jurisdiction Throughout Custody Hearings Proper: Father contended that, once granted, investigative authority and protective services granted to the Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) cannot be continued by further order of the District Court. However, 41-3-403 (renumbered 41-3-423) permits the court to grant relief as may be required in the best interest of the youth, including the power to make continuing arrangements for the youth's protection. In re H.D., 256 M 70, 844 P2d 114, 49 St. Rep. 1141 (1992).

Mother's Complicity in Murder of Father as Emotional Deprivation of Children: The mother argued that the lower court had improperly granted the state temporary investigative authority (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427). The Supreme Court ruled that the lower court had not abused its authority because the mother's role in the murder of the children's father could prompt a condition of emotional deprivation in the children. In re B.H.M., C.M.M., & J.T.H., 245 M 179, 799 P2d 1090, 47 St. Rep. 1967 (1990).

Show Cause Hearing Not Required: There is no requirement that a show cause hearing be held prior to removal of youths pursuant to 41-3-403 (renumbered 41-3-423). In re J.W. & J.C., 226 M 491, 736 P2d 960, 44 St. Rep. 843 (1987).

Mere Presence of Hearsay Evidence in Court File Not Reversible Error: The presence in the court file of statements not supported by testimony is not a violation of due process or error when: (1) the authors of the reports did testify and were subject to cross-examination; (2) no evidence was presented to rebut the presumption that any hearsay within the reports themselves was disregarded by the District Court; and (3) the court explicitly based its findings upon the testimony of the witnesses and upon the reports of only those who testified. (See 1993 amendment.) In re M.L.H., H.M.H., & R.H., 220 M 288, 715 P2d 32, 43 St. Rep. 375 (1986).

Order for Protection of Youth — Rules Suspended — Procedure on Appeal: A petition for temporary investigative authority and protective services (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) was filed by the prosecutor under 41-3-402 (renumbered 41-3-427). Temporary custody of K.H. was later awarded to county welfare department under 41-3-403 (renumbered 41-3-423). The District Court found probable cause for state intervention and ordered temporary investigative authority (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427), custody in the mother, and restrictions on the father's visitation. The parents appealed the order, an appealable order within Rule 1, M.R.App.Civ.P. (now M.R.App.P.), but not an adequate remedy because of the time involved. Relief should properly be pursued through a Writ of Certiorari, Habeas Corpus, or Supervisory Control. The Supreme Court treated the matter as a Writ of Certiorari and denied it on the grounds that the District Court proceedings were in substantial compliance with law and that the petitioners were not prejudiced thereby. In re K.H., 216 M 267, 701 P2d 720, 42 St. Rep. 796 (1985). However, see In re B.P. & A.P., 2000 MT 39, 298 M 287, 995 P2d 982, 57 St. Rep. 179 (2000), in which it was held that because an interlocutory order granting temporary investigative authority and protective services is not appealable under Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21).

Evidence of Sexual Abuse — Treatment Plan Ordered: Acting on evidence of sexual abuse and other problems within the family, the trial court properly found S.L.T. to be an abused and neglected child. The court granted temporary custody to the county welfare department and required that the child and her parents follow a treatment plan submitted by the welfare department. Section 41-3-404 (renumbered 41-3-437) gives the trial court authority to order any of the forms of relief listed in 41-3-403 (renumbered 41-3-423) once the court determines a child is abused or neglected. This includes the relief ordered in this case. In re S.L.T., 215 M 289, 697 P2d 472, 42 St. Rep. 366 (1985).

Case Notes

Failure to Adjudicate Child as Youth in Need of Care — Termination of Parental Rights Improper: A mother was arrested for a parole violation, and the state filed a petition to investigate whether her children were abused or neglected. The District Court granted the petition on a preliminary basis, and the children were placed in a foster home. The mother was released on bond but failed to appear for a show cause hearing. The state's petition was then granted, and the court found that it was in the children's best interests to be removed from the home. The mother was later arrested again, released the following day, and left for Florida, leaving the children behind. She was arrested in Florida about 3 months later, and while incarcerated there, Montana filed for approval of a treatment plan. The treatment plan was faxed to the mother, but she refused to sign it. The plan was approved without her signature. A district citizen review board then recommended that the mother's parental rights be terminated based on the mother's criminal history, the social history of the case, and the children's need for permanence. The District Court terminated the mother's parental rights for failing to comply with the treatment plan, and the mother appealed. The Supreme Court held that termination of parental rights was in error because the children had never been adjudicated as youths in need of care through an adjudicatory hearing, as required by this section. A stipulation by the mother to let the court give temporary custody of the children to the state did not constitute a stipulation or an adjudication that the children were youths in need of care. In re T.C. & W.C., 2001 MT 264, 307 M 244, 37 P3d 70 (2001).

Substantial Risk of Harm to Child — Parental Rights Terminated Despite Lack of Evidence of Abuse or Neglect: A girl was born to a mother who was later divorced and remarried. When the girl was 15, she had sexual intercourse with her stepfather and conceived a baby. The state petitioned for temporary investigative authority (TIA) and emergency protective services (see 2001 amendment—now "immediate protection and emergency protective services") over both the girl and her baby, pursuant to 41-3-402 (renumbered 41-3-427). The mother then agreed to divorce the stepfather so that he could marry the girl. The petition regarding the girl was dismissed because she was married and was no longer subject to the mother's parental control. At the show cause hearing on the petition regarding protection of the baby, a state social worker testified that, although there was no indication of actual abuse or neglect of the baby, there was concern for the baby's safety should the baby be placed in the home with the girl and stepfather. The state ultimately petitioned to terminate the girl's parental rights to the baby. The District Court determined that the baby was a youth in need of care and terminated the girl's parental rights. The girl appealed on grounds that the court's determination that the baby was a youth in need of care was erroneous, absent any evidence of abuse, neglect, or abandonment, and that the petition for TIA was insufficient on its face because it contained no allegations that the baby was abused or neglected. However, the definition of abuse or neglect in 41-3-102 includes either actual harm or the substantial risk of harm. Thus, the report required by this section need set forth in detail only facts supporting the petition's request for TIA based on the assertion that a child is abused or neglected or is in danger of being abused or neglected. The social worker's testimony was considered sufficient to support a finding that there was substantial risk of harm to the baby if returned to the girl's custody; therefore, the District Court's determination that the baby was a youth in need of care was correct. The court's finding that under the circumstances, the baby had little hope of a normal emotional, moral, and psychological development with his parents was also supported by substantial evidence and was not clearly erroneous, based on the social worker's testimony that the girl's relationship with the stepfather was unhealthy, that the family unit exhibited extremely poor boundaries, and that the girl had obvious psychological damage from being sexually abused by her father and would, without successful treatment, be unable to set appropriate boundaries for the baby or be able to understand the risk of harm that her relationship with the stepfather posed to the baby. The Supreme Court affirmed. In re D.T.H., 2001 MT 138, 305 M 502, 29 P3d 1003 (2001).

Stipulation Not Considered Sufficient Adjudication of Youth in Need of Care — Lack of Jurisdictional Prerequisite to Terminate Parental Rights: The mother entered into a stipulation with the state that her children were youths in need of care only upon several conditions: (1) her parental rights would remain intact; (2) the children would reside with their grandmother; (3) the Casey Family Program would manage the children's cases; (4) the mother would always have contact with the children even if the program was required to intervene between the mother and grandmother; and (5) at an appropriate time when the mother was ready, the program, the Department, and the mother would devise a treatment plan that would be completed by the mother in order to regain custody of the children. At a subsequent hearing, the Department proposed a permanency plan that involved removing the children from their grandmother. The mother contended that the proposal amounted to a failure to abide by the conditions of the stipulation, thereby voiding the conditional stipulation that the children were youths in need of care and precluding the District Court's authority to terminate her parental rights. The Supreme Court agreed. Although a stipulation may be an acceptable alternative to an adjudicatory hearing in many circumstances, the fundamental nature of the rights of a parent requires that the process by which a stipulation is drafted and signed needs to be closely scrutinized. In this case, the stipulation was drafted by the County Attorney and signed by the mother without the benefit of legal counsel and essentially allowed the court to determine that the youths were in need of care without a finding that they were abused or neglected and without a hearing as required by 41-3-402 (renumbered 41-3-427). The mother had conflicting feelings about the removal of the children from their grandmother's care and relied on her understanding from the stipulation that the Department would not remove the children or terminate her parental rights, so she did not complete her treatment plan. Only a few days after the initial hearing, she promptly began work toward completion of the treatment plan and had made significant progress, particularly considering the unexpected death of her mother, by the time of the next hearing. Despite the change in circumstances resulting from the death, the Department did not grant the mother any additional time to complete the treatment plan, nor did the Department offer any evidence that the mother had abused or neglected the children. Under the unique facts of this case, the Supreme Court held that the District Court incorrectly found that the stipulation sufficed as an adjudication that the children were youths in need of care. Without that adjudication, the District Court lacked the jurisdictional prerequisite to terminate the mother's parental rights, so the Supreme Court reversed. In Re Custody and Parental Rights of M.W. & C.S., 2001 MT 78, 305 M 80, 23 P3d 206 (2001).

Source of Children's PTSD Not Traceable to Father — No Abuse of Discretion by Court That Held Children Not Suffering From Abuse and Neglect Caused by Father — Temporary Investigative Authority (Now "Immediate Protection and Emergency Protective Services") and Temporary Legal Custody Properly Terminated: John, who pleaded guilty to negligent homicide in the death of his psychotic wife, Nancy, petitioned the District Court for the termination of temporary investigative authority (see 2001 amendment—now "immediate protection and emergency protective services") and temporary legal custody of the Department of Public Health and Human Services, and the petition was granted. The Supreme Court held that the Department's authority was properly terminated because the District Court could not and did not find that the posttraumatic stress disorder (PTSD) suffered by John's children was caused by their father's behavior. The expert testimony given at trial showed that the children's PTSD could have been caused by living with their psychotic mother and not by their father's killing of their mother and his subsequent attempt to cover up the murder. The Supreme Court held that the District Court properly found that the children were not abused or neglected by their father and that the District Court therefore did not abuse its discretion when it granted John's petition and terminated the Department's authority. In re Inquiry Into J.L. & D.L., 2000 MT 289, 302 M 254, 14 P3d 473, 57 St. Rep. 1219 (2000).

Petition Need Not Allege Abuse or Neglect — Facts Establishing Probable Cause Sufficient to Issue Order for Protective Services: A petition for temporary investigative authority (TIA) and protective services (see 2001 amendment—now "immediate protection and emergency protective services") must state the authority requested and facts establishing probable cause that the youth is abused or neglected or in danger of being so and must be accompanied by an affidavit or Department report stating in detail the facts on which the request is based. There is no statutory requirement that the petition contain an allegation of abuse or neglect or the evidence that the Department would present in support of its petition. The fact that the mother stipulated to a 90-day TIA, but not to protective services or the removal of the children from the home, believing that she would retain custody of the children during the 90-day period, did not preclude the District Court from ordering removal of the children from the home. The best interests of the child is paramount and takes precedence over parental rights in abuse and neglect proceedings. In re B.P. & A.P., 2000 MT 39, 298 M 287, 995 P2d 982, 57 St. Rep. 179 (2000).

Appeal From Extension of Temporary Investigative Authority (Now "Immediate Protection and Emergency Protective Services") Held Moot — Permanent Custody Transferred to Father: When A.E.'s mother, Teresa, filed a pro se appeal from the District Court's extension of temporary custody and temporary investigative authority (see 2001 amendment—now "immediate protection and emergency protective services") of the Department of Public Health and Human Services (Department), Teresa's ex-husband, who was the natural father of A.E., sought and received an amendment to the previous dissolution decree by which his marriage to Teresa was dissolved. The amendment transferred permanent custody of A.E. from Teresa to A.E.'s father. Upon the transfer of custody, the Department sought and received dismissal of its petition for extension of temporary custody and to vacate the District Court's order awarding it temporary legal custody for the purposes of the investigation. On appeal of the award of the extension of temporary investigative authority (see 2001 amendment—"now immediate protection and emergency protective services"), the Supreme Court held that the appeal had been rendered moot because the Department no longer had temporary custody of A.E. and because the Department no longer possessed the authority to investigate. For this reason, the Supreme Court dismissed the appeal. In re A.E., 1998 MT 159, 289 M 340, 961 P2d 1265, 55 St. Rep. 638 (1998).

Evidence Sufficient to Warrant Grant of Temporary Investigative Authority (Now "Immediate Protection and Emergency Protective Services"): Evidence of the mother's previous history of psychiatric problems, fires in the family home, one child's extensive absences from school, and the inability of social workers to investigate these problems due to mother's noncooperation constituted sufficient facts to warrant granting of temporary investigative authority (see 2001 amendment—now "immediate protection and emergency protective services"). In re J.W. & J.C., 226 M 491, 736 P2d 960, 44 St. Rep. 843 (1987).

Only Show Cause Hearing Required Upon Filing Petition for Temporary Investigative Authority (Now "Immediate Protection and Emergency Protective Services"): A mother contended that an order granting temporary custody to the state and allowing temporary investigative authority (see 2001 amendment—now "immediate protection and emergency protective services") under 41-3-402 (renumbered 41-3-427) should be vacated for lack of an adjudicatory hearing pursuant to 41-3-404 (renumbered 41-3-437) and a dispositional hearing pursuant to 41-3-406 (renumbered 41-3-438). In denying the motion to vacate, the District Court properly held that a show cause hearing is the only hearing required when a petition for temporary investigative authority (see 2001 amendment—now "immediate protection and emergency protective services") is filed. In re J.W. & J.C., 226 M 491, 736 P2d 960, 44 St. Rep. 843 (1987).

Exclusion of Evidence on Child Abuse Proceeding Concerning Father — Harmless Error: It was harmless error, in a child custody modification proceeding, for a District Court judge to exclude evidence that a petition for temporary investigative authority (see 2001 amendment—now "immediate protection and emergency protective services"), alleging sexual abuse by the father, had been filed under Title 41, ch. 3, and dismissed for lack of evidence after being heard by the same judge who made the custody modification determination. In re Marriage of Stout, 216 M 342, 701 P2d 729, 42 St. Rep. 856 (1985).

Order for Protection of Youth — Rules Suspended — Procedure on Appeal: A petition for temporary investigative authority and protective services (see 2001 amendment—now "immediate protection and emergency protective services") was filed by the prosecutor under 41-3-402 (renumbered 41-3-427). Temporary custody of K.H. was later awarded to county welfare department under 41-3-403 (renumbered 41-3-423). The District Court found probable cause for state intervention and ordered temporary investigative authority (see 2001 amendment—now "immediate protection and emergency protective services"), custody in the mother, and restrictions on the father's visitation. The parents appealed the order, an appealable order within Rule 1, M.R.App.Civ.P. (now M.R.App.P.), but not an adequate remedy because of the time involved. Relief should properly be pursued through a Writ of Certiorari, Habeas Corpus, or Supervisory Control. The Supreme Court treated the matter as a Writ of Certiorari and denied it on the grounds that the District Court proceedings were in substantial compliance with law and that the petitioners were not prejudiced thereby. In re K.H., 216 M 267, 701 P2d 720, 42 St. Rep. 796 (1985). However, see In re B.P. & A.P., 2000 MT 39, 298 M 287, 995 P2d 982, 57 St. Rep. 179 (2000), in which it was held that because an interlocutory order granting temporary investigative authority and protective services (see 2001 amendment—now "immediate protection and emergency protective services") is not appealable under Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (Title 25, ch. 21).

Prehearing Report — Petition for Permanent Custody: The Supreme Court avoided deciding whether or not it is proper for a County Attorney to file a prehearing report in support of a petition under 41-3-401 (renumbered 41-3-422) for permanent custody since the only report in the record was filed in support of a temporary investigative authority and protective services (see 2001 amendment—now "immediate protection and emergency protective services") petition under 41-3-402(3) (renumbered 41-3-427(3)). Case Notes

Failure to Adjudicate Child as Youth in Need of Care — Termination of Parental Rights Improper: A mother was arrested for a parole violation, and the state filed a petition to investigate whether her children were abused or neglected. The District Court granted the petition on a preliminary basis, and the children were placed in a foster home. The mother was released on bond but failed to appear for a show cause hearing. The state's petition was then granted, and the court found that it was in the children's best interests to be removed from the home. The mother was later arrested again, released the following day, and left for Florida, leaving the children behind. She was arrested in Florida about 3 months later, and while incarcerated there, Montana filed for approval of a treatment plan. The treatment plan was faxed to the mother, but she refused to sign it. The plan was approved without her signature. A district citizen review board then recommended that the mother's parental rights be terminated based on the mother's criminal history, the social history of the case, and the children's need for permanence. The District Court terminated the mother's parental rights for failing to comply with the treatment plan, and the mother appealed. The Supreme Court held that termination of parental rights was in error because the children had never been adjudicated as youths in need of care through an adjudicatory hearing, as required by this section. A stipulation by the mother to let the court give temporary custody of the children to the state did not constitute a stipulation or an adjudication that the children were youths in need of care. In re T.C. & W.C., 2001 MT 264, 307 M 244, 37 P3d 70 (2001).

Stipulation Not Considered Sufficient Adjudication of Youth in Need of Care — Lack of Jurisdictional Prerequisite to Terminate Parental Rights: The mother entered into a stipulation with the state that her children were youths in need of care only upon several conditions: (1) her parental rights would remain intact; (2) the children would reside with their grandmother; (3) the Casey Family Program would manage the children's cases; (4) the mother would always have contact with the children even if the program was required to intervene between the mother and grandmother; and (5) at an appropriate time when the mother was ready, the program, the Department, and the mother would devise a treatment plan that would be completed by the mother in order to regain custody of the children. At a subsequent hearing, the Department proposed a permanency plan that involved removing the children from their grandmother. The mother contended that the proposal amounted to a failure to abide by the conditions of the stipulation, thereby voiding the conditional stipulation that the children were youths in need of care and precluding the District Court's authority to terminate her parental rights. The Supreme Court agreed. Although a stipulation may be an acceptable alternative to an adjudicatory hearing in many circumstances, the fundamental nature of the rights of a parent requires that the process by which a stipulation is drafted and signed needs to be closely scrutinized. In this case, the stipulation was drafted by the County Attorney and signed by the mother without the benefit of legal counsel and essentially allowed the court to determine that the youths were in need of care without a finding that they were abused or neglected and without a hearing as required by 41-3-402 (renumbered 41-3-427). The mother had conflicting feelings about the removal of the children from their grandmother's care and relied on her understanding from the stipulation that the Department would not remove the children or terminate her parental rights, so she did not complete her treatment plan. Only a few days after the initial hearing, she promptly began work toward completion of the treatment plan and had made significant progress, particularly considering the unexpected death of her mother, by the time of the next hearing. Despite the change in circumstances resulting from the death, the Department did not grant the mother any additional time to complete the treatment plan, nor did the Department offer any evidence that the mother had abused or neglected the children. Under the unique facts of this case, the Supreme Court held that the District Court incorrectly found that the stipulation sufficed as an adjudication that the children were youths in need of care. Without that adjudication, the District Court lacked the jurisdictional prerequisite to terminate the mother's parental rights, so the Supreme Court reversed. In Re Custody and Parental Rights of M.W. & C.S., 2001 MT 78, 305 M 80, 23 P3d 206 (2001).

Finding That Child Is Youth in Need of Care Prerequisite to Transfer of Custody: The exigent protection of the health and welfare of a child is paramount when the state's initial intervention into otherwise private family matters reveals an actual or potentially dangerous or unhealthy environment requiring the removal of the child from a custodial caregiver. The legal determination that a child is a youth in need of care is a jurisdictional prerequisite for a court-ordered transfer of custody. The first question in a termination proceeding is whether the District Court correctly adjudicated the child as a youth in need of care, and the state need only offer clear and convincing evidence that the court properly adjudicated the child as a youth in need of care in order for the court to inquire into the actual fitness of the parent. In re A.M., 2001 MT 60, 304 M 379, 22 P3d 185 (2001).

Lack of District Court Jurisdiction to Place Children Found Not to Be Abused or Neglected Remedied by Stipulation for Placement of Children: After the temporary investigative authority (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) and temporary legal custody of the Department of Public Health and Human Services were terminated by the District Court, the District Court retained jurisdiction over the placement of the children in question pursuant to a stipulation placing those children with the parents of a father who pleaded guilty to negligent homicide. The Department argued, citing In re M.P.M. & A.R.M., 1999 MT 78, 294 M 87, 976 P2d 988 (1999), that once the District Court found that the children were not abused or neglected, it lost jurisdiction over the case and therefore could not retain jurisdiction. The Supreme Court held that the District Court properly retained jurisdiction because retention of jurisdiction was based upon a stipulation granting custody of the children to the father's parents and the stipulation provided for the retention of jurisdiction by the District Court. In re Inquiry Into J.L. & D.L., 2000 MT 289, 302 M 254, 14 P3d 473, 57 St. Rep. 1219 (2000).

Dismissal of Petition for Temporary Investigative Authority (See 2001 Amendment to 41-3-427) Without Review of Guardianship Action — Harmless Error in Light of Requirements of Indian Child Welfare Act: In compliance with 41-3-403 (renumbered 41-3-423), the District Court ordered a show cause hearing at which to consider a petition for temporary investigative authority (TIA) (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427—now "immediate protection and emergency protective services") regarding two Indian children. At the hearing, the Deputy County Attorney offered an order and memorandum from a previously dismissed guardianship proceeding as evidence. The court did not admit the documentation as evidence, but took judicial notice of it. However, at the end of the hearing, the court dismissed the petition for TIA (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427—now "immediate protection and emergency protective services") without reviewing any records from the guardianship proceeding and ordered the Department of Public Health and Human Services to immediately place the children with their father. The mother contended that it was error to dismiss the petition without reviewing the guardianship file. In order for courts to grant TIA (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427—now "immediate protection and emergency protective services") petitions when Indian children are involved, the requirements of the Indian Child Welfare Act must be met. Under 25 U.S.C. 1912, active efforts must be made to provide remedial services and rehabilitation programs to prevent the breakup of the Indian family. In addition, any finding that continued custody of the child by the parent or Indian custodian is likely to result in serious emotional or physical damage to the child must be based on the testimony of qualified expert witnesses. Because these requirements were not met, the court could not have granted TIA (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427—now "immediate protection and emergency protective services") even if it had reviewed the guardianship file, so its failure to do so, if erroneous, was harmless. In re M.P.M. & A.R.M., 1999 MT 78, 294 M 87, 976 P2d 988, 56 St. Rep. 327 (1999).

Error in Placing Custody With One Parent Following Dismissal of Petition for Temporary Investigative Authority (See 2001 Amendment to 41-3-427): In compliance with 41-3-403 (renumbered 41-3-423), the District Court ordered a show cause hearing at which to consider a petition for temporary investigative authority (TIA) (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427—now "immediate protection and emergency protective services") regarding two Indian children. At the end of the hearing, the court dismissed the petition for TIA (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427—now "immediate protection and emergency protective services") and ordered the Department of Public Health and Human Services to immediately place the children with their father. The Department argued on appeal that the court exceeded its authority in ordering transfer of custody to the father after the petition for TIA (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427—now "immediate protection and emergency protective services") was dismissed. The Supreme Court held that when the District Court vacated the orders issued following filing of the petition for TIA (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427—now "immediate protection and emergency protective services"), it did not have authority to place custody with the father because nothing in the statutory framework or legislative intent authorizes the placement of a child with one parent, as opposed to the other, following dismissal of a petition for TIA (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427—now "immediate protection and emergency protective services"). The order transferring custody to the father was reversed. In re M.P.M. & A.R.M., 1999 MT 78, 294 M 87, 976 P2d 988, 56 St. Rep. 327 (1999), distinguished in In re Inquiry Into J.L. & D.L., 2000 MT 289, 302 M 254, 14 P3d 473, 57 St. Rep. 1219 (2000).

Stipulation That Child Is Youth in Need of Care — Court Discretion to Determine Custody: Under 41-3-404 (renumbered 41-3-437) and 41-3-406 (renumbered 41-3-438), a parent's stipulation that a child is a youth in need of care empowers a District Court, in its discretion, to transfer legal custody of the child from the parent to the Department of Public Health and Human Services pursuant to In re C.M., 281 M 183, 932 P2d 1063 (1997). In re J.H., R.H., D.H., & R.H., 1998 MT 128, 289 M 111, 958 P2d 1191, 55 St. Rep. 504 (1998).

Court Not to Take Judicial Notice of Hearing at Which Parties Not Represented by Counsel: The Streckerts were not present or represented at a hearing by the lower court determining temporary custody of their children. Subsequently, during a hearing terminating parental rights, the District Court took judicial notice of the testimony presented during the temporary custody hearing. The Supreme Court held that the lower court should not have taken judicial notice of evidence presented in the first hearing but refused to reverse the decision on the basis that there was substantial other evidence to support the lower court's ruling. In re D.S., H.S., R.S., R.S., J.S., R.S., & K.S., 253 M 484, 833 P2d 1090, 49 St. Rep. 552 (1992).

Hearsay Testimony as Only Evidence of Abuse or Neglect — Dismissal Proper: When the bulk of testimony elicited from a social worker and guardian ad litem at a show cause hearing on abuse and neglect was hearsay and when even the state conceded that no evidence was offered to establish probable cause that the children were abused or neglected, consideration of the testimony by the District Court constituted reversible error. The petition was dismissed without prejudice, and the children were returned to their parents pending further proceedings. In re B.S. & J.S., 252 M 435, 829 P2d 939, 49 St. Rep. 338 (1992).

Adjudicatory and Dispositional Hearing Combined — Notice Not Required: Parental rights may be terminated at a dispositional hearing under 41-3-406 (renumbered 41-3-438) and 41-3-607. The dispositional hearing was combined with an adjudicatory hearing under 41-3-404 (renumbered 41-3-437), and no specific notice of the combination was required. Custody of R.A.D., 44 St. Rep. 2018 (1987). Opinion withdrawn but issue affirmed in Custody of R.A.D. & J.D., 231 M 143, 753 P2d 862, 45 St. Rep. 496 (1988).

Only Show Cause Hearing Required Upon Filing Petition for Temporary Investigative Authority (See 2001 Amendment to 41-3-427): A mother contended that an order granting temporary custody to the state and allowing temporary investigative authority (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427—now "immediate protection and emergency protective services") under 41-3-404 (renumbered 41-3-437) should be vacated for lack of an adjudicatory hearing pursuant to 41-3-404 (renumbered 41-3-437) and a dispositional hearing pursuant to 41-3-406 (renumbered 41-3-438). In denying the motion to vacate, the District Court properly held that a show cause hearing is the only hearing required when a petition for temporary investigative authority (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427—now "immediate protection and emergency protective services") is filed. In re J.W. & J.C., 226 M 491, 736 P2d 960, 44 St. Rep. 843 (1987).

In-Chambers Interview — Record Required: A District Court may conduct an in-chambers interview of children in an abuse, neglect, and dependency (see 1995 amendment) proceeding. A record must be made of any interview conducted. In re M.L.H., H.M.H., & R.H., 220 M 288, 715 P2d 32, 43 St. Rep. 375 (1986).

Mere Presence of Hearsay Evidence in Court File Not Reversible Error: The presence in the court file of statements not supported by testimony is not a violation of due process or error when: (1) the authors of the reports did testify and were subject to cross-examination; (2) no evidence was presented to rebut the presumption that any hearsay within the reports themselves was disregarded by the District Court; and (3) the court explicitly based its findings upon the testimony of the witnesses and upon the reports of only those who testified. In re M.L.H., H.M.H., & R.H., 220 M 288, 715 P2d 32, 43 St. Rep. 375 (1986).

Evidence of Sexual Abuse — Treatment Plan Ordered: Acting on evidence of sexual abuse and other problems within the family, the trial court properly found S.L.T. to be an abused and neglected child. The court granted temporary custody to the county welfare department and required that the child and her parents follow a treatment plan submitted by the welfare department. Section 41-3-404 (renumbered 41-3-437) gives the trial court authority to order any of the forms of relief listed in 41-3-403 (renumbered 41-3-423) once the court determines a child is abused or neglected. This includes the relief ordered in this case. In re S.L.T., 215 M 289, 697 P2d 472, 42 St. Rep. 366 (1985).

Family Unity Not to Be Preserved at Expense of Children's Best Interests: After an adjudicatory hearing, the District Court terminated the parental rights of the parents of five children and granted custody with authority to consent to adoption to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services). Under Department placement, the children would be separated from each other. The paternal grandmother appealed to the Supreme Court, claiming that the state policy of preserving the unity and welfare of the family as set forth in 41-3-101 was violated by the separation of the children and by the District Court's refusal to award the children to her. The Supreme Court affirmed because the District Court's findings indicated that it had considered the grandmother's request but that the overriding concern was and ought to have been the best interests of the children. In re M.N., 199 M 407, 649 P2d 749, 39 St. Rep. 1487 (1982).

Competency in Criminal Matter Not Determinative in Civil Matter: The Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) filed a petition in District Court alleging that J. H. was a youth in need of care. The boy, his mother, and a social worker all testified that the father sexually abused the boy. The youth was found to be an abused and neglected child. The father claimed that since he was declared unfit to proceed in a collateral criminal action he was also unfit to proceed in the civil action. The Supreme Court found nothing in the record to indicate the father was declared unfit to proceed in anything except the criminal action. He had the burden of proving his incompetence. With no affirmative showing of incompetence to proceed in the civil action, the court presumed the father competent. In re J.H., 196 M 482, 640 P2d 445, 39 St. Rep. 267 (1982).

Dispositional Hearing Required: The Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) filed a petition in District Court alleging that J. H. was a youth in need of care. The boy, his mother, and a social worker all testified that the father sexually abused the boy. The court found the boy abused and neglected but failed to hold a dispositional hearing. The Supreme Court found that dispositional hearings are required but that because a separate dispositional hearing had been held in a juvenile matter and the boy was placed at the Yellowstone Boys Ranch, the failure was harmless error in this case. In re J.H., 196 M 482, 640 P2d 445, 39 St. Rep. 267 (1982).

Youth in Need of Care Proceeding — Spouse May Testify — Section Constitutional: The Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) filed a petition in District Court alleging that J. H. was a youth in need of care. The boy, his mother, and a social worker all testified that the father sexually abused the boy. The father contended that the wife's testimony was a violation of the spousal privilege. The Supreme Court held the wife could testify. The purpose of the spousal privilege is to protect the sanctity of the marriage and home. However, once a family member has been sexually abused, the sanctity of the home and the reason for the rule have been destroyed. Sexual abuse of the son by the father is also a special wrong to the wife and has particularly and directly affected her in a manner other than that suffered by the public in general. Thus, the wrong against the child is nothing more or less than a wrong against the other spouse. As such it falls into one of the exceptions to the spousal privilege. The father claimed that it was unclear whether 41-3-404 (renumbered 41-3-437) allows parents to testify in youth in need of care proceedings and therefore 41-3-404 (renumbered 41-3-437) was unconstitutionally vague. The court, having found that the wife could testify against the husband, determined that the statute was not void due to vagueness. In re J.H., 196 M 482, 640 P2d 445, 39 St. Rep. 267 (1982).

Indian Child Welfare Act — Effective Date: A proceeding for termination of parental rights initiated in state court prior to May 7, 1979, the effective date of the Indian Child Welfare Act of 1978 (25 U.S.C. §1901, et seq.) continues as a state proceeding, not subject to the transfer provisions to tribal court under the Act, even though, due to a bifurcation of hearings involving several fathers, one of these hearings was held after the effective date of the Act. In re T.J.D., J.L.D. & R.J.W., 189 M 147, 615 P2d 212 (1980).

One Proceeding With Two Hearings — Failure to Object Again — Waiver of Error: In a child abuse and neglect proceeding to terminate parental rights when the father of the youngest child was to have his rights determined a month after a hearing involving the termination of both parents' rights to the two elder children, the father of the youngest child waived his right to complain of error on appeal because he failed to object to questions by the judge at the second hearing involving a prior felony conviction, even though objection was made and overruled in the first hearing. In re T.J.D., J.L.D. & R.J.W., 189 M 147, 615 P2d 212 (1980).

Abuse or Neglect — Sufficiency of Evidence: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in declaring a child abused or neglected where the child's only known parent had been confined to a state hospital for 6 years, had suffered from organic brain dysfunction since birth, experienced delusions, and her condition had been diagnosed as paranoid schizophrenia with no hope of significant improvement in the foreseeable future. In re C.M.S., A Dependent and Neglected Child, 187 M 115, 609 P2d 240 (1979). See also In re C.L.A. & J.A., 211 M 393, 685 P2d 931, 41 St. Rep. 1444 (1984).

Dependency — Sufficiency of Evidence: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in finding a child dependent (see 1995 amendment) where the child's only known natural parent, possessed with a $40,000 estate, had not contributed to the child's support in any substantial way, and because of her mental condition could not provide the proper guidance for the child's necessary physical, moral, and emotional well-being. In re C.M.S., A Dependent and Neglected Child, 187 M 115, 609 P2d 240 (1979).

Protection of Family Unit: Although it is the function of the District Court to protect the unity of the family, family unity was not a factor when the child's only known natural parent had been confined to a state hospital and the child had been placed in a foster home since birth. The child had never had a viable parent-child relationship with her mother and had never seen or been associated with her natural mother. In re C.M.S., A Dependent and Neglected Child, 187 M 115, 609 P2d 240 (1979).

Scope of Review: The findings of the District Court in an abuse or neglect action enjoy a presumption of correctness and will not be overturned unless unsupported by credible evidence that would amount to a clear abuse of discretion. In re C.M.S., A Dependent and Neglected Child, 187 M 115, 609 P2d 240 (1979), following In re G., Youth in Need of Care, 174 M 321, 570 P2d 1110 (1977).

Termination of Parental Rights: When the following things were considered, the record supported the conclusions that the father's rights were adequately considered prior to termination of parental rights and that the decision to terminate them was supported by credible evidence: (1) the father was notified of the hearing, was present, and was represented by counsel; (2) professional testimony indicated the father would not be able to provide enough influence to offset the marked deprivation anticipated to continue for the child; (3) the father was found to have made no effort to assist the mother in learning to become a good parent; (4) the father had visited the child only once in 6 months when the child was in a foster home and had been reported to have abused the child. In re L.F.G., 183 M 239, 598 P2d 1125 (1979).

Youth in Need — Best Interests of Child — Mental Condition of Parent as Sole Factor: When the District Court considered the best interests of a child after first determining that the child was in fact abused or neglected, it met the required standard. Considering the mental condition of the mother as the primary if not the sole factor, but having evidence that the child would not receive even minimally satisfactory maternal care and would be exposed to extremely high chances of developing a mental condition similar to that of the mother, sufficient credible evidence was before the District Court to support the District Court's decision that the child was a youth in need of care. The Supreme Court rejected the view that mental condition of a parent could not be the sole factor supporting a severance of parental rights. In re L.F.G., 183 M 239, 598 P2d 1125 (1979).

Individual Parental Rights: In addition to their rights as a couple, parents have individual rights with respect to their children, which rights must be given adequate consideration in abuse, neglect, or dependency proceedings. In re Declaring T.E.R. Youth in Need of Care, 180 M 340, 590 P2d 1117 (1979), followed in In re J.B., 278 M 160, 923 P2d 1096, 53 St. Rep. 901 (1996).

(i) permanent legal custody with the right of adoption; or

(ii) appointment of a guardian pursuant to 41-3-607;

Chapter 311 in (3), (3)(a), (3)(b), and (3)(c) substituted references to child for references to youth; in (3)(d) at end of first sentence substituted "consents and informs the court that resources are available for payment" for "is notified and a court hearing is set in a timely manner on the proposed expenditure"; in (3)(e) substituted "consents and informs the court that resources are available for the proposed care and treatment" for "is notified and a court hearing is set in a timely manner on the proposed expenditure"; and in (6) near beginning substituted "permanency plan hearing" for "permanency hearing". Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

The amendment to former subsection (7) of this section made by sec. 9, Ch. 311, L. 2001, was rendered void by sec. 18(3), Ch. 281, L. 2001, a coordination section.

Applicability: Section 8, Ch. 194, L. 2001, provided: "[This act] applies to proceedings on petitions filed pursuant to 41-3-401 [now 41-3-422] after October 1, 2001."

1999 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 428 in (5)(b)(ii) at beginning inserted "appointment of a guardian"; inserted (5)(d) relating to appointment of a guardian pursuant to 41-3-421; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

Chapter 566 in (2)(a) at beginning substituted "dismissing the petition" for "returning the child to the child's parent or guardian" and substituted "psychological well-being" for "emotional well-being"; in (2)(b) at beginning inserted "unless there is a finding that reasonable efforts are not required pursuant to 41-3-403" and at end inserted "or to make it possible for the child to safely return home"; deleted former (3) that read: "(3) In making a finding regarding the risk of harm to the child or regarding detriment to the child, failure of the child's parent or guardian to participate in, to comply with, in whole or in part, or to meet the goals of a court-ordered treatment plan constitutes prima facie evidence that return of the child to the parent or guardian would be detrimental to the child's physical or emotional well-being"; inserted (3) requiring department to make reasonable efforts to permanently place child if court determines efforts to return child to home are inconsistent with permanency plan; inserted (4) requiring permanency hearing to be conducted within 30 days after determination that reasonable efforts to return child to home are not necessary and requiring finalization of placement; in (5)(a) after "custody" inserted "not to exceed a total of 6 months"; inserted (5)(c) authorizing petition for long-term custody; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 516 in (1)(a), after "youth's", substituted "parent" for "parents"; in (1)(c), after "transfer", inserted "temporary"; in (1)(c)(ii), at beginning after "a", inserted "licensed"; in (1)(c)(iii), near beginning after "who", substituted "is recommended" for "after study"; in (1)(e), near middle of first sentence after "best", substituted "interests of the child" for "interest of the youth" and at end of second sentence inserted "pursuant to 41-3-411"; inserted (2) regarding required court findings; inserted (3) establishing that failure by a parent or guardian to comply with a treatment plan constitutes prima facie evidence that return of the child to the parent or guardian would be detrimental; inserted (4) limiting the time of a temporary legal custody extension; inserted (5) allowing continuance of an order for temporary legal custody; inserted (6) concerning reasons for extending temporary legal custody; inserted (7) requiring the court to review reasons why time limits have not been met and to order an appropriate remedy; deleted former (2) through (6) that read: "(2) If the youth is transferred to the custody of the department, the court shall examine the financial ability of the youth's parents or guardians to pay a contribution covering all or part of the costs for the care, custody, and treatment of the youth, including the costs of necessary medical, dental, and other health care.

(3) If the court determines that the youth's parents or guardians are financially able to pay a contribution as provided in subsection (2), the court shall order the youth's parents or guardians to pay an amount based on the uniform child support guidelines adopted by the department of public health and human services pursuant to 40-5-209.

(4) (a) Except as provided in subsection (4)(b), contributions ordered under this section and each modification of an existing order are enforceable by immediate or delinquency income withholding, or both, under Title 40, chapter 5, part 4. An order for a contribution that is inconsistent with this section is nevertheless subject to withholding for the payment of the contribution without need for an amendment of the support order or for any further action by the court.

(b) A court-ordered exception from contributions under this section must be in writing and be included in the order. An exception from the immediate income withholding requirement may be granted if the court finds that there is:

(i) good cause not to require immediate income withholding; or

(ii) an alternative arrangement between the department and the person who is ordered to pay contributions.

(c) A finding of good cause not to require immediate income withholding must, at a minimum, be based upon:

(i) a written determination and explanation by the court of the reasons why the implementation of immediate income withholding is not in the best interests of the child; and

(ii) proof of timely payment of previously ordered support in cases involving modification of contributions ordered under this section.

(d) An alternative arrangement must:

(i) provide sufficient security to ensure compliance with the arrangement;

(ii) be in writing and be signed by a representative of the department and the person required to make contributions; and

(iii) if approved by the court, be entered into the record of the proceeding.

(5) Upon a showing of a change in the financial ability of the youth's parents or guardians to pay, the court may modify its order for the payment of contributions required under subsection (3).

(6) (a) If the court orders the payment of contributions under this section, the department shall apply to the department of public health and human services for support enforcement services pursuant to Title IV-D of the Social Security Act.

(b) The department of public health and human services may collect and enforce a contribution order under this section by any means available under law, including the remedies provided for in Title 40, chapter 5, parts 2 and 4."

Applicability: Section 20, Ch. 516, L. 1997, provided that this section applies to proceedings commenced on or after October 1, 1997.

1995 Amendments: Chapter 458 in (1)(c)(iii) substituted "the department or a licensed child-placing" for "a social service". Amendment effective April 14, 1995.

Chapter 546 in (3), (6)(a), and (6)(b) substituted "department of public health and human services" for "department of social and rehabilitation services". Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 362 in (1)(c)(i), after "department", deleted "of family services"; in (1)(d), at end after "counseling", and in (1)(e), at end after "youth", inserted "that does not require an expenditure of money by the department unless the department is notified and a court hearing is set in a timely manner on the proposed expenditure. The department is the payor of last resort after all family, insurance, and other resources have been examined"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 16, 1993.

1991 Amendment: In (1), near beginning, substituted "a youth in need of care" for "abused, neglected, or dependent" and after "court" deleted "after the dispositional hearing"; inserted (2) through (6) regarding determination of the financial ability of parents or guardians to contribute to costs for care, custody, and treatment of a youth and regarding methods of contribution for those costs; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

1987 Amendment: Substituted "department of family services" for "department of social and rehabilitation services".

1985 Amendment: In (2) at end substituted "41-3-408" for "[section 5]"; and deleted former (2) through (5) that read: "(2) Whenever the court vests legal custody in any agency, institution, or department, it shall transmit with the dispositional judgment copies of any medical report and such other clinical, predisposition, or other reports and information as may be pertinent to the care and treatment of the youth.

(3) Any youth found to be abused, neglected, or dependent may be committed or the court may make such other disposition of the child as the court deems best for his social and physical welfare. The form of commitment shall be as follows:

ORDER OF COMMITMENT

)ss.

Upon due proof I find that it is for the best interests of the child that he be taken from the custody of his parents, guardian, or other person having custody of him.

The names, addresses, and occupations of the parents are:

(4) Transfer of legal custody of a child shall include guardianship of any assets or estate of the child, unless otherwise specified by the court.

(5) Except in cases in which the court permanently terminates all parental rights or rights of the guardian of the youth, the court shall retain jurisdiction over the case and may subsequently modify any disposition ordered pursuant to this section."

1983 Amendment: Inserted (1)(b) allowing court to grant limited emancipation to abused youth 16 years of age or older.

1981 Amendment: In former (3) (now deleted), deleted reference to the Montana children's center.

Case Notes

No Standing by Former Parent to Object to Child's Placement or Assert Child's Rights: Once the parent-child relationship is terminated by the District Court, a former parent has no standing to object to the court's subsequent placement of the child with the Department or by adoption. Similarly, a former parent has no standing to assert a violation of the child's rights as guardian ad litem because the former parent no longer represents the child. In re E.A.T. & T.A.T., 1999 MT 281, 296 M 535, 989 P2d 860, 56 St. Rep. 1133 (1999).

Stipulation That Child Is Youth in Need of Care — Court Discretion to Determine Custody: Under 41-3-404 (renumbered 41-3-437) and 41-3-406 (renumbered 41-3-438), a parent's stipulation that a child is a youth in need of care empowers a District Court, in its discretion, to transfer legal custody of the child from the parent to the Department of Public Health and Human Services pursuant to In re C.M., 281 M 183, 932 P2d 1063 (1997). In re J.H., R.H., D.H., & R.H., 1998 MT 128, 289 M 111, 958 P2d 1191, 55 St. Rep. 504 (1998).

No Indication of Foreseeable Change in Parenting Skill Despite State-Provided Services — Permanent Department Custody of Children Affirmed: Once a youth is determined to be in need of care, the District Court can take appropriate measures to safeguard the welfare of the youth, including transfer of legal custody of the youth to the state. The youth's best interests are paramount and take precedence over parental rights. In the present case, the mother was shown to be unable and unwilling to remedy the circumstances that placed her children at risk and was not motivated to become an adequate parent despite the best efforts of the state to provide her with services and assistance in parenting, which brought no appreciable improvement. The District Court did not err in transferring permanent custody of the children to the Department of Public Health and Human Services. In re C.M., F.M., & S.M., 281 M 183, 932 P2d 1063, 54 St. Rep. 126 (1997), followed in In re J.H., R.H., D.H., & R.H., 1998 MT 128, 289 M 111, 958 P2d 1191, 55 St. Rep. 504 (1998). See also In re Custody & Parental Rights of F.M. & S.M., 2001 MT 93, 305 M 189, 24 P3d 208 (2001), in which the termination of parental rights to two of the children was affirmed absent evidence that the mother had made any significant progress in her ability to parent.

Award of Permanent Legal Custody — Authority of Court to Award Custody — Best Interests of Child Standard: The Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) filed a petition requesting the court to terminate parental rights of Mary Ann G. and to grant the Department permanent legal custody of J.J.G., with the right to consent to adoption. Former foster parents of J.J.G. filed a petition seeking permanent custody of the child. The court dismissed the foster parents' petition on grounds that the court could only review the placement actions of the Department but could not make the permanent placement itself. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the lower court erred when it concluded that the foster parents were without legal authority to seek custody of the child and that the lower court had no option other than to grant custody to the Department. The District Court has discretionary authority to transfer legal custody to any qualified individual, including nonrelatives, in order to protect the welfare of the child. In re J.J.G., 266 M 274, 880 P2d 808, 51 St. Rep. 793 (1994), followed in In re E.A.T. & T.A.T., 1999 MT 281, 296 M 535, 989 P2d 860, 56 St. Rep. 1133 (1999).

Dispositional Hearing — Procedures to Be Rigorously Followed — Error for Court to State Its Intentions Before Evidence Presented: In a dispositional hearing on petitions by the Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) and former foster parents for permanent custody of a child, the District Court stated its intention to transfer custody to DFS several times prior to the time that evidence was considered at the dispositional hearing. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the evidence received at the hearing was essentially disregarded by the District Court and that the hearing itself was a mere formality. This was error, and the lower court was reversed. In re J.J.G., 266 M 274, 880 P2d 808, 51 St. Rep. 793 (1994).

Proof of Sexual Abuse Not Necessary to Conclusion That Child Is Youth in Need of Care: A finding that a child was sexually abused was not a prerequisite to a conclusion that the child was a youth in need of care warranting placement of the child with the Department of Family Services. The conclusion was proper in light of the combination of the testimony of four expert witnesses, a video deposition of the child, a series of nude photos of the child taken by the parents, evidence of spousal physical abuse in the presence of the child, and the fact that the father did not provide as evidence the results of his court-ordered psychological evaluation. In re H.D., 256 M 70, 844 P2d 114, 49 St. Rep. 1141 (1992).

Marriage and Divorce Law Inapplicable to Nonparent Seeking Child Custody: As part of a change in custody proceeding conducted under the marriage and divorce statutes, the District Court erred in granting to a nonparent the custody of a child who was neither a natural child nor adopted. The proper procedure to be followed is contained in the child abuse, neglect, and dependency statutes. Although the nonparent apparently fit the requirements for custodian under either scenario, the case was remanded for correct procedural consideration under this chapter. In re Marriage of Miller, 251 M 300, 825 P2d 189, 49 St. Rep. 36 (1992), following In re Doney, 174 M 282, 570 P2d 575 (1977), and overruling a contrary prior holding in In re Custody of C.C., K.C., & B.C., 215 M 72, 695 P2d 816 (1985).

Grant of Long-Term Custody Proper — Finding of Abuse and Neglect: Upon motion by the state to terminate parental rights, the District Court ordered that the "parental custodial rights of [mother, father, and stepfather] in and to the youths [B.N. and T.N.], and to their property, are hereby terminated". Under the authority of 41-3-406 (renumbered 41-3-438), the court then awarded permanent legal custody to the Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) and gave the Department the right to place the children in foster care. The court also awarded supervised visitation rights to the parents and grandparents—an award inconsistent with termination of parental rights. The record clearly showed that neither the state nor the court intended to fully sever parental rights, even though the order used the words "terminated" and "permanent custody". On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the District Court intended to grant the state long-term custody, substantiated by a 10-year history of family turmoil resulting in abuse and neglect of the children, and that placement of the children in foster care was appropriate. In re B.N. & T.N., 245 M 511, 802 P2d 1244, 47 St. Rep. 2225 (1990).

Standard of Review — Custody Determinations and Termination of Parental Rights: The same standard of review applies to both termination of parental rights and custody determinations. As set out in In re R.A.D., 231 M 143, 753 P2d 862, 45 St. Rep. 496 (1988), in both instances the District Court's decision is afforded all reasonable presumptions as to the correctness of the determination, and therefore the decision will not be disturbed on appeal unless there is a mistake of law or a finding of fact not supported by substantial evidence that would amount to a clear abuse of discretion. In re S.P., 241 M 190, 786 P2d 642, 47 St. Rep. 190 (1990).

Award of Long-Term Custody Not Considered Termination of Parental Rights: An award of long-term custody under 41-3-406 (renumbered 41-3-438) is not equivalent to a termination of parental rights requiring that the statutory factors of 41-3-609 be met. In re R.T.L.P., 238 M 384, 777 P2d 892, 46 St. Rep. 1354 (1989), followed in In re T.A., 249 M 186, 814 P2d 994, 48 St. Rep. 634 (1991).

Insufficient Evidence to Award Child Support: In a dispositional hearing held by the Youth Court under 41-3-406 (renumbered 41-3-438) in which the court removed the child from her abusive mother's care and placed her in the care of her natural father, the court erroneously ordered the mother to pay child support to the father because there was insufficient evidence to support a finding of child support. The court failed to consider the factors in 40-4-204 and the Carlson formula, except to note that the father had just started a new business and the mother was employed as a receptionist. In re C.C., 237 M 246, 772 P2d 857, 46 St. Rep. 773 (1989).

Youth Court Jurisdiction Concurrent With District Court: The Youth Court has concurrent jurisdiction with the District Court over all youths who are within the state for any purpose. Upon the petition for temporary custody filed by the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services), the Youth Court had the authority to determine that the child in question was a youth in need of care, to remove her from her mother's abusive home, and, following a dispositional hearing, to place her in the custody of her natural father. In re C.C., 237 M 246, 772 P2d 857, 46 St. Rep. 773 (1989).

Grant of Long-Term Departmental Custody: Under 41-3-406 (renumbered 41-3-438), once a youth is found to be abused, neglected, or dependent, custody of the youth can be transferred to the state. Upon such finding, the District Court properly granted custody to the state until the children reach 18 years of age or until further notice of the court. In re A.H., T.H., & J.A.H., 236 M 323, 769 P2d 1245, 46 St. Rep. 395 (1989), followed in In re F.H., J.K., & B.K., 266 M 36, 878 P2d 890, 51 St. Rep. 649 (1994).

Adjudicatory and Dispositional Hearing Combined — Notice Not Required: Parental rights may be terminated at a dispositional hearing under 41-3-406 (renumbered 41-3-438) and 41-3-607. The dispositional hearing was combined with an adjudicatory hearing under 41-3-404 (renumbered 41-3-437), and no specific notice of the combination was required. Custody of R.A.D., 44 St. Rep. 2018 (1987). Opinion withdrawn but issue affirmed in Custody of R.A.D. & J.D., 231 M 143, 753 P2d 862, 45 St. Rep. 496 (1988).

Only Show Cause Hearing Required Upon Filing Petition for Temporary Investigative Authority (See 2001 Amendment to 41-3-427): A mother contended that an order granting temporary custody to the state and allowing temporary investigative authority (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) under 41-3-406 (renumbered 41-3-438) should be vacated for lack of an adjudicatory hearing pursuant to 41-3-404 (renumbered 41-3-437) and a dispositional hearing pursuant to 41-3-406 (renumbered 41-3-438). In denying the motion to vacate, the District Court properly held that a show cause hearing is the only hearing required when a petition for temporary investigative authority (see 2001 amendment to 41-3-427) is filed. In re J.W. & J.C., 226 M 491, 736 P2d 960, 44 St. Rep. 843 (1987).

Refusal to Relinquish Custody of Indian Children to Tribe — No Abuse of Discretion: Although a tribe participated in the dispositional hearing and presented a formal resolution asking for custody of the children, who were tribal members, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to relinquish custody to the tribe when it was determined that the children's best interests would be better served by leaving them in their foster home placement, with the ultimate goal of placing them in a Native American home. In re M.J.D., C.K.D., & A.R.D., 225 M 200, 731 P2d 937, 44 St. Rep. 167 (1987).

Parent Not to Unilaterally Declare Emancipation of Child — Terminate Support: Husband petitioned District Court to excuse support arrearages on grounds minor child was emancipated. The Supreme Court reversed the lower court's finding that petitioner's child support obligation was terminated. The court noted that the obligated parent may not unilaterally declare the child emancipated and terminate support. The question of whether a child is emancipated is a question of fact to be determined by the court. If emancipation can be established, a parent generally has no further duty to support the child. Prior to the age of 18, however, there is a presumption against the emancipation of a child, and the burden of establishing emancipation is on the party asserting it. The child in this case was adjudicated a youth in need of care. Parents have a continuing duty of support for a youth in need of care which runs contrary to the concept of emancipation. A decree may be modified to terminate support because of the emancipation of a child only as to installments accruing after the motion. In re Marriage of Bordner, 220 M 339, 715 P2d 436, 43 St. Rep. 417 (1986).

Dispositional Order to Follow Hearing: It was reversible error for the District Court to indicate its intention to transfer custody from the parents to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) before the dispositional hearing was completed. In re M.L.H., H.M.H., & R.H., 220 M 288, 715 P2d 32, 43 St. Rep. 375 (1986).

"Ability to Work" — Support Order for Foster Care Reversed: In determining the parents' obligation for support, District Court erred by including, as income, the wife's "ability to work" as this is a speculative condition. The amount of support should not be based on speculative conditions. When the only relevant evidence was a statement on the parents' financial statement that "[A.R.'s] income is our only income since [W.R.] is not working", the record did not contain sufficient evidence to support the District Court's conclusion. In re L.R., 218 M 266, 707 P2d 24, 42 St. Rep. 1570 (1985).

Findings Required to Terminate Parental Rights: A court must make findings in accordance with 41-3-406 (renumbered 41-3-438), 41-3-607, and 41-3-609 before it can terminate parental rights and award permanent custody of any child to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services). In re C.A.R. & P.J.R., 214 M 174, 693 P2d 1214, 41 St. Rep. 2395 (1984).

Failure to Object to Lack of Report at Trial Court — Effect of Report: Because, at the trial court level, the mother failed to object to the failure to prepare and submit a financial report, she was precluded from raising the issue on appeal. Even if an objection had been made in a timely fashion, failure to make the report does not affect the underlying proceeding; its only purpose is to determine the parent's financial ability to contribute to costs. In this instance, because the parent has not been asked to so contribute, the failure to prepare a report would have no effect. In re B.L.O., 213 M 164, 689 P2d 1246, 41 St. Rep. 2024 (1984).

Cross-Examination on "Best Interests" Proper: The state began termination of parental rights proceedings in the District Court. The court consolidated the adjudicatory and dispositional hearings, found the youths to be "in need of care", found that the parents had not complied with the approved treatment plan, found them to be beyond rehabilitation, and terminated their parental rights. On appeal, the parents contended the trial court committed reversible error by not allowing the parents to cross-examine the testifying physician regarding the "best interests" of the children. The Supreme Court held that a trial court must hear evidence regarding the "best interest" of the children during the dispositional hearing. Because the trial court consolidated that hearing with the adjudicatory hearing, there was only one hearing, and it was error to exclude the evidence. The court held that it was not prejudicial error, however, in light of the substantial evidence presented that the youths were in need of care and the parents were beyond rehabilitation. In re C.L.A. & J.A., 211 M 393, 685 P2d 931, 41 St. Rep. 1444 (1984).

Voluntary Relinquishment of Custody — Intervening Divorce — Custody to Father: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in awarding custody of a child to his father after the parents, while still married, surrendered temporary custody to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) because of the actions of the mother. Subsequent to the surrender of the child but prior to the award of custody, the couple were divorced. The District Court was correct in continuing with the abuse and neglect custody proceeding rather than dismissing it and allowing custody to be determined in the couple's divorce action. Once a determination of abuse and neglect has been made, the court proceeds to a dispositional hearing to determine the custody of the child. There was substantial evidence that the father was stable and nonabusive and the mother had potential for further abuse. In re M.M., 200 M 244, 650 P2d 784, 39 St. Rep. 1716 (1982).

Family Unity Not to Be Preserved at Expense of Children's Best Interests: After an adjudicatory hearing, the District Court terminated the parental rights of the parents of five children and granted custody with authority to consent to adoption to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services). Under Department placement, the children would be separated from each other. The paternal grandmother appealed to the Supreme Court, claiming that the state policy of preserving the unity and welfare of the family as set forth in 41-3-101 was violated by the separation of the children and by the District Court's refusal to award the children to her. The Supreme Court affirmed because the District Court's findings indicated that it had considered the grandmother's request but that the overriding concern was and ought to have been the best interests of the children. In re M.N., 199 M 407, 649 P2d 749, 39 St. Rep. 1487 (1982), followed in In re S.P., 241 M 190, 786 P2d 642, 47 St. Rep. 190 (1990). See also In re E.A.T. & T.A.T., 1999 MT 281, 296 M 535, 989 P2d 860, 56 St. Rep. 1133 (1999).

Severance of Parental Rights — Counsel Not Absolutely Required at In-Chambers Interview of Children: In the trial court, a mother's parental rights to her two children were terminated and custody granted to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services). On appeal, the issue was whether the court had erred by interviewing the children in chambers without the presence of the mother and counsel. When the trial court announced to counsel and the mother that it wished to interview both children in chambers, neither counsel nor the mother objected. The mother claimed that the interview of the children without the presence of her counsel violated her rights to due process. She relied on a case in which it was stated that a child may testify out of the parents' presence in abuse and neglect cases subject to the cross-examination by the parents' attorney. The reviewing court noted that nothing in that opinion suggested that it was the duty of the trial judge to assert a parent's right to cross-examination if counsel for the parent does not. Here, in any event, there was no testimony in chambers, just an inquiry into the children's desires regarding custody. A record of the interviews was made and any claimed right of cross-examination was waived by failing to assert that right at the trial level. In re A.C.S. & E.S.S., 190 M 180, 619 P2d 1199, 37 St. Rep. 1868 (1980).

Home Study of Father's Parents — Discretion of Court: In a proceeding involving the termination of a father's parental rights, in which it was conceded that he could not parent the infant, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to order a home study of the father's parents when the facts indicated that the best interests of the child would not be served by granting custody to the grandparents. In re T.J.D., J.L.D. & R.J.W., 189 M 147, 615 P2d 212 (1980).

Declaration of Child as Youth in Need of Care — Custody Awarded to Agency — Evidence of Abuse or Neglect: A child diagnosed as failing to thrive was given to foster parents. Professional personnel all agreed that the child in question was failing to thrive and that the child's condition deteriorated while in the care of the natural mother. The child's condition improved dramatically while in foster care. The District Court's finding and conclusion that the child was a neglected child was supported by "clear and convincing" evidence, and the court was justified in permanently depriving the natural mother of the child and transferring legal custody to SRS (now Department of Public Health and Human Services). In re M.R.L., 186 M 468, 608 P2d 134 (1980).

Order Based on Potential of Future Abuse: Because there was evidence showing a high potential for future physical abuse by appellant of her own child, the court did not abuse its discretion in ordering that the child be taken from its mother and the mother's parental rights terminated. In re M.A.M., 183 M 434, 600 P2d 203 (1979).

Evidence Supporting Finding of Neglect: In a child custody case, two circumstances were found by the Supreme Court to be particularly supportive of the District Court finding that the father had neglected his minor child: (1) the father failed to notify the juvenile authorities, despite information about abuse of the child while in her mother's custody and despite the urging by an attorney he had consulted; and (2) the maternal grandmother, not the father, had taken care of the child when the mother forced the child out of the apartment. Additionally, no "viable parent-child relationship" was found to have existed between father and child. Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).

Failure to Make Required Findings: The District Court abused its discretion in awarding permanent custody to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) because it patently failed to make the required findings that the child was "abused, dependent, or neglected" and therefore was without power to effect a permanent transfer of custody to a nonparent. In re Fish, 174 M 201, 569 P2d 924 (1977).

Youth in Need of Care — Transfer of Custody: It was clear from the record that appellant was unwilling or unable to provide care necessary for the physical and emotional well-being of her children, and testimony supported the court's finding that the children were abused and neglected youths in need of care within the meaning of 41-3-102 and its judgment transferring permanent legal custody of the children to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) pursuant to 41-3-406 (renumbered 41-3-438). In re Moyer, 173 M 208, 567 P2d 47 (1977).

Abandonment: Mother leaving infant with babysitter for 1 night and not returning for approximately 1 month supports a finding of abandonment and a dependency upon the public for support where 2 days after mother's departure welfare department was awarded temporary custody. In re Henderson, 168 M 329, 542 P2d 1204 (1975).

Child's Best Interest: Substantial credible evidence that father maltreated children and was incompetent coupled with evidence mother did not provide proper or sufficient food, clothing, or sanitary or medical care was sufficient to support finding and judgment that children were dependent and neglected, awarding permanent care, custody, and control to proper state agency, with right to consent to children's adoption. In re Jones & Peterson Children, 168 M 1, 539 P2d 1193 (1975).

Child's Interests Outweigh Parent's: Once a child has been found dependent and neglected, the primary concern is for the child's best interests and welfare, not that of the mother, and the fact that the mother's consent may have been obtained by undue influence does not necessarily invalidate a judgment awarding permanent custody to the welfare department with the power to consent to adoption. In re Bad Yellow Hair, 162 M 107, 509 P2d 9 (1973).

Custody to State Not Abuse of Discretion: Four children, the two oldest of which were of early school age, were insecure, troubled, frightened, and suffered from lack of medical care. Their mother had been abandoned by her husband, had an alcoholic problem, misused welfare funds, and failed to properly provide within the funds allocated. The decision of the District Court to declare the children dependent and neglected within section 10-501, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), and to award custody to the State Welfare Department (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) with right of adoption was not an abuse of discretion. In re Corneliusen, 159 M 6, 494 P2d 908 (1972).

Impoverishment Not a Shield for Neglect: The fact that a family is impoverished does not mean that the mother can use such impoverishment as a shield to hide behind in the neglect of her children when her very acts deprived the children of attention and care. Misuse of welfare funds, lack of medical care, and failure to properly provide within the funds allocated clearly reveal neglect of her children. In re Corneliusen, 159 M 6, 494 P2d 908 (1972).

Sufficiency of Evidence: Evidence in an action by the Director of the Division of Child Welfare (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) to obtain permanent custody of four minor children as dependent and neglected under section 10-501, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), was sufficient to support the trial court's finding that two minor daughters were dependent and neglected. The evidence showed that the multitude of the father's problems was such as to make his temper erratic and to cause profanity not conducive to correctly guiding young, impressionable girls toward an adult life. The trial court properly awarded custody of the two minor daughters to the Division of Child Welfare (now Department of Public Health and Human Services). In re Sheriff, 147 M 259, 410 P2d 940 (1966).

Ability to Support Child: Since ability of parents to support children was not determined in compliance with sections 10-506 and 10-507, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), but was left to testimony to be elicited at a later hearing, order compelling parents to pay support costs in action depriving them of the children was set aside. In re Phelps, 145 M 557, 402 P2d 593 (1965).

Effect of Awarding Custody to State: Where a child is found by a court decree to be dependent and neglected and its care and custody are awarded to a state agency, the child is as free from parental supervision as when placed in the custody of adoptive parents. State ex rel. Frederick v. District Court, 119 M 143, 173 P2d 626 (1946).

Case Notes

No Requirement That Parent's Counsel Receive and Approve Treatment Plan Prior to Submission to Court: Under 41-3-609, a District Court may approve a treatment plan without a parent's signature, and under former 41-3-420 (now 41-3-443), a treatment plan must include the parent's signature, unless the plan is ordered by the District Court. Thus, there is no requirement for parental approval prior to submitting a treatment plan to the District Court, and by implication, there is no requirement that a parent's counsel receive and approve a proposed treatment plan prior to submission to the court. Case Notes

Findings Sufficient to Warrant Assignment to Long-Term Custody: The state petitioned to terminate the mother's parental rights or, alternatively, to grant long-term custody to the state with the right to assign guardianship to the children's grandmother. The District Court granted the latter. The mother did not contend that the court's findings were erroneous, but did argue that the court erred because its findings were not sufficiently specific to justify long-term custody to the state. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that if the state follows fundamentally fair procedures, a parent may be divested of custody. Here, the District Court found that: (1) the children were youths in need of care; (2) the state had developed treatment plans for the mother, but the plans had not been followed; (3) the mother was warned that the last treatment plan was her final chance; (4) the mother had been given many opportunities to straighten out and retain custody of her children, but did not do so; (5) continuation of the parent-child legal relationship would likely result in continued abuse or neglect if the children were returned to the mother; (6) the mother's conduct and condition rendered her unfit, unable, and unwilling to give her children adequate parental care; (7) it would be in the children's best interest if they were allowed to visit with their mother as directed by the state, even if she was not their custodian; (8) since the children had been living with their grandmother, they had improved in school and become more socially involved; and (9) the grandmother was willing to act as the children's guardian. These findings were sufficiently specific to support the District Court's award of long-term custody to the children's grandmother, and that award was affirmed. In re Custody & Parental Rights of T.Z. & J.Z., 2000 MT 205, 300 M 522, 6 P3d 960, 57 St. Rep. 806 (2000).

Petition for Long-Term Custody Included With Petition for Termination of Parental Rights — No Requirement for Filing Subsequent to Hearing: The state petitioned to terminate the mother's parental rights or, alternatively, to grant long-term custody to the state with the right to assign guardianship to the children's grandmother. Because the District Court combined the permanency hearing with the termination hearing, the petition for long-term legal custody was not filed subsequent to the hearing, which the mother contended violated 41-3-412 (renumbered 41-3-445) and erroneously denied her sufficient notice. However, 41-3-412 (renumbered 41-3-445) does not require that a petition for long-term custody be filed subsequent to a hearing. That petition may be filed at the same time as a petition to terminate parental rights, and this alternative petition provides a parent with adequate notice of issues to be raised at the hearing. Thus, the court did not err in awarding long-term custody without requiring a separate petition limited to that issue. In re Custody & Parental Rights of T.Z. & J.Z., 2000 MT 205, 300 M 522, 6 P3d 960, 57 St. Rep. 806 (2000).

Federal Indian Child Welfare Act — Temporary Custody Not in Compliance With Act — Otherwise Valid Parental Termination Not Invalidated: Child of Indian parents was placed in the temporary custody of the state in proceedings that may not have complied with the federal Indian Child Welfare Act (25 U.S.C. §1901, et seq.). Later, in proceedings that complied with the Act and before a different judge with different witnesses, the parents' rights were terminated and permanent custody was granted the state. The Supreme Court held that any failure to comply with the Act in the temporary proceedings would not invalidate the later termination because the proceedings are separate actions involving separate petitions and statutory guidelines. Determination of Neglect at Custody Hearing Not Sufficient: After the death of the custodial mother, the maternal grandmother took the children into her home. The natural father petitioned to have the children restored to his custody. The grandmother requested custody and filed a petition for adoption. In a proceeding pursuant to 40-4-221, the grandmother was granted custody because the father had failed to make child support payments for more than a year and had generally neglected the children. The trial court properly dismissed the grandmother's petition for adoption for lack of jurisdiction. The determination of neglect needed to excuse the need for the father's consent to adoption under 40-8-111 (now repealed) must be made in a separate proceeding pursuant to Title 41, ch. 3, part 6. Abandonment Held to Constitute Abuse or Neglect: The father appealed the termination of his parental rights, arguing that the trial court's finding of abandonment did not constitute a finding of abuse or neglect required by statute to terminate parental rights. The Supreme Court ruled that in the past, it had implicitly upheld terminations on the basis of abandonment and that it was clarifying its earlier rulings by holding that abandonment is "harm to a child's welfare" and that "harm to a child's welfare" is a statutory ground for a finding of "child abuse or neglect" upon which a termination of parental rights may be founded. The Department then sought to terminate the father's parental rights. To terminate his parental rights, the court must first find that the child is abused, neglected, or dependent (see 1995 amendment). Only when such a finding has been made can the court apply the best interests of the child test. In re M.G.M., 201 M 400, 654 P2d 994, 39 St. Rep. 2191 (1982).

1987 Purported Amendment: Although sec. 45, Ch. 609, L. 1987, purported to amend this section, in the final version the text remained unamended.

1985 Amendment: In (1) near end, after "41-3-404", inserted "within 180 days after filing of the petition"; in (2) after "county attorney", inserted "attorney general, or an attorney hired by the county welfare department or office of human services"; and in (3) at beginning of first sentence, deleted "An attorney, who whenever possible shall be the child's previously appointed" and inserted "A", and near beginning of second sentence changed "attorney" to "guardian ad litem".

Case Notes

Probate Code Permanent Guardianship Proceeding — Dependency or Neglect Not Grounds for Terminating Mother's Custody of Child: A mother's parental rights were not terminated by circumstance when a court order granted, with her consent, temporary guardianship in the paternal grandparents. A later court, on the grandparents' petition for permanent guardianship under the Uniform Probate Code, found that the child was neglected or dependent and that the child's best interests would be served by granting the petition. The mother appeared in and contested the later action, withdrew her consent, and filed a petition to terminate the temporary guardianship. The guardianship provisions of the Uniform Probate Code were never intended as a substitute for the child custody provisions of Title 40 governing dissolution of marriage or for the procedures of this title governing termination of the parent-child relationship. The court relied on cases stating that a dependent neglected best interests of the child determination could not be made in a Uniform Probate Code permanent guardianship proceeding and had to be made under a child custody or parental termination proceeding. In re Guardianship of D.T.N., 275 M 480, 914 P2d 579, 53 St. Rep. 253 (1996).

Failure to Notify Guardian Ad Litem of Adoption Proceedings — Reversible Error: A guardian ad litem is required to represent a child in every case in which child abuse or neglect is alleged, and that representation continues until the child is permanently placed. Therefore, failure by the court to notify an unplaced child's guardian ad litem of a hearing on a petition for permanent adoption constituted reversible error. In re F.H., 272 M 342, 901 P2d 96, 52 St. Rep. 791 (1995).

Award of Permanent Legal Custody — Authority of Court to Award Custody — Best Interests of Child Standard: The Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) filed a petition requesting the court to terminate parental rights of Mary Ann G.

and to grant the Department permanent legal custody of J.J.G., with the right to consent to adoption. Former foster parents of J.J.G. filed a petition seeking permanent custody of the child. The court dismissed the foster parents' petition on grounds that the court could only review the placement actions of the Department but could not make the permanent placement itself. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the lower court erred when it concluded that the foster parents were without legal authority to seek custody of the child and that the lower court had no option other than to grant custody to the Department. The District Court has discretionary authority to transfer legal custody to any qualified individual, including nonrelatives, in order to protect the welfare of the child. In re J.J.G., 266 M 274, 880 P2d 808, 51 St. Rep. 793 (1994), followed in In re E.A.T. & T.A.T., 1999 MT 281, 296 M 535, 989 P2d 860, 56 St. Rep. 1133 (1999).

Error by Court in Failure to Appoint Counsel for Parental Rights Termination Proceedings: To avoid a parent being placed at an unfair disadvantage during parental rights termination proceedings, due process and fairness require that the parent be represented by counsel. An indigent parent is constitutionally guaranteed the right to court-appointed counsel during the proceedings, and denial of such a request constitutes reversible error. In re A.S.A., J.L.A., G.A., & A.J.A., 258 M 194, 852 P2d 127, 50 St. Rep. 494 (1993).

Holding of Adjudicatory Hearing as Directory Rather Than Mandatory or Jurisdictional: Because the presiding judge was changed, the dispositional hearing on termination of parental rights was not held within the 180-day period provided in this section. The parent contended that the delay necessitated dismissal of the petition because the timeframe was not met. However, use of the word "shall" with regard to holding the hearing is directory rather than mandatory, and failure to hold the hearing within 180 days does not divest the court of jurisdiction. Absent prejudice to the parent from the hearing delay, termination of parental rights was proper in light of clear and convincing evidence supporting the court's findings and conclusions. In re A.N.S. & L.M.R., 252 M 279, 828 P2d 1357, 49 St. Rep. 250 (1992).

Adjudicatory and Dispositional Hearing Combined — Notice Not Required: Parental rights may be terminated at a dispositional hearing under 41-3-406 (renumbered 41-3-438) and this section. The dispositional hearing was combined with an adjudicatory hearing under 41-3-404 (renumbered 41-3-437), and no specific notice of the combination was required. Custody of R.A.D., 44 St. Rep. 2018 (1987). Opinion withdrawn but issue affirmed in Custody of R.A.D. & J.D., 231 M 143, 753 P2d 862, 45 St. Rep. 496 (1988).

Findings Required to Terminate Parental Rights: A court must make findings in accordance with 41-3-406 (renumbered 41-3-438), 41-3-607, and 41-3-609 before it can terminate parental rights and award permanent custody of any child to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services). In re C.A.R. & P.J.R., 214 M 174, 693 P2d 1214, 41 St. Rep. 2395 (1984).

Termination of Parental Rights — No Right to Jury Trial: The State began termination of parental rights proceedings in the District Court. The parents filed a jury demand. The court denied the motion, citing 41-3-607. The court consolidated the adjudicatory and dispositional hearings, found the youths to be "in need of care", found that the parents had not complied with the approved treatment plan, found them to be beyond rehabilitation, and terminated their parental rights. The parents appealed the denial of the jury trial, alleging that 41-3-607(4) was unconstitutional pursuant to Art. II, sec. 24, of the 1972 Montana Constitution. The Supreme Court held that in Montana the state constitution guarantees the right to a jury trial only in the class of cases in which the right was enjoyed when the constitution was adopted. When the constitution was first adopted in 1889, there was no right to a jury trial in parental rights termination proceedings because such proceedings did not exist. Because there was no right to a jury trial for civil proceedings to terminate parental rights when the Montana Constitution was adopted in 1889 and recodified in 1972, such right could not be brought within the protection of Art. II, sec. 26, of the 1972 Montana Constitution. Because the adjudicatory and dispositional hearings may be consolidated, as was the case here, the court held it was unlikely the Legislature intended to provide for a jury trial at the adjudicatory hearing but not at the dispositional hearing. In re C.L.A. & J.A., 211 M 393, 685 P2d 931, 41 St. Rep. 1444 (1984).

Case Notes

Petition for Long-Term Custody Included With Petition for Termination of Parental Rights — No Requirement for Filing Subsequent to Hearing: The state petitioned to terminate the mother's parental rights or, alternatively, to grant long-term custody to the state with the right to assign guardianship to the children's grandmother. Because the District Court combined the permanency hearing with the termination hearing, the petition for long-term legal custody was not filed subsequent to the hearing, which the mother contended violated 41-3-412 (renumbered 41-3-445) and erroneously denied her sufficient notice. However, 41-3-412 (renumbered 41-3-445) does not require that a petition for long-term custody be filed subsequent to a hearing. That petition may be filed at the same time as a petition to terminate parental rights, and this alternative petition provides a parent with adequate notice of issues to be raised at the hearing. Thus, the court did not err in awarding long-term custody without requiring a separate petition limited to that issue. In re Custody & Parental Rights of T.Z. & J.Z., 2000 MT 205, 300 M 522, 6 P3d 960, 57 St. Rep. 806 (2000).

Lack of Personal Notice — Due Process Not Violated: Mother abandoned her children after two failed treatment plans and neglected to apprise the Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) of her whereabouts for over 90 days prior to initiation of termination proceedings, during which time Department efforts to contact her were unsuccessful. Relying on 41-3-401 (renumbered 41-3-422), she later argued that because she was not personally served with notice of the termination proceedings, her due process rights were violated. However, this section outlines the notice requirements applicable to parent-child relationship termination proceedings. The District Court, after noting the Department's efforts to locate mother and the fact that she was under actual notice from the onset of Department involvement that her parental rights could be terminated if she failed to follow court-ordered treatment plans, properly held that the notice requirements of this section were satisfied. GENERAL

Circumstances Related to Termination of Parental Rights to First Child Relevant to Ability to Care for Second Child: The District Court noted that a mother's parental rights to her first child, S.P., had been terminated and concluded that, because the circumstances related to the termination in S.P.'s case were still present and relevant to the mother's ability to care for her second child, C.P., the mother's parental rights to C.P. should be terminated as well. The mother appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Pursuant to subsection (1)(d) of this section, the parent-child relationship may be terminated if the parent has subjected the child to any of the circumstances listed in 41-3-423(2), including when a parent has had parental rights to the child's sibling or other child of the parent involuntarily terminated and the circumstances related to the termination of parental rights are relevant to the parent's ability to adequately care for the child at issue. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in holding that the circumstances related to the termination in S.P.'s case were still present and relevant to the mother's ability to care for C.P., that continuation of the parent-child relationship would likely result in substantial risk of harm to C.P., and that it was in C.P.'s best interests that parental rights be terminated. In re C.P., 2001 MT 187, 306 M 238, 32 P3d 754 (2001).

No Authority to Grant Third-Party Petition for Parenting Plan Absent Termination of Parental Rights: A young, single mother left her child in the temporary care of the Knopps, her aunt and uncle, while she sought employment and a place to live. About 2 months after the child was left with them, the Knopps petitioned for a parenting plan and support for the child. Although the document was referred to as a petition for a parenting plan, child support, and medical support, it was the functional equivalent of a petition for permanent custody. The Knopps applied for temporary custody and received it, ex parte, so that when the mother returned and tried to remove the child to their new home, she was not allowed to do so. The mother then sought termination of the guardianship and the return of her child. The mother's parental rights were never terminated or suspended by the state or county, nor were any proceedings ever commenced to demonstrate that the child was abused, dependent, or neglected. The District Court dismissed the petition, relying on In re Guardianship of D.T.N., 275 M 480, 914 P2d 579 (1996), in holding that the mother had a constitutional right to custody of her child and that permanent guardianship could not be granted because the mother's parental rights had not been terminated or suspended. The Knopps appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The rule of law does not permit destruction of a natural parent's fundamental right to the custody of a child based simply on the subjective determination of the child's best interests. Rather, a natural parent cannot be denied custody of a child absent termination of parental rights for abuse or neglect pursuant to Title 41, ch. 3. In re Parenting of J.N.P., 2001 MT 120, 305 M 351, 27 P3d 953 (2001). See also In re A.R.A., 276 M 66, 919 P2d 388 (1996), and Girard v. Williams, 1998 MT 231, 291 M 49, 966 P2d 1155 (1998).

Statutory Termination Criteria Met:

A family preservation treatment plan listed four goals: (1) a plan for reunification; (2) a safety plan for the children; (3) timelines; and (4) a backup plan, including concurrent placement. The parents acknowledged that they did not comply with the goal of completing tasks within the established timelines, and the Department had been working with the parents for more than a year to get them to complete the treatment plans in order to reunify the family. Safety and cleanliness goals were not met, and psychological profiles of the parents indicated a lack of ability to provide a safe and appropriate home environment for their young children. There was little evidence that the condition rendering the parents unfit was likely to change within a reasonable time. The parents' compliance with the various treatment plans was characterized by a pattern of increasing their efforts as hearings approached and then slipping back into their previous behavior patterns. The statutory criteria for terminating parental rights was met, and the District Court did not err in doing so. The parents' contention of District Court error in finding that the mother had lost custody of another child because of her inability to parent, which was unsupported in the record, did not constitute grounds for dismissal because the error would have had no significant impact on the result and was therefore harmless. In re C.B. & J.B., 2001 MT 42, 304 M 252, 20 P3d 117 (2001).

Termination of parental rights was proper where evidence showed that: (1) parents did not challenge adjudication that children were youths in need of care; (2) court-approved treatment plans were unsuccessful; (3) the father's sexual conduct toward his daughter and his failure to obtain counseling rendered him unfit to provide adequate parental care; and (4) the conduct or condition that rendered the father unfit was unlikely to change within a reasonable time. In re T.M.M., 234 M 283, 762 P2d 866, 45 St. Rep. 1909 (1988).

Termination of Parental Rights Not Precluded by Conflicting or Ambiguous Expert Testimony: The father of three children appealed from a District Court ruling terminating his parental rights based on evidence that neither parent had complied with six treatment plans and that the parents remained unfit, unwilling, or unable to given their children adequate parental care. In affirming the District Court's termination of parental rights, the Supreme Court ruled that the existence of conflicting or ambiguous evidence presented by therapists regarding the father's progress in demonstrating any improvement in parenting skills does not preclude a termination of parental rights when the parent's conduct rendering him unfit to provide adequate care is unlikely to change within a reasonable time. In re C.D.S., S.E.S., & T.M.S., 2000 MT 313, 302 M 466, 14 P3d 1248, 57 St. Rep. 1327 (2000).

Finding That Jail Not Child-Friendly Place for Parental Visitation — Parental Incarceration Not Controlling Factor in Termination of Parental Rights: As part of its findings in terminating the rights of a parent who was incarcerated, the District Court held that a jail is not a child-friendly environment or an appropriate place for a parent-child visit. The parent appealed on grounds that the court erroneously made the implication from that finding that the parent's requests for visits were inappropriate and that the implication inappropriately colored the court's determination that the parent could not become an adequate parent within a reasonable time, amounting to an almost de facto determination that parents who are incarcerated cannot satisfactorily rehabilitate themselves to resume the parenting role. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed, finding that the parent's incarceration was not a controlling consideration. Substantial credible evidence supported the conclusion that jail is not a child-friendly place, and undisputed evidence that the parent neglected the child, made no progress on court-approved treatment plans, tested positive for drugs, was repeatedly incarcerated for crimes committed in the child's presence, and allowed unknown persons to care for the child was sufficient to support the conclusion that parental rights should be terminated. In re C.A., 2000 MT 227, 301 M 233, 8 P3d 116, 57 St. Rep. 931 (2000).

Findings Sufficient to Warrant Assignment to Long-Term Custody: The state petitioned to terminate the mother's parental rights or, alternatively, to grant long-term custody to the state with the right to assign guardianship to the children's grandmother. The District Court granted the latter. The mother did not contend that the court's findings were erroneous, but did argue that the court erred because its findings were not sufficiently specific to justify long-term custody to the state. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that if the state follows fundamentally fair procedures, a parent may be divested of custody. Here, the District Court found that: (1) the children were youths in need of care; (2) the state had developed treatment plans for the mother, but the plans had not been followed; (3) the mother was warned that the last treatment plan was her final chance; (4) the mother had been given many opportunities to straighten out and retain custody of her children, but did not do so; (5) continuation of the parent-child legal relationship would likely result in continued abuse or neglect if the children were returned to the mother; (6) the mother's conduct and condition rendered her unfit, unable, and unwilling to give her children adequate parental care; (7) it would be in the children's best interest if they were allowed to visit with their mother as directed by the state, even if she was not their custodian; (8) since the children had been living with their grandmother, they had improved in school and become more socially involved; and (9) the grandmother was willing to act as the children's guardian. These findings were sufficiently specific to support the District Court's award of long-term custody to the children's grandmother, and that award was affirmed. In re Custody & Parental Rights of T.Z. & J.Z., 2000 MT 205, 300 M 522, 6 P3d 960, 57 St. Rep. 806 (2000).

Proper Termination of Parental Rights Based on Conviction for Sexual Assault of Child and Sexual Intercourse Without Consent With Child: Snyder pleaded guilty to sexual assault on a child and sexual intercourse without consent with a child based on his involvement with three young girls. His marriage was dissolved 6 months later and custody was awarded to his former wife, who remarried and then petitioned for termination of Snyder's parental rights so that their son could be adopted by her new husband. The petition was granted, and Snyder appealed. The plain language of 42-2-608 provides that the court may terminate a parent's rights and make the child available for adoption if a parent is convicted of sexual assault on a child or sexual intercourse without consent with a child. There is no statutory requirement that the sexual assault on a child or sexual intercourse without consent with a child has been committed on the adoptee. The trial court did not err when it held that clear and convincing evidence supported the termination of the father's parental rights based on his prior convictions. In re Adoption of Snyder, 2000 MT 61, 299 M 40, 996 P2d 875, 57 St. Rep. 288 (2000), following In re J.N. & A.N., 1999 MT 64, 293 M 524, 977 P2d 317, 56 St. Rep. 269 (1999).

Court Refusing to Terminate Parental Rights for One Child and Not for Second Child: Stephanie argued that the District Court's decision to terminate her parental rights with respect to one child and not with respect to her second child was reversible as being logically inconsistent. The Supreme Court held that the record contained evidence showing that she could handle the parenting of one child but was not up to the task of raising two children and therefore the lower court's decision was valid. Probate Code Permanent Guardianship Proceeding — Dependency or Neglect Not Grounds for Terminating Mother's Custody of Child: A mother's parental rights were not terminated by circumstance when a court order granted, with her consent, temporary guardianship in the paternal grandparents. A later court, on the grandparents' petition for permanent guardianship under the Uniform Probate Code, found that the child was neglected or dependent and that the child's best interests would be served by granting the petition. The mother appeared in and contested the later action, withdrew her consent, and filed a petition to terminate the temporary guardianship. The guardianship provisions of the Uniform Probate Code were never intended as a substitute for the child custody provisions of Title 40 governing dissolution of marriage or for the procedures of this title governing termination of the parent-child relationship. The court relied on cases stating that a dependent neglected best interests of the child determination could not be made in a Uniform Probate Code permanent guardianship proceeding and had to be made under a child custody or parental termination proceeding. In re Guardianship of D.T.N., 275 M 480, 914 P2d 579, 53 St. Rep. 253 (1996).

Medical and Psychological Evaluations of Youth: In a proceeding to terminate parental rights, the rights of the child must be given paramount consideration, and when the evidence supports the court's expressed finding that an immediate evaluation of the youth was in the child's best interest, the court erred in denying a motion for medical and psychological evaluations of the child. In re J.J.G., 266 M 274, 880 P2d 808, 51 St. Rep. 793 (1994).

Mental Disease and Inability to Provide Care or Meet Treatment Plan — Parental Rights Terminated: The following facts and conclusions warranted termination of parental rights: (1) mother suffered from chronic schizophrenia, a borderline personality disorder, paranoia, and active hallucinations; (2) the children were found to be youths in need of care; (3) mother was incapable of adhering to any proposed treatment plan; and (4) mother was unfit and unable to provide adequate parental care, and her conduct and condition were unlikely to change within a reasonable amount of time. In re A.N.S. & L.M.R., 252 M 279, 828 P2d 1357, 49 St. Rep. 250 (1992).

Termination of Parental Rights Proper After Death of One Child and Consideration of Statutory Factors: After properly considering the statutory criteria of this section, especially the efforts exerted by the Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) in trying to rehabilitate the mother as well as the circumstances surrounding the death of one child and the abuse and neglect of three others, the District Court did not err in finding that the treatment plan was unsuccessful, that the mother's conduct or condition was unlikely to improve within a reasonable time, and that it was in the children's best interests to terminate parental rights. In re J.H., S.H., & N.H., 252 M 31, 825 P2d 1222, 49 St. Rep. 112 (1992).

Parental Rights Terminated — Alcohol, Drug, Emotional, and Stability Problems — Failure to Complete Treatment: The District Court did not abuse its discretion or err in finding that the conduct of mother whose parental rights were terminated rendered her unfit as a parent and was unlikely to change within a reasonable time. Among other things, mother: (1) left the children with their grandmother because she "decided to screw off my life" as children's father had; (2) had a history of chronic drug and alcohol abuse and of emotional problems stemming from childhood; (3) was recently hospitalized, once for depression and twice for pill overdoses; (4) had recently abandoned the children for a 9-day period at the end of which the Department placed them with their grandmother; and (5) failed to complete a three-part court-ordered program aimed at evaluating and treating her problems and helping her provide a stable home and environment for the children. Award of Long-Term Custody Not Considered Termination of Parental Rights: An award of long-term custody under 41-3-406 (renumbered 41-3-438) is not equivalent to a termination of parental rights requiring that the statutory factors of this section be met. In re R.T.L.P., 238 M 384, 777 P2d 892, 46 St. Rep. 1354 (1989).

Three Prerequisites for Termination of Parental Rights: The Supreme Court found substantial credible evidence that the three prerequisites for termination of parental rights were met: (1) that S.B. was a youth in need of care under the statutory definitions of 41-3-102 since the child failed to thrive due to carelessness of the parent (citing In re C.A.R. & P.J.R., 214 M 174, 693 P2d 1214, 41 St. Rep. 2395 (1984)); (2) that a court-approved treatment plan was unsuccessful (citing In re R.J.W., 197 M 286, 642 P2d 1072, 39 St. Rep. 568 (1982)); and (3) that the conduct or condition rendering the parent unfit to provide adequate care was unlikely to change within a reasonable time (citing In re R.J.W., supra). PROCEDURE termination hearing, the District Court allowed the state to amend the pleadings to include a new theory that the mother had abandoned her children. The mother's counsel objected for lack of notice. The state asserted that although abandonment may not have been included in the original pleadings as a separate ground for termination, there were facts in the original petition that supported a claim for abandonment and that the mother was thus on notice that the state intended to present evidence that would support a theory of abandonment. The Supreme Court disagreed. The fundamental liberty interest associated with parental rights must be protected with fundamentally fair procedures, including the due process requirement that a parent receive notice and be allowed the opportunity to be heard. Generally, a District Court cannot grant leave to amend the pleadings arbitrarily or perfunctorily, and although there are cases when the Supreme Court will allow a party to amend pleadings in order for a case to proceed efficiently on the merits, this was not one of those cases. The termination petition as a whole did not provide the mother with sufficient notice on the charge of abandonment. Although some of the facts may have been applicable to abandonment, the mother should not have been required to glean from those facts which claims the state could bring. Rather, the state was required to articulate the claims that it expected to raise, and allowing amendment of the pleadings during the hearing to include a theory of abandonment was reversible error. In re T.C. & W.C., 2001 MT 264, 307 M 244, 37 P3d 70 (2001).

Failure to Adjudicate Child as Youth in Need of Care — Termination of Parental Rights Improper: A mother was arrested for a parole violation, and the state filed a petition to investigate whether her children were abused or neglected. The District Court granted the petition on a preliminary basis, and the children were placed in a foster home. The mother was released on bond but failed to appear for a show cause hearing. The state's petition was then granted, and the court found that it was in the children's best interests to be removed from the home. The mother was later arrested again, released the following day, and left for Florida, leaving the children behind. She was arrested in Florida about 3 months later, and while incarcerated there, Montana filed for approval of a treatment plan. The treatment plan was faxed to the mother, but she refused to sign it. The plan was approved without her signature. A district citizen review board then recommended that the mother's parental rights be terminated based on the mother's criminal history, the social history of the case, and the children's need for permanence. The District Court terminated the mother's parental rights for failing to comply with the treatment plan, and the mother appealed. The Supreme Court held that termination of parental rights was in error because the children had never been adjudicated as youths in need of care through an adjudicatory hearing, as required by 41-3-437. A stipulation by the mother to let the court give temporary custody of the children to the state did not constitute a stipulation or an adjudication that the children were youths in need of care. In re T.C. & W.C., 2001 MT 264, 307 M 244, 37 P3d 70 (2001).

No Error in Failure to Grant Continuance of Parental Rights Trial Absent Affidavits or Showing of Good Cause: The father contended that the District Court erred in failing to grant his motion for a continuance of the trial to terminate his parental rights because he had only 20 days to prepare for trial. Although true that only 20 days elapsed after the father received actual notice of the hearing, he was aware for more than 4 months of the state's intention to terminate his parental rights. Further, he offered no affidavits in support of his motion to continue, offered no evidence of what he would have presented had more time been available, and failed to show any good cause beyond the argument of fundamental unfairness. The District Court noted that this was not a new case and that the father had plenty of time to get witnesses to the hearing. The hearing did not spring upon the father unexpectedly, and denial of his motion to continue was not erroneous. In re R.F., 2001 MT 199, 306 M 270, 32 P3d 1257 (2001).

No Requirement That Parent's Counsel Receive and Approve Treatment Plan Prior to Submission to Court: Under this section, a District Court may approve a treatment plan without a parent's signature, and under former 41-3-420 (now 41-3-443), a treatment plan must include the parent's signature, unless the plan is ordered by the District Court. Thus, there is no requirement for parental approval prior to submitting a treatment plan to the District Court, and by implication, there is no requirement that a parent's counsel receive and approve a proposed treatment plan prior to submission to the court. In re R.F., 2001 MT 199, 306 M 270, 32 P3d 1257 (2001).

Trial Court Not Precluded From Finding of Fact Even Though Evidence Conflicts: A mother contended that the trial court erred in finding that she had not completed her treatment plan because the testimony presented by counselors and the case worker conflicted in regard to her therapeutic progress in the ability to parent. The Supreme Court noted that the differences in opinion and conflicting evidence among the counselors on whether the requisite progress had been made in therapy did not preclude the trial court's determination that clear and convincing evidence existed to support the finding of fact. The trial court was in the best position to judge the credibility of all the witnesses, and the court's finding was affirmed. In re M.F.B., D.A.B., M.S.B., & S.L.B., 2001 MT 136, 305 M 481, 29 P3d 480 (2001).

No Rule That One Parent Be Allowed to Participate in Hearing to Terminate Other Parent's Rights: The father claimed that he should have been present with counsel at two hearings that were held to terminate the parental rights of his child and that he should have been allowed to challenge the state's evidence regarding the child's permanency plan. Although the fundamental liberty interest in a parent's right to the care and custody of a child requires the state to provide a fundamentally fair procedure for the termination of a parent's rights, in this case, both hearings were held to consider termination of the mother's parental rights, not the father's. The Supreme Court declined to adopt a rule that one parent must be allowed to take part in a hearing to terminate the other parent's rights. Further, testimony at the hearings involved recommendations for the child's future custody, not the father's parenting capabilities, so the court was not required to allow the father to scrutinize and challenge the evidence and witnesses at the permanency plan hearings. In Re Custody & Parental Rights of M.W. & C.S., 2001 MT 78, 305 M 80, 23 P3d 206 (2001).

Rejection of Court-Appointed Counsel During Criminal Trial — No Requirement for Different Court-Appointed Counsel at Subsequent Hearing to Terminate Parental Rights: On the first day of his criminal trial, Jeremy rejected court-appointed counsel from the public defender's office and represented himself instead. He was convicted of deliberate homicide. Later, during hearings to terminate his parental rights, the court appointed the same public defenders to represent him. His parental rights were terminated, and he appealed on grounds that his right to counsel was violated. However, he provided no authority for the argument that his rejection of the attorneys during the criminal trial somehow required that the court find alternative counsel for later proceedings. Jeremy was entitled to counsel, but not to counsel of his choice, nor did the appointment of the same counsel for both parents in the parental rights proceedings create a conflict of interest in violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct, absent a showing that it resulted in prejudice or adverse impact to the rights of the parties. Jeremy presented no evidence or authority that the right to counsel was denied, and the termination of his parental rights was affirmed. In Re Custody & Parental Rights of M.W. & C.S., 2001 MT 78, 305 M 80, 23 P3d 206 (2001).

Stipulation Not Considered Sufficient Adjudication of Youth in Need of Care — Lack of Jurisdictional Prerequisite to Terminate Parental Rights: The mother entered into a stipulation with the state that her children were youths in need of care only upon several conditions: (1) her parental rights would remain intact; (2) the children would reside with their grandmother; (3) the Casey Family Program would manage the children's cases; (4) the mother would always have contact with the children even if the program was required to intervene between the mother and grandmother; and (5) at an appropriate time when the mother was ready, the program, the Department, and the mother would devise a treatment plan that would be completed by the mother in order to regain custody of the children. At a subsequent hearing, the Department proposed a permanency plan that involved removing the children from their grandmother. The mother contended that the proposal amounted to a failure to abide by the conditions of the stipulation, thereby voiding the conditional stipulation that the children were youths in need of care and precluding the District Court's authority to terminate her parental rights. The Supreme Court agreed. Although a stipulation may be an acceptable alternative to an adjudicatory hearing in many circumstances, the fundamental nature of the rights of a parent requires that the process by which a stipulation is drafted and signed needs to be closely scrutinized. In this case, the stipulation was drafted by the County Attorney and signed by the mother without the benefit of legal counsel and essentially allowed the court to determine that the youths were in need of care without a finding that they were abused or neglected and without a hearing as required by 41-3-402 (renumbered 41-3-427). The mother had conflicting feelings about the removal of the children from their grandmother's care and relied on her understanding from the stipulation that the Department would not remove the children or terminate her parental rights, so she did not complete her treatment plan. Only a few days after the initial hearing, she promptly began work toward completion of the treatment plan and had made significant progress, particularly considering the unexpected death of her mother, by the time of the next hearing. Despite the change in circumstances resulting from the death, the Department did not grant the mother any additional time to complete the treatment plan, nor did the Department offer any evidence that the mother had abused or neglected the children. Under the unique facts of this case, the Supreme Court held that the District Court incorrectly found that the stipulation sufficed as an adjudication that the children were youths in need of care. Without that adjudication, the District Court lacked the jurisdictional prerequisite to terminate the mother's parental rights, so the Supreme Court reversed. In Re Custody and Parental Rights of M.W. & C.S., 2001 MT 78, 305 M 80, 23 P3d 206 (2001).

Failure of Parent With Mental Disability to Raise Issue of Violation of Americans With Disabilities Act — Consideration of Issue Precluded on Appeal: Following termination of her parental rights, the mother appealed on grounds that the termination violated the federal Americans With Disabilities Act of 1990 (ADA), 42 U.S.C. 12101, et seq., because different standards were imposed upon her as a parent with a mental illness than standards imposed on other parents. Although a majority of appellate courts have ruled that the ADA does not provide a defense to a parental rights termination proceeding, the Montana Supreme Court has not addressed the issue and declined to do so in this case because the mother did not offer any testimony, evidence, or argument at any of the various proceedings prior to appeal that would support the legal conclusion regarding her ADA defense. The mother's belated allusion to a possible ADA defense in her posthearing proposed conclusions of law was untimely and did not preserve the issue for appeal. In re A.M., 2001 MT 60, 304 M 379, 22 P3d 185 (2001). See also Nason v. Leistiko, 1998 MT 217, 290 M 460, 963 P2d 1279 (1998).

Finding That Child Is Youth in Need of Care Prerequisite to Transfer of Custody: The exigent protection of the health and welfare of a child is paramount when the state's initial intervention into otherwise private family matters reveals an actual or potentially dangerous or unhealthy environment requiring the removal of the child from a custodial caregiver. The legal determination that a child is a youth in need of care is a jurisdictional prerequisite for a court-ordered transfer of custody. The first question in a termination proceeding is whether the District Court correctly adjudicated the child as a youth in need of care, and the state need only offer clear and convincing evidence that the court properly adjudicated the child as a youth in need of care in order for the court to inquire into the actual fitness of the parent. In re A.M., 2001 MT 60, 304 M 379, 22 P3d 185 (2001).

Parent Not Represented by Counsel During Show Cause Hearing Regarding Whether Child a Youth in Need of Care — Due Process Rights Not Violated: At the time of a show cause hearing on whether her child was a youth in need of care, the mother was an indigent mental patient civilly committed to the state hospital. She appeared at the hearing without representation of counsel. The mother contended that the District Court violated her due process rights by making that critical determination regarding the child when she was unrepresented. Although in In re A.S.A., J.L.A., G.A., & A.J.A., 258 M 194, 852 P2d 127 (1993), the Supreme Court held that the constitutional right to due process guarantees an indigent parent the right to court-appointed counsel in parental rights termination proceedings, the court has not extended the right to counsel to a pretermination proceeding in which the focal issue is whether a child is a youth in need of care. Rather, appointment of counsel at any time prior to the initiation of termination proceedings is within the discretion of the District Court. In this case, the initial determination that the child was a youth in need of care was made by order pursuant to a finding of probable cause even before the mother's first appearance in any proceedings when the District Court relied on a report submitted by a social worker showing that the child was abused or neglected or in danger of abuse or neglect and that removal from the home was necessary to protect the child's welfare. Subsequent to the initial determination, the District Court reached the same conclusion on at least three separate occasions when the mother was represented by counsel, including one hearing when the social worker was subjected to cross-examination by the mother's counsel. The Supreme Court applied In re M.F., 201 M 277, 653 P2d 1205 (1982), and in re D.S., H.S., R.S., R.S., J.S., R.S., & K.S., 253 M 484, 833 P2d 1090 (1992), and in holding that the state is not required to provide counsel at proceedings concerning temporary investigative authority or temporary custody. Thus, the mother's due process rights were not violated when the District Court made the determination that the child was a youth in need of care at a time when the mother was not represented by counsel. In re A.M., 2001 MT 60, 304 M 379, 22 P3d 185 (2001).

Petition for Long-Term Custody Included With Petition for Termination of Parental Rights — No Requirement for Filing Subsequent to Hearing: The state petitioned to terminate the mother's parental rights or, alternatively, to grant long-term custody to the state with the right to assign guardianship to the children's grandmother. Because the District Court combined the permanency hearing with the termination hearing, the petition for long-term legal custody was not filed subsequent to the hearing, which the mother contended violated 41-3-412 (renumbered 41-3-445) and erroneously denied her sufficient notice. However, 41-3-412 (renumbered 41-3-445) does not require that a petition for long-term custody be filed subsequent to a hearing. That petition may be filed at the same time as a petition to terminate parental rights, and this alternative petition provides a parent with adequate notice of issues to be raised at the hearing.

Thus, the court did not err in awarding long-term custody without requiring a separate petition limited to that issue. In re Custody & Parental Rights of T.Z. & J.Z., 2000 MT 205, 300 M 522, 6 P3d 960, 57 St. Rep. 806 (2000).

Hearsay Statements of Child Improperly Admitted in Parental Rights Termination Case — Harmless Error: The District Court improperly admitted hearsay evidence related by the child of parents who were subject to a parental rights termination case. However, the improper hearsay was not necessary to the court's determination of proved abuse or neglect of the fitness of the parents and thus did not affect the parents' substantial rights or the result that the court reached. Although the court abused its discretion in admitting the testimony, the error was harmless, and termination of parental rights was affirmed on appeal. In re A.N. & C.N., 2000 MT 35, 298 M 237, 995 P2d 427, 57 St. Rep. 155 (2000).

Consideration of Nonstatutory Options Not Required Prior to Termination of Parental Rights: Specific criteria for which a court may order termination of the parent-child legal relationship are enumerated in this section. There is no limitation placed upon a court that requires consideration of other options, such as a guardianship, prior to the termination of parental rights. In re E.A.T. & T.A.T., 1999 MT 281, 296 M 535, 989 P2d 860, 56 St. Rep. 1133 (1999).

Probable Cause That Child Abused or Neglected Not Adjudication of Youth in Need of Care: The father appealed the termination of his parental rights, arguing that the lower court erred in holding that it could terminate his rights based on an earlier adjudication that the child was a youth in need of care. The Supreme Court agreed, ruling that in the earlier hearing, the District Court's finding that there was probable cause to believe that the child was abused or neglected did not constitute an adjudication that the child was a youth in need of care. The Supreme Court upheld the termination on other grounds. In re M.J.W., 1998 MT 142, 289 M 232, 961 P2d 105, 55 St. Rep. 563 (1998).

Argument of Denial of Due Process to Be Raised at Trial: On appeal, Ison argued that her due process rights had been violated in that she was not able to cross-examine a psychologist ordered by the court to complete a posthearing evaluation. The Supreme Court ruled that Ison had not raised her due process argument at the trial court level and in fact only objected to the individual picked to perform the evaluation. In re R.B.O., 277 M 272, 921 P2d 268, 53 St. Rep. 640 (1996).

Reliance on Nonexistent Testimony — Findings of Fact Not Reversed: The Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) moved to terminate the parental rights of M.C. after a long history of both M.C.'s mental illness and her daughter being placed in foster care. The District Court terminated M.C.'s parental rights, basing one of its findings upon the answer to a question concerning M.C.'s mental health that was never given by a social worker before the District Court. The Supreme Court found that there was other evidence before the District Court that M.C.'s mental health was not going to change within a reasonable time, and because the result of a reversal of the District Court's ruling would not ultimately change that ruling, the Supreme Court held that the reliance upon nonexistent testimony was harmless error. In re S.C., 264 M 24, 869 P2d 266, 51 St. Rep. 129 (1994).

No Reliance on Alford Plea in Terminating Parental Rights: Cameron pleaded guilty under an Alford plea to two counts of felony sexual assault, then later claimed that the District Court improperly relied on the plea to terminate his parental rights. The Supreme Court found that the nature of Cameron's plea was irrelevant to the termination of his parental rights because even though he pleaded guilty, the District Court had considered only Cameron's incarceration, the length of his prison sentence, and his refusal to complete sex offender treatment. In re Custody & Parental Rights of M.D., 262 M 183, 864 P2d 783, 50 St. Rep. 1505 (1993).

Child as Witness — Testimony Properly Excluded: In proceedings to terminate a father's parental rights, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to have a child testify as to custody when the threatened harm to the child outweighed any possible relevance the testimony would have. In re M.A.W. & K.M.W., 256 M 296, 846 P2d 985, 50 St. Rep. 64 (1993).

Motion to Rescind Untimely: A motion to rescind the order terminating parental rights, made nearly 6 months after appellant learned the termination order was entered, was untimely. In re A.E., C.E., S.R., & J.R., 255 M 56, 840 P2d 572, 49 St. Rep. 877 (1992).

Court Not to Take Judicial Notice of Hearing at Which Parties Not Present or Represented by Counsel: The Streckerts were not present or represented at a hearing by the lower court determining temporary custody of their children. Subsequently, during a hearing terminating parental rights, the District Court took judicial notice of the testimony presented during the temporary custody hearing. The Supreme Court held that the lower court should not have taken judicial notice of evidence presented in the first hearing but refused to reverse the decision on the basis that there was substantial other evidence to support the lower court's ruling. In re D.S., H.S., R.S., R.S., J.S., R.S., & K.S., 253 M 484, 833 P2d 1090, 49 St. Rep. 552 (1992).

Grant of Long-Term Custody Proper — Finding of Abuse and Neglect: Upon motion by the state to terminate parental rights, the District Court ordered that the "parental custodial rights of [mother, father, and stepfather] in and to the youths [B.N. and T.N.], and to their property, are hereby terminated". Under the authority of 41-3-406 (renumbered 41-3-438), the court then awarded permanent legal custody to the Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) and gave the Department the right to place the children in foster care. The court also awarded supervised visitation rights to the parents and grandparents—an award inconsistent with termination of parental rights. The record clearly showed that neither the state nor the court intended to fully sever parental rights, even though the order used the words "terminated" and "permanent custody". On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the District Court intended to grant the state long-term custody, substantiated by a 10-year history of family turmoil resulting in abuse and neglect of the children, and that placement of the children in foster care was appropriate. In re B.N. & T.N., 245 M 511, 802 P2d 1244, 47 St. Rep. 2225 (1990).

Unclear Findings Not Grounds for Reversal: The mother appealed the termination of her parental rights on the basis that the lower court had never ordered a complete treatment plan for her prior to the termination. The Supreme Court stated that although it was unclear from the findings whether the lower court had found that there had been a treatment plan that was unsuccessful or whether the court had terminated the mother's rights on the basis that she was incarcerated, no grounds for reversal existed. The Supreme Court found that there was sufficient evidence to terminate the mother's parental rights under this section. In re B.H.M., C.M.M., & J.T.H., 245 M 179, 799 P2d 1090, 47 St. Rep. 1967 (1990).

Long-Term Incarceration Unconfirmed by Appellate Review — No Abuse of Discretion: A father whose parental rights were terminated while he was serving a lengthy prison term for aggravated assault of the child argued that the trial court, in the termination proceeding, could not rely upon a criminal conviction and sentence of imprisonment unconfirmed by appellate review. There is no authority for this proposition, and therefore the trial court did not abuse its discretion in severing his parental rights. In re A.B., 239 M 344, 780 P2d 622, 46 St. Rep. 1734 (1989).

No Right to Effective Assistance of Counsel at Termination Hearing — "Fundamental Fairness" Standard: There is no authority for the contention that a parent is entitled to effective assistance of counsel in a termination hearing so long as the procedure followed by the court is fundamentally fair. In re R.T.L.P., 238 M 384, 777 P2d 892, 46 St. Rep. 1354 (1989).

Due Process Properly Afforded Noncustodial Parent: Noncustodial father argued he was not afforded adequate due process in the termination of his parental rights. Although he was not properly notified of the first proceeding in which mother's and "unknown father's" rights were terminated, the District Court rectified the situation by reinstating father's rights, giving him proper notice of a second proceeding, and appointing counsel. Father personally appeared at all subsequent hearings with counsel. This notice and opportunity to appear constituted adequate procedural due process, and termination was proper. In re M.W., 234 M 530, 764 P2d 1279, 45 St. Rep. 2107 (1988).

Termination of Parental Rights Without Treatment Plan — Impossibility Required: After a hearing on the state's petition for temporary custody of C.L.R., the District Court amended the petition pursuant to 41-3-401 (renumbered 41-3-422) and terminated the father's parental rights. At the time of C.L.R.'s birth, both natural parents were incarcerated on convictions resulting from the death of C.L.R.'s half-brother. The father contended that the court erred in terminating his parental rights without following this section properly. He argued that the statute specifically requires establishment of a treatment plan prior to termination. The District Court set forth extensive findings and conclusions prior to determining that C.L.R. would not receive even minimally satisfactory care and would be exposed to extremely high chances of neglect, abuse, and even death if the father were ever allowed to care for the child. The Supreme Court held that the District Court had acted properly in terminating the father's parental rights, but it further stated that a termination of parental rights without first establishing a treatment plan would be allowed only when the facts clearly proved the impossibility of any workable plan. In re C.L.R., 211 M 381, 685 P2d 926, 41 St. Rep. 1436 (1984), followed in In re Custody & Parental Rights of M.D., 262 M 183, 864 P2d 783, 50 St. Rep. 1505 (1993). See also In re A.B., 239 M 344, 780 P2d 622, 46 St. Rep. 1734 (1989). (Annotator's note: Chapter 388, sec. 3, L. 1985, amended 41-3-609(3) to provide that a treatment plan is not required if "the parent is incarcerated for more than 1 year and such treatment plan is not practical" or if "the death of a sibling caused by abuse or neglect by the parent has occurred".)

Federal Indian Child Welfare Act — Violation of Treatment Plan: A year or more after temporary custody of Indian child was granted the state in proceedings that may not have complied with the federal Indian Child Welfare Act (25 U.S.C. §§1901, et seq.), a treatment plan was prepared and approved by the court. The treatment plan was neither suggested nor required by the temporary custody order. In a termination proceeding complying with the Act, it was not error for the District Court to rely on the failure of the parents to comply with the treatment plan. In re M.E.M., 209 M 192, 679 P2d 1241, 41 St. Rep. 636 (1984).

Conditions Existing Prior to Neglect Adjudication — Unnecessary to Prove Continued Existence: District Court could properly base its decision to terminate parental rights on events occurring before the adjudication that child was neglected and was not required to base its decision on a showing by the State that the circumstances and conditions predating the adjudication continued to exist at the time of the decision, where the State had for years been working with and monitoring the family. In re Declaring K.V. and K.A. Youth in Need of Care, 199 M 516, 649 P2d 1308, 39 St. Rep. 1582 (1982). See also In re C.A.R. & P.J.R., 214 M 174, 693 P2d 1214, 41 St. Rep. 2395 (1984).

BEST INTERESTS OF CHILD

Failure of Parents to Comply With Any of Five Different Treatment Plans — Child's Best Interests Paramount: To ensure the proper care of their sexually abused children, the state devised five different treatment plans for the parents over a 2-year period, but none of the plans were successful, so the state sought to terminate parental rights. The parents did not challenge the finding that their children were youths in need of care, but did challenge the appropriateness of the treatment plans, the finding that the plans were unsuccessful, and the finding that their conduct was unlikely to change within a reasonable time. The Supreme Court affirmed the termination. Primary consideration must be given to the best interests of the child as demonstrated by the child's physical, mental, and emotional conditions and needs, and the child's interests take precedence over parental rights. Here, the treatment plans were directed at protecting the children from further sexual abuse within the home and were thus appropriate. Although the parents complied with some obligations of the treatment plans, partial compliance is an insufficient basis upon which to premise error in a finding that a plan was not complied with. Further, a District Court should assess a parent's past and present conduct in determining whether that parent's conduct is unlikely to change within a reasonable time. In this case, ongoing incest between the siblings characterized the parents' inability to provide a safe environment to protect the younger children in the foreseeable future. The children had been in periodic foster care for several years, and numerous treatment plans were provided to the parents, who had considerable time to comply. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in terminating parental rights based on these findings of fact. In re D.H., S.H., K.H., N.S., & J.B., 2001 MT 200, 306 M 278, 33 P3d 616 (2001).

No Evidence of Significant Change in Parenting Ability — Termination of Parental Rights in Children's Best Interests to Establish Permanency and Stability: The District Court granted permanent custody of three children with the Department of Public Health and Human Services (DPHHS) in 1996 after finding that the mother failed to complete her treatment plan and that existing conditions that rendered the mother unfit were unlikely to change within a reasonable time. The Supreme Court affirmed in In re C.M., 281 M 183, 932 P2d 1063 (1997). The DPHHS subsequently petitioned to terminate the mother's parental rights to two of the children. Reiterating its findings from the 1996 order, the District Court determined that no evidence had been presented that the mother had made any significant progress in her ability to parent, concluding that it was in the children's best interests to terminate the mother's parental rights because the children needed permanent placement to successfully progress in their therapy. The court did grant the mother the right to visit the children when the DPHHS determined that the children were psychologically ready for visitation to occur. The mother appealed. The Supreme Court examined the evidence and affirmed. The children's continued fantasy of being returned to their mother's care someday was detrimental to the therapeutic process, and termination of parental rights was supported by substantial evidence and not otherwise clearly erroneous. In re Custody & Parental Rights of F.M. & S.M., 2001 MT 93, 305 M 189, 24 P3d 208 (2001).

Children's Best Interests Met by Termination of Parental Rights:

The District Court's finding, that it was in the child's best interests to terminate the mother's parental rights, was amply supported in the record. The mother proved unable to follow her doctor's recommendations in regard to exposing her children to her adult male companions, demonstrated a repeated inability to put her children's needs before her own (including her historical inability to select appropriate male companions and accept responsibility for placing the children in dangerous circumstances), had an inconsistent history of visitation, and was unable to meet the youngest child's need for a family environment characterized by very high levels of nurturance, stability, and predictability and by freedom from further risk of sexual abuse or violence. In re B.F., R.F., & M.S., 2000 MT 231, 301 M 281, 8 P3d 790, 57 St. Rep. 954 (2000).

Father argued that the best interests of his children did not require termination of his parental rights, pointing to instances in the transcript where the foster mother testified she had no objection to supervised contact and where a psychologist testified that some contact would pose little risk to the children. However, termination was proper in light of substantial credible evidence by the child psychologist who counseled the children and recommended no visitation and by the father's evaluating psychologist who testified that termination might be beneficial to father in the long run. In re S.P., 241 M 190, 786 P2d 642, 47 St. Rep. 190 (1990).

Termination of Parental Rights Rather Than Award of Temporary State Custody Pending Parent's Release From Prison — Child's Best Interests: Rather than award temporary custody to the state pending release of the mother from incarceration, the District Court terminated the mother's parental rights instead, which she asserted was error. Adjudication of the child as a youth in need of care was not disputed, and two treatment plans were not successful. In reaching its decision that the mother's fitness to parent was unlikely to change, the court considered the mother's possible long-term confinement as well as all reasonable efforts by state protective services to rehabilitate her, relying on evidence regarding her parenting skills, the length of her incarceration, and the child's bonding with a foster family after placement with the family 3 weeks after birth. The court properly gave primary consideration to the physical, mental, and emotional needs of the child and correctly determined that, in the child's best interests, termination of the mother's parental rights was proper rather than awarding temporary custody to the state pending the mother's release from prison. Child's Best Interest of Primary Consideration for Termination of Parental Rights: When considering the criteria for termination of parental rights, courts must give primary consideration to the best interests of the child, as demonstrated by the child's mental, physical, and emotional conditions and needs. Absence of Court-Approved Treatment Plan Not Bar to Termination of Parental Rights — Warning to Follow Law in Future Cases: In proceedings to terminate a mother's parental rights, the Department prepared and executed a treatment plan, but the mother refused to sign it. The plan was filed with the court, but the judge failed to officially sign it. The court found that the mother had allowed her children to be sexually abused or exploited and terminated her parental rights. The mother appealed on the grounds that this section requires a court-approved treatment plan before parental rights may be terminated. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the termination despite the requirements of this section and warned the Department to follow the law in future cases or risk reversal of terminations. This section does not require that the parent sign the treatment plan in order for the court to approve it. In re Inquiry Into M.M., 274 M 166, 906 P2d 675, 52 St. Rep. 1170 (1995).

Failure to Complete Alcohol Treatment Programs Grounds for Termination of Parental Rights: T.M., whose mother died when he was 14 months old, was diagnosed as having fetal alcohol syndrome and required constant parental supervision. His father was repeatedly incarcerated for alcohol-related offenses and unable to take care of T.M. during those times. T.M.'s father also repeatedly failed to complete treatment programs for alcohol abuse, domestic violence, and anger management. The Supreme Court held that in applying its standard of review, the lower court's decision to terminate T.M.'s father's parental rights was not clearly erroneous given the fact that the record showed that the father had failed to complete required treatment and that it was in the best interests of the child that the father's parental rights be terminated. In re Custody of T.M., 267 M 75, 881 P2d 1333, 51 St. Rep. 952 (1994).

Status as Youth in Need of Care as Satisfaction of Prerequisites for Best Interests Test: The mother argued that the lower court erroneously applied the "best interests of the children" standard in terminating her parental rights. The Supreme Court ruled that the lower court was correct in applying the standard because its finding that the children were youth in need of care met the threshold requirement of finding dependency, abuse, or neglect. In re B.H.M., C.M.M., &

Mother's Conduct Unlikely to Change Significantly Despite Evidence of Recent Rehabilitation: The trial court properly terminated a mother's parental rights and awarded custody of her two children to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) with the authority to consent to adoption when it was shown to be in the best interests of the children. Substantial evidence established that the children were abused and neglected; the mother had agreed to an approved treatment plan but failed to meet its conditions; and the conduct or condition that rendered the mother an unfit parent was not likely to change within a reasonable time. The court properly considered evidence of the mother's alleged rehabilitation but its determination, based on 6 years of neglect and abuse, that her conduct was unlikely to change significantly in the future was based on substantial evidence and was not an abuse of its discretion. In re C.A.R. & P.J.R., 214 M 174, 693 P2d 1214, 41 St. Rep. 2395 (1984).

ABANDONMENT

Improper Termination of Rights of Noncustodial Parent on Grounds of Abandonment Absent Showing of Willful Surrender of Custody: The District Court terminated a father's parental rights after finding that he abandoned his children by willfully surrendering physical custody for a period of 6 months without manifesting a firm intention to resume physical custody or making permanent physical arrangements for care of the children. The father appealed on grounds that he could not have willfully surrendered custody because he did not have physical custody of the children, who were initially with the mother and then in state foster care. The Supreme Court agreed. Acknowledging that pursuant to In re M.W., 234 M 530, 764 P2d 1279 (1988), it is possible for a court to find that a noncustodial parent has abandoned children, that finding must be based on evidence that the parent did not intend to resume the children's care, which was not the case here. Rather, the District Court in this case found that the father willfully surrendered physical custody, which was directly controverted by the fact that the father could not surrender custody that he did not have. Termination of the father's parental rights under that theory of abandonment was reversible error. In re T.C. & W.C., 2001 MT 264, 307 M 244, 37 P3d 70 (2001).

No Treatment Plan Required to Terminate Parental Rights When Child Abandoned: A mother's parental rights were terminated based on the determination that she had abandoned her children, and the mother appealed. The children had been in out-of-home placement for longer than 1 year, and the mother had no contact with the children for almost 6 years, so no court-approved treatment plan was ever devised for the mother. The Supreme Court found that the mother's minimal efforts to contact the Department of Public Health and Human Services after termination proceedings were initiated were not sufficient to show the mother's intent to resume the care of her children, so the District Court did not err when it terminated the mother's parental rights on grounds of abandonment. A treatment plan is not required when the District Court finds that a parent has abandoned a child. In re J.J. & C.J., 2001 MT 131, 305 M 431, 28 P3d 1076 (2001).

Evidence of Intent to Remedy Child's Situation During Time of Alleged Abandonment — Finding of Abandonment Reversed: The state alleged abandonment by father from September 1994 to January 1995. Evidence showed that father had an unimpressive history as a parent, offering little or no financial or emotional support during the first 5 years of his son's life. Nevertheless, father's actions during the time in question, including a petition to modify the dissolution decree to allow him visitation, contact with the mother to arrange visitation, and a trip from Wisconsin to visit his son, precluded a finding of abandonment during that finite period. In re W.Z., 285 M 16, 946 P2d 125, 54 St. Rep. 1019 (1997).

Termination of Parental Rights Based on Abandonment — Sporadic Attempts to Maintain Custody of Child Held Insufficient: Linda, the natural mother of P.E., left P.E. at a camping site with persons barely known to Linda. For the next 14 months, Linda traveled with persons with known criminal records, failed to give social workers her address and phone number on several occasions, failed to accept or maintain gainful employment, and failed to keep appointments with social workers or to appear at hearings to determine the status of P.E. Despite her expressed intent to resume physical custody, the District Court terminated her parental rights. Citing In re Adoption of C.R.D., 240 M 106, 782 P2d 1280 (1989), the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that Linda's sporadic attempts to maintain physical custody of P.E. did not constitute "a firm intention to resume physical custody" pursuant to 41-3-102. In re P.E., 282 M 52, 934 P2d 206, 54 St. Rep. 237 (1997).

Presence of at Least One Threshold Requirement Necessary — Abandonment: Mother willfully surrendered physical custody of her 6-month-old twins to a neighbor, with the representation that it would be for the day. About 3 ½ years later, the twins continued to reside with the neighbor, with no evidence that mother ever indicated that she intended to resume custody or attempted to make permanent legal arrangements for the children's care. It was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to conclude that the children were abandoned pursuant to subsection (1)(b) of this section and that parental rights should be terminated. A court must determine the presence of at least one of the threshold requirements set forth in subsection (1) of this section to terminate a parent-child relationship. Because abandonment was a sufficient basis for termination of parental rights, it was not necessary to determine whether there was a sufficient basis for termination under other provisions of subsection (1) of this section. In re D.H. & F.H., 264 M 521, 872 P2d 803, 51 St. Rep. 386 (1994).

Six-Month Abandonment Requirement Applicable Only to Willful Surrender of Physical Custody: The requirement in 41-3-102(3)(d) that applies a 6-month period to the definition of abandonment that is part of the definition of harm to a child's health or welfare is applicable only to the willful surrender of physical custody of the child. It was therefore proper to terminate the parental rights of a parent who left children for a 5-month period under circumstances that made reasonable the belief that the parent did not intend to resume care of them. In re A.E., C.E., S.R., & J.R., 255 M 56, 840 P2d 572, 49 St. Rep. 877 (1992), followed in In re W.Z., 285 M 16, 946 P2d 125, 54 St. Rep. 1019 (1997).

Lack of Contact for Three Years Constituting Abandonment: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in terminating the parental rights of a father who abandoned his child by having no contact for 3 years and by indicating at no time his intention to resume custody until he learned his parental rights had been terminated. In re M.W., 234 M 530, 764 P2d 1279, 45 St. Rep. 2107 (1988).

Statute Constitutional — Abandonment by Noncustodial Parent: Father whose parental rights were terminated questioned the constitutionality of this section with regard to noncustodial parents. The Supreme Court found that the legal relationship between father and child did not change despite the facts that the mother was awarded custody and that the father failed to continue in his obligations to the child. In determining what constitutes abandonment, 41-3-102 considers the action of the parent responsible for the child's welfare, not the action of the custodial or noncustodial parent. In re M.W., 234 M 530, 764 P2d 1279, 45 St. Rep. 2107 (1988).

Evidence of Abandonment — Termination Proper: Evidence of abandonment warranting termination of parental rights was sufficient when the father had no contact and did not state any intention of resuming care of his children for a period of 2 years and did not make known his intention to acquire custody until 3 months after he was informed of the custody proceedings filed by the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services). In re M.J.D., C.K.D., & A.R.D., 225 M 200, 731 P2d 937, 44 St. Rep. 167 (1987).

Abandonment — Termination Proceedings to Be Fundamentally Fair: Termination of a natural parent's right to care and custody of a child is a fundamental liberty interest in Montana, which must be protected by fundamentally fair procedures. In a proceeding to terminate parental rights, the mother testified that on the advice of a social worker she refused to disclose to the father, who was in prison, the name of the child's foster parents; the father testified that while in prison he had tried to contact his son and see how he was doing. The Supreme Court held that this testimony contradicted the District Court's finding that father had abandoned child, and the Supreme Court remanded the case to the District Court for additional findings of fact and conclusions in light of specific requirements of 41-3-102. The Supreme Court also found the District Court record insufficient to conclude whether or not implementation of a treatment plan was attempted or feasible. The rights of parents cannot be terminated unless the parents have failed to comply with a court-approved treatment plan. ABUSE AND NEGLECT amendment to 41-3-427) over both the girl and her baby, pursuant to 41-3-402 (renumbered 41-3-427). The mother then agreed to divorce the stepfather so that he could marry the girl. The petition regarding the girl was dismissed because she was married and was no longer subject to the mother's parental control. At the show cause hearing on the petition regarding protection of the baby, a state social worker testified that, although there was no indication of actual abuse or neglect of the baby, there was concern for the baby's safety should the baby be placed in the home with the girl and stepfather. The state ultimately petitioned to terminate the girl's parental rights to the baby. The District Court determined that the baby was a youth in need of care and terminated the girl's parental rights. The girl appealed on grounds that the court's determination that the baby was a youth in need of care was erroneous, absent any evidence of abuse, neglect, or abandonment, and that the petition for TIA was insufficient on its face because it contained no allegations that the baby was abused or neglected. However, the definition of abuse or neglect in 41-3-102 includes either actual harm or the substantial risk of harm. Thus, the report required by 41-3-427 need set forth in detail only facts supporting the petition's request for TIA based on the assertion that a child is abused or neglected or is in danger of being abused or neglected. The social worker's testimony was considered sufficient to support a finding that there was substantial risk of harm to the baby if returned to the girl's custody; therefore, the District Court's determination that the baby was a youth in need of care was correct. The court's finding that under the circumstances, the baby had little hope of a normal emotional, moral, and psychological development with his parents was also supported by substantial evidence and was not clearly erroneous, based on the social worker's testimony that the girl's relationship with the stepfather was unhealthy, that the family unit exhibited extremely poor boundaries, and that the girl had obvious psychological damage from being sexually abused by her father and would, without successful treatment, be unable to set appropriate boundaries for the baby or be able to understand the risk of harm that her relationship with the stepfather posed to the baby. The Supreme Court affirmed. In re D.T.H., 2001 MT 138, 305 M 502, 29 P3d 1003 (2001).

Child in Danger of Abuse and Neglect Subject to Adjudication Regardless of Whether Actual Abuse or Neglect Occurred: A child who is in danger of being abused or neglected may be considered a youth in need of care regardless of whether actual abuse or neglect occurred, irrespective of a parent's care for the child prior to the parent's incarceration or commitment to a mental hospital. In re A.M., 2001 MT 60, 304 M 379, 22 P3d 185 (2001).

Record Showing Child to Be Youth in Need of Care and Failure of Mother to Complete Treatment Plan Held Sufficient for Termination of Parental Rights: The parental rights of M.M., the natural mother of A.W-M., were terminated by the District Court based on its finding that A.W-M. was a youth in need of care and that M.M. failed to complete her treatment plan. The Supreme Court reviewed the District Court record and found that the record contained substantial credible evidence that A.W-M. was a youth in need of care, including evidence that A.W-M. was left with a babysitter when she was 7 months old and sick with bronchitis, that after treatment, doctors would not release A.W-M. to her mother's care because her mother "appeared to be high", that M.M. made little effort to comply with her treatment plan, and that A.W-M. had been left with other caregivers for indefinite periods of time. The Supreme Court also found substantial evidence that M.M. could not be expected to complete her treatment plan in the foreseeable future, including evidence that she tested positive for use of a controlled substance, was unable to obtain stable employment or housing, failed to attend court-ordered counseling, visited only sporadically with A.W-M., and agreed in her testimony that she should not be given further time to comply with her treatment plan. In re A.W-M., 1998 MT 157, 289 M 333, 960 P2d 779, 55 St. Rep. 628 (1998).

Absence of Court-Approved Treatment Plan Not Bar to Termination of Parental Rights — Warning to Follow Law in Future Cases: In proceedings to terminate a mother's parental rights, the Department prepared and executed a treatment plan, but the mother refused to sign it. The plan was filed with the court, but the judge failed to officially sign it. The court found that the mother had allowed her children to be sexually abused or exploited and terminated her parental rights. The mother appealed on the grounds that this section requires a court-approved treatment plan before parental rights may be terminated. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the termination despite the requirements of this section and warned the Department to follow the law in future cases or risk reversal of terminations. This section does not require that the parent sign the treatment plan in order for the court to approve it. In re Inquiry Into M.M., 274 M 166, 906 P2d 675, 52 St. Rep. 1170 (1995).

Lack of Care, Supervision, and Guidance — Threats of Sexual and Physical Abuse — Termination Proper: After finding that the children were youths in need of care because they were not under the care and supervision of a suitable adult, had no proper guidance, and were threatened with sexual and physical abuse, the District Court properly terminated mother's parental rights, noting her failure to comply with a treatment plan or to change her conduct that continually endangered her children. In re A.W. & A.V., 247 M 268, 806 P2d 520, 48 St. Rep. 192 (1991).

Continuation of Unfitness of Parents: Evidence in an action to terminate parental rights showing that father had a history of violent behavior, had been arrested for physically abusing his wife, and was known to have abused his children; that both parents routinely drank alcoholic beverages to excess, that they became aggressive and violent under the influence of alcohol, and that they were generally unable to properly care for their children at such times; and that counseling had been unsuccessful because of the parents' hostile and uncooperative attitude and failure to participate clearly supported the finding under subsection (2) of this section that the conduct or condition of the parents rendering them unfit was unlikely to change within a reasonable time. In re J.L.S. & A.D.S., 234 M 201, 761 P2d 838, 45 St. Rep. 1842 (1988). See also In re R.B., 242 M 141, 788 P2d 1361, 47 St. Rep. 642 (1990).

Inability to Follow Through on Treatment for Chronic Mental Condition Sufficient to Warrant Termination of Rights: A mother's undifferentiated schizophrenia was a chronic condition, and because of her inability to follow through on her prescribed psychiatric treatment plan, the conduct that rendered her unfit as a mother was not likely to change within a reasonable time. Termination of her parental rights was proper. In re J.W. & J.C., 232 M 46, 757 P2d 769, 45 St. Rep. 855 (1988).

Sexual Abuse and Failure to Seek Treatment — Parental Rights Terminated: The District Court was presented with clear and convincing evidence that children were sexually abused, but the abusive parent did not enter into treatment or have the court approve an appropriate treatment program and was evaluated at court order only. The court properly terminated the parent's rights on the merits. Custody of R.A.D. & J.D., 231 M 143, 753 P2d 862, 45 St. Rep. 496 (1988).

Reasonable Time for Change — Construction With Age of Child: The trial court properly terminated a father's parental rights when there was substantial credible evidence to the effect that despite his good intentions to do so, the father was unable to provide for his child's mental and emotional needs. The child's age (9 years) made it imperative that she be provided with a loving, stable home as soon as possible. Expert testimony indicated that her well-being could not stand further delay. In re D.S.N., 222 M 312, 722 P2d 614, 43 St. Rep. 1291 (1986).

Termination of Mother's Rights — Test: The State met its burden of proof and District Court acted within the proper scope of discretion in terminating mother's parental rights where, among other things, testimony showed that the father lived apart from the mother, the residence was in a consistently filthy and deplorable condition, the child had inadequate sleeping facilities, meals, and clothing, the mother had been evicted three times because of the condition of the home, the child was beginning to manifest autistic behavior, and the mother had been diagnosed as a paranoid schizophrenic with serious ambivalence in regard to her roles as a mother and a person and a lack of ongoing capacity to provide long-term care for the child. Clear and convincing evidence in the record that a child is neglected and that it is in the best interests of the child that parental rights be severed sustains judgment declaring the child to be in the need of care and granting state agency permanent custody with the right to consent to adoption. In re Declaring K.V. and K.A. Youth in Need of Care, 199 M 516, 649 P2d 1308, 39 St. Rep. 1582 (1982). See also In re C.A.R. & P.J.R., 214 M 174, 693 P2d 1214, 41 St. Rep. 2395 (1984).

Evidence Supporting Termination of Parent-Child Legal Relationship: Where the child had been determined to be a youth in need of care, the father was serving a 10-year prison sentence, and a clinical psychologist testified that the mother was not interested in learning how to parent and probably could not do so unless she received 2 to 3 years of counseling, the evidence supported the termination of parent-child legal relationship. In re R.J.W., 197 M 286, 642 P2d 1072, 39 St. Rep. 568 (1982).

TREATMENT PLAN AND COMPLIANCE

Failure of Parents to Comply With Any of Five Different Treatment Plans — Child's Best Interests Paramount: To ensure the proper care of their sexually abused children, the state devised five different treatment plans for the parents over a 2-year period, but none of the plans were successful, so the state sought to terminate parental rights. The parents did not challenge the finding that their children were youths in need of care, but did challenge the appropriateness of the treatment plans, the finding that the plans were unsuccessful, and the finding that their conduct was unlikely to change within a reasonable time. The Supreme Court affirmed the termination. Primary consideration must be given to the best interests of the child as demonstrated by the child's physical, mental, and emotional conditions and needs, and the child's interests take precedence over parental rights. Here, the treatment plans were directed at protecting the children from further sexual abuse within the home and were thus appropriate. Although the parents complied with some obligations of the treatment plans, partial compliance is an insufficient basis upon which to premise error in a finding that a plan was not complied with. Further, a District Court should assess a parent's past and present conduct in determining whether that parent's conduct is unlikely to change within a reasonable time. In this case, ongoing incest between the siblings characterized the parents' inability to provide a safe environment to protect the younger children in the foreseeable future. The children had been in periodic foster care for several years, and numerous treatment plans were provided to the parents, who had considerable time to comply. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in terminating parental rights based on these findings of fact. In re D.H., S.H., K.H., N.S., & J.B., 2001 MT 200, 306 M 278, 33 P3d 616 (2001).

Admission of Letter Referencing Treatment Plan Not Arbitrary or Beyond Bounds of Reason — Parent's Claim of Illiteracy Questionable: In addition to presenting a revised treatment plan to the father when he was incarcerated, a state social worker sent the father's counsel a letter advising that unless the state heard otherwise, it would be assumed that counsel had no objections to the treatment plan. The letter also advised counsel of the father's claim of illiteracy. The state was not notified of any objections, and the District Court admitted the letter as evidence of a treatment plan. The father's subsequent motion to strike the treatment plan on grounds that the plan was not submitted to counsel prior to submission to the District Court and that the father could not read or write was denied. The Supreme Court affirmed. Based on the District Court's observations, the father's claim of illiteracy was questionable at best, and if there were objections to the treatment plan, presumably they would have been raised. The District Court did not err in relying on the treatment plan and in terminating the father's parental rights for completely failing to comply with the plan. In re R.F., 2001 MT 199, 306 M 270, 32 P3d 1257 (2001).

Mental or Emotional Illness Rendering Mother Unable to Parent Children Within Reasonable Time — Parental Rights Properly Terminated: A mother contended that her parental rights were improperly terminated based on evidence that she did not complete her parenting plan, including the therapy and visitation provisions of the plan. The family had two vehicles, but the mother did not attempt to take one when she left the father, failed to meet the requirement for weekly supervised visits, and maintained only sporadic contact with her children for almost a year. The therapy provisions of the treatment plan required the mother to obtain individual therapy and continue in therapy until she could demonstrate a clear understanding of how to protect her children from further emotional, physical, and sexual abuse and neglect, put that understanding into practice for at least 6 months, and address her own parenting issues, self-esteem, prior family history, signs of sexual abuse, and dependency on the children's father at the cost of her children's safety. The trial court noted that the mother could not have applied her therapy for 6 months as required because she had not had custody of the children since the plan was put into place. The court also found that the mother was not willing or able to carry out the tasks associated with parenting because of her mental or emotional illness and that her conduct was unlikely to change, as evidenced by her failure to comply with the treatment plan within 15 months. Absent clear error, the termination of the mother's parental rights was affirmed. In re M.F.B., D.A.B., M.S.B., & S.L.B., 2001 MT 136, 305 M 481, 29 P3d 480 (2001).

Appropriateness of Treatment Plan Requirement That Parents Provide Explanation of Child's Injuries: Four treatment plans were developed with the parents, the purpose of all of which was to: (1) return the child to parental custody; (2) enable the parents to provide a safe and nurturing environment for the child; (3) enable the parents to develop an awareness of the child's needs and an ability to meet those needs; (4) help the parents develop minimal parenting skills; and (5) resolve the issues that led to the child's abuse, which included a requirement that the parents provide a reasonable and consistent explanation for the child's injuries. The parents were subsequently convicted of endangering the welfare of the child, and the state petitioned for custody. Prior to the permanent custody hearing, the mother moved to strike the task that required an explanation of the child's injuries, but the state never filed a brief in response to the motion. Nevertheless, the motion was denied. Following the termination of the mother's parental rights, she challenged the appropriateness of that task on grounds that the task placed her in the untenable position of having to choose between incriminating herself and failing to complete the treatment plan, in violation of her right against self-incrimination, relying on In re A.N., 2000 MT 35, 298 M 237, 995 P2d 427 (2000). The Supreme Court found her reliance on In re A.N. misplaced. The mother waived her self-incrimination privileges by voluntarily testifying regarding her knowledge of the child's injuries at both the permanent custody hearing and during the criminal proceeding and could not argue later that the disputed task impinged on her constitutional privilege against self-incrimination. Further, the state's duty to protect children, as set out in 41-3-101, necessitated that the parents come to terms with the reasons why the child was abused, and without demonstrable willingness from the parents to resolve the abuse issues, the District Court had no assurance that the child would not be abused again. Thus, the task was a fair requirement in the treatment plan, and the District Court did not err in concluding that the plan was appropriate or in denying the motion to strike the task from the plan. Denying the motion was within the court's discretion regardless of whether the state filed a brief in response to the motion. In re A.C., 2001 MT 126, 305 M 404, 27 P3d 960 (2001).

Parents' Failure to Provide Explanation of Child's Injuries or Change Conduct — Termination of Parental Rights Proper: As a condition of a treatment plan, the District Court required the parents to provide a reasonable and consistent explanation for their child's life-threatening injuries, which was a reasonable and appropriate task. After 2 years of trying unsuccessfully to resolve the abuse issues, the District Court concluded that the treatment plan was unsuccessful because both parents had steadfastly maintained ignorance as to how the child was injured. The court also concluded that the parents' conduct was unlikely to change and terminated parental rights. The mother appealed on grounds that the court's determinations were not supported by clear and convincing evidence. The Supreme Court affirmed. The standard of review is whether the District Court's findings are clearly erroneous. Here, substantial evidence supported the conclusion that the treatment plan was not complied with and that the condition rendering the mother unfit was unlikely to change within a reasonable time, and that finding was not clearly erroneous. In re A.C., 2001 MT 126, 305 M 404, 27 P3d 960 (2001), overruling In re B.F., 2000 MT 231, 301 M 281, 8 P3d 790 (2000), and subsequent decisions to the extent that In re B.F. suggested that the Supreme Court should review a District Court's findings in a parental termination case to determine whether the findings are supported by clear and convincing evidence.

Long-Term Incarceration as Impediment to Parenting Ability — Treatment Plan Impractical: The father was sentenced to two life terms in prison with no eligibility for parole for 60 years for killing his girlfriend and her daughter. The District Court held a hearing on the termination of the father's parental rights but allowed no evidence or testimony other than the fact of his incarceration and length of sentence. The court determined that a treatment plan was impractical in light of the father's long-term incarceration and terminated his parental rights. The father appealed on grounds that a treatment plan must be established before parental rights can be terminated unless a showing of facts clearly proves the impossibility of any workable plan. Treatment plans are intended to improve a parent's ability to meet a child's needs in order to help the parent regain custody and preserve the parent-child relationship. However, in this case, no treatment plan could be devised that would remedy the fact of the father's long-term incarceration. His imprisonment presented an insurmountable impediment to his ability to provide for his child's physical, mental, and emotional needs, so the District Court did not err in finding that a treatment plan was impractical. Because a plan was not required, the court needed only to consider whether the father's conduct or condition rendering him unfit as a parent was unlikely to change within a reasonable time. Two life terms in prison so severely limited the father's parenting abilities that continuation of the parent-child relationship was not in the child's best interests, so termination of his parental rights was proper. In Re Custody & Parental Rights of M.W. & C.S., 2001 MT 78, 305 M 80, 23 P3d 206 (2001).

Sufficient Evidence to Terminate Parental Rights Without Prior Treatment Plan: The requirement of a treatment plan may be waived under this section upon a finding that "two medical doctors or clinical psychologists submit testimony that the parent cannot assume the role of parent". Two doctors did submit evaluations to that effect in this case, and the District Court waived the treatment plan requirement. On appeal, the mother contended that the doctors' testimony was canceled by the testimony of two other doctors, called by her, who testified positively regarding the mother's ability to parent. However, the evaluation of one of the mother's doctors was conducted for the limited purpose of determining whether the mother was qualified for Social Security income, and the other doctor's testimony exclusively addressed the issue of whether the mother should be permitted to continue weekly visits with the child and did not deal with the issue of her potential to assume the role of parent. Thus, the District Court did not err when it terminated the mother's parental rights based on the testimony by two medical doctors or clinical psychologists that the mother could not assume the role of parent without the court first requiring implementation of an appropriate parenting plan. In re A.M., 2001 MT 60, 304 M 379, 22 P3d 185 (2001).

Evidence Improperly Admitted Regarding Incident With "Baby Think It Over" Doll — Parental Rights Terminated Based on Statutory Criteria: The Department received a referral regarding J.M.'s birth, indicating that the parents had intellectual disabilities. The parents were provided with a "Baby Think It Over" doll, which is an infant simulator used in parenting classes that records incidents of neglect and significant abuse if not tended to. The simulator also measures a parent's ability or willingness to respond to an infant's time demands. The simulator recorded an incident of abuse for which the parents had no explanation. As part of a subsequent proceeding to terminate parental rights, the District Court allowed the introduction of evidence regarding the incident. Parental rights were terminated based on the parents' noncompliance with their treatment plan. On appeal, the mother contended that the court erred in allowing evidence regarding the doll because a sufficient foundation was not provided for admission of the evidence. The Supreme Court agreed that the state failed to provide a sufficient foundation for admission of the evidence, such as whether the doll was functioning properly at the time that it was used and whether the results of its use were reliable. The doll's recordation of an incident of abuse did not establish a consequential fact relevant to the state's contention that the parents had not complied with their treatment plan and that the parents' condition was unlikely to change, so the evidence was inadmissible. However, the state did provide sufficient other evidence to support its contention. Thus, although evidence regarding the doll was erroneously allowed, the evidence would not have affected the outcome of the case, so the error was harmless. In re J.M., 2001 MT 51, 304 M 303, 21 P3d 618 (2001).

Failure to Meet Department Treatment Plan — Rights Terminated:

A family preservation treatment plan listed four goals: (1) a plan for reunification; (2) a safety plan for the children; (3) timelines; and (4) a backup plan, including concurrent placement. The parents acknowledged that they did not comply with the goal of completing tasks within the established timelines, and the Department had been working with the parents for more than a year to get them to complete the treatment plans in order to reunify the family. Safety and cleanliness goals were not met, and psychological profiles of the parents indicated a lack of ability to provide a safe and appropriate home environment for their young children. There was little evidence that the condition rendering the parents unfit was likely to change within a reasonable time. The parents' compliance with the various treatment plans was characterized by a pattern of increasing their efforts as hearings approached and then slipping back into their previous behavior patterns. The statutory criteria for terminating parental rights was met, and the District Court did not err in doing so. The parents' contention of District Court error in finding that the mother had lost custody of another child because of her inability to parent, which was unsupported in the record, did not constitute grounds for dismissal because the error would have had no significant impact on the result and was therefore harmless. In re C.B. & J.B., 2001 MT 42, 304 M 252, 20 P3d 117 (2001).

Findings of fact that were applied in terminating mother's parental rights were not clearly erroneous. She had failed to comply with and successfully complete two treatment plans, and conditions making her unfit as a parent, including chronic alcoholism, were unlikely to change within a reasonable time. In re W.Z., 285 M 16, 946 P2d 125, 54 St. Rep. 1019 (1997).

The children of Kevin and Toni were adjudicated "youths in need of care", and a court-approved treatment plan was established. More than a year after the plan was established, the District Court found that neither Kevin nor Toni had successfully completed the plan and that neither was likely to complete the plan within a reasonable time. The District Court found that neither parent had maintained weekly contact with a social worker, neither obtained a parenting assessment and evaluation, and for some time, neither complied with the requirement that each submit to random drug and alcohol urinalysis. When Toni did comply, she tested positive for cocaine use three times. Both Kevin and Toni failed to comply with the treatment plan when they failed to report their incarceration to a social worker. Additionally, Kevin and Toni together and Toni individually at times lived in one bedroom apartments that were not suitable for their children, even though the treatment plan required them to maintain a home suitable for the children. The record also showed that the children had not been attending school, the parents had taught the children how to shoplift, and neither parent had returned to Montana to work on regaining custody or to visit the children. For these reasons, the Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in finding that Kevin and Toni failed to complete their treatment plan and did not err in terminating Kevin and Toni's parental rights. In re B.C., 283 M 423, 941 P2d 106, 54 St. Rep. 690 (1997).

The state showed by clear and convincing evidence that the statutory criteria for termination of parental rights had been met when proof was offered in evidence of mother's failure to: (1) obtain a valid driver's license; (2) successfully complete parenting classes; and (3) make weekly contacts with her social worker. When combined with maternal grandmother's testimony as to abuse, neglect, and exposure to alcohol and drugs, mother's parental rights were properly terminated. In re N.R.M., 261 M 502, 862 P2d 1171, 50 St. Rep. 1428 (1993).

The county Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) developed a three-phase plan designed to reunite a mother with her children. The goal of phase one was to restore the mother's mental and emotional health and capability to a level sufficient to enable her to conduct herself in a manner that would make it reasonable for mental health professionals to believe her likely to function responsibly as an adult, parent, and homemaker. Phase two called for the mother to maintain the stability established in the first phase. Phase three was to attempt to restore full custody of the children to the mother through reintegration into the mother's home. Although progress was apparent under the first two phases, failure to achieve the third phase was sufficient to warrant relinquishment of parental rights. In re A.H., T.H., & J.A.H., 236 M 323, 769 P2d 1245, 46 St. Rep. 395 (1989).

Finding That Father Unlikely to Change Because of Incarceration Upheld: Michael argued that his parental rights should not have been terminated because he had substantially complied with his court-ordered treatment plan by completing anger management and parenting classes, attending substance abuse treatment, and staying sober. The lower court found that because of his incarceration, Michael was unlikely to be able to change within a reasonable time the condition of being unable to provide a stable home for his son. The Supreme Court held that reasonable evidence supported the lower court's findings and therefore it had properly terminated Michael's parental rights. In re Custody & Parental Rights of C.F., H.F., & J.F., 2001 MT 19, 304 M 134, 18 P3d 1014 (2001).

Substantial Compliance Does Not Constitute Successful Completion: Michael argued that his parental rights should not have been terminated because he had substantially complied with his court-ordered treatment plan by completing anger management and parenting classes, attending substance abuse treatment, and staying sober. The Supreme Court held that substantial compliance was not enough because Michael, by returning to incarceration, was unable to provide a stable home, food, and clothing for his son and therefore the lower court had not erred in terminating his parental rights. In re Custody & Parental Rights of C.F., H.F., & J.F., 2001 MT 19, 304 M 134, 18 P3d 1014 (2001), following In re J.H., 2000 MT 11, 298 M 41, 994 P2d 37 (2000).

Inclusion of Self-Incriminating Requirement as One Element of Parenting Plan — Harmless Error: As part of his third parenting treatment plan, the father was required to affirmatively explain the cause of his child's injuries, assume responsibility for any injuries inflicted on the child, and cooperate with law enforcement to resolve the related criminal charges against him. In essence, the state used the treatment plan to make an official inquiry into the child's injuries, leaving the father with the Hobson's choice of either disclosing his involvement in the child's injuries and incriminating himself in the criminal proceeding or facing certain termination of his parental rights. The Supreme Court found the requirement to be inappropriate. However, the requirement impacted only one goal of five that the District Court found were not successfully met and only one task of four that were not completed. Thus, inclusion of the inappropriate requirement did not significantly impact the District Court's decision to terminate the father's parental rights or result in substantial injustice. The error was harmless, and the Supreme Court affirmed. In re A.N. & C.N., 2000 MT 35, 298 M 237, 995 P2d 427, 57 St. Rep. 155 (2000).

Unsuccessful Short-Term Treatment Plans — Parental Rights of Incarcerated Parent Terminated: The mother was offered two short-term treatment plans while she was incarcerated and was led to believe that if she completed these plans, she would be allowed to parent her child upon release from prison. The short timeframe for the treatment plans was due to representations made by the mother regarding when she expected to be released, but the state conducted no followup investigation to determine when she would actually be eligible for release and what the conditions of her release would be. Her incarceration was subsequently extended, and after determining that the treatment plans were not successful, the District Court terminated her parental rights. The Supreme Court affirmed, finding no error in the District Court's conclusion. In re J.H., 2000 MT 11, 298 M 41, 994 P2d 37, 57 St. Rep. 60 (2000).

Error in Finding That Parent Not in Compliance With Either Preincarceration or Incarceration Treatment Plan — Termination of Rights Affirmed Absent Evidence of Likely Change in Parental Conduct: A parenting plan was drawn for a mother, but she did not comply with it because of her subsequent incarceration. A second plan was then drawn that took into account the mother's incarceration. The District Court later concluded, incorrectly, that the mother had not complied with either plan. However, whether the parent's contrary conduct occurred before the treatment plan or after the termination of the plan, the results were essentially the same because the plan could not be considered successful under its terms. Further, the court relied on clear and convincing evidence in determining that the mother's conduct or condition that rendered her unfit was unlikely to change within a reasonable time. Having addressed each applicable statutory requirement, the court's termination of the mother's parental rights was affirmed. In re M.A.E., 1999 MT 341, 297 M 434, 991 P2d 972, 56 St. Rep. 1349 (1999), following In re R.B.O., 277 M 272, 921 P2d 268, 53 St. Rep. 640 (1996), and In re J.N., 1999 MT 64, 293 M 524, 977 P2d 317 (1999).

Failure to Complete Treatment Goals — Child in State Custody for Over Twenty Months — Substantial Evidence Supporting Termination of Parental Rights: Applying the standard of whether substantial evidence supported the District Court's findings of fact, the Supreme Court affirmed the termination of the mother's parental rights. Although the mother made positive changes in her life in the months preceding the hearing, she did not successfully complete or meet the goals of any of four court-approved treatment plans during the more than 20 months that her child was in Department custody. On this record, the District Court's finding that the conduct or condition that rendered her unfit to parent her child was unlikely to change within a reasonable time was supported by substantial evidence and was not otherwise erroneous. In re J.M.J., 1999 MT 277, 296 M 510, 989 P2d 840, 56 St. Rep. 1119 (1999).

Termination of Incarcerated Father's Parental Rights Proper — Treatment Plan Impractical: The District Court did not err when it concluded that a treatment plan was not practical for an incarcerated father who, even with parole, would be limited to only supervised visits with his children. No treatment plan would obviate the difficulty that the children would have in knowing him as their father after his extended incarceration. The incarceration and sentencing conditions presented a substantial long-term impediment to his ability to provide for the children's physical, mental, and emotional needs, limiting his parenting abilities to the extent that continuation of the parent-child relationship was not in the children's best interests. Therefore, it was not error for the District Court to terminate the father's parental rights. In re T.B., 1999 MT 174, 295 M 234, 983 P2d 929, 56 St. Rep. 679 (1999), distinguishing In re W.Z., 285 M 16, 946 P2d 125, 54 St. Rep. 1019 (1997).

No Treatment Plan in Effect at Time of Mother's Unauthorized Contact With Father — Termination of Parental Rights Reversed: When the mother surreptitiously contacted the father, who had had his parental rights terminated after being convicted of murdering the couple's other child, the state petitioned to terminate the mother's parental rights as well. Parental rights may be terminated when each of the following statutory requirements has been established: (1) the child must have been adjudicated a youth in need of care; (2) an appropriate treatment plan must have been approved by the court but not been complied with by the parent or not been successful; and (3) the conduct or condition of the unfit parent is unlikely to change within a reasonable time. In this case, the Supreme Court reversed the termination order in the absence of clear and convincing evidence that the mother failed to comply with a court-approved treatment plan because there was no treatment plan in effect at the time of her unauthorized contact with the father. In re J.A.B., 1999 MT 173, 295 M 227, 983 P2d 387, 56 St. Rep. 675 (1999).

Conditions Constituting Impractical Treatment Plan — Parent's Lack of Cooperation in Providing Information Insufficient to Render Plan Impractical: The District Court found that a treatment plan for an incarcerated father was impractical considering the length of incarceration, the father's lack of cooperation with the Department in refusing to release his medical records, and the distance between Montana and Minnesota where he was incarcerated. The court terminated his parental rights. A Department social worker told the incarcerated father that there could be no evaluation or treatment plan unless he released his medical records, which he did not do. Thus, implementation of a treatment plan was not discussed. At a minimum, the impracticality provision requires that the Department discuss the possibility of implementing a treatment plan with a parent, but not only was no plan discussed, the Department did not advise the father that his cooperation was necessary for him to participate in a plan. A parent's lack of cooperation in disclosing information is an insufficient ground by itself to conclude that a treatment plan is impractical unless the parent has been clearly informed that cooperation is necessary. In re J.F. & C.F., 1999 MT 131, 294 M 494, 982 P2d 1011, 56 St. Rep. 528 (1999), following In re W.Z., 285 M 16, 946 P2d 125, 54 St. Rep. 1019 (1997).

Appropriateness of Treatment Plan for Incarcerated Person: At the hearing on the petition for temporary legal custody, the mother testified by telephone because she was in prison in Idaho at the time for battery of a minor. She stated that she had 88 days left until she was eligible for release and that she was willing to work on a treatment plan while incarcerated. The social worker who prepared the plan recognized that the mother was limited in what she could accomplish while in prison and would be unable to complete the plan until she was released but pointed out that the prison programs would fulfill some of the treatment plan requirements. Because of disciplinary problems, she was not paroled. The mother later asserted, and the Supreme Court agreed, that most of the treatment plan was designed for a person who was not incarcerated. However, the plan was drafted when the mother had a chance of being released and was directed at the problems facing her and the children. She was adequately represented by counsel and did not object to the plan as presented. The District Court did not err in finding that the treatment plan was appropriate and that termination of parental rights was proper given the mother's neglect in even attempting to comply with the plan and given the denial of her parole because of her bad behavior. In re J.N. & A.N., 1999 MT 64, 293 M 524, 977 P2d 317, 56 St. Rep. 269 (1999), distinguishing In re W.Z., 285 M 16, 946 P2d 125, 54 St. Rep. 1019 (1997), and followed in In re M.A.E., 1999 MT 341, 297 M 434, 991 P2d 972, 56 St. Rep. 1349 (1999).

Well-Intentioned Efforts Toward Success of Treatment Plan — Insufficient Minimum Compliance Justifying Termination of Parental Rights: A mother's attempts to comply with the terms of four approved treatment plans, though well-intentioned, were insufficient to meet minimum compliance with the plan and did not constitute successful treatment. A treatment plan can be unsuccessful even when the tasks dictated by the plan are completed. The District Court held correctly that continuing the parent-child relationship would likely result in continued abuse or neglect of the children because of the mother's repeated inability to protect the children from abuse by others and that her conduct, having failed to change significantly in the past, was unlikely to change within a reasonable time in the future. In re S.M., R.D., Jr., D.D., S.D., C.D., & J.D., 1999 MT 36, 293 M 294, 975 P2d 339, 56 St. Rep. 152 (1999), followed in In re Declaring J.W. & K.D. Record Showing Child to Be Youth in Need of Care and Failure of Mother to Complete Treatment Plan Held Sufficient for Termination of Parental Rights: The parental rights of M.M., the natural mother of A.W-M., were terminated by the District Court based on its finding that A.W-M. was a youth in need of care and that M.M. failed to complete her treatment plan. The Supreme Court reviewed the District Court record and found that the record contained substantial credible evidence that A.W-M. was a youth in need of care, including evidence that A.W-M. was left with a babysitter when she was 7 months old and sick with bronchitis, that after treatment, doctors would not release A.W-M. to her mother's care because her mother "appeared to be high", that M.M. made little effort to comply with her treatment plan, and that A.W-M. had been left with other caregivers for indefinite periods of time. The Supreme Court also found substantial evidence that M.M. could not be expected to complete her treatment plan in the foreseeable future, including evidence that she tested positive for use of a controlled substance, was unable to obtain stable employment or housing, failed to attend court-ordered counseling, visited only sporadically with A.W-M., and agreed in her testimony that she should not be given further time to comply with her treatment plan. In re A.W-M., 1998 MT 157, 289 M 333, 960 P2d 779, 55 St. Rep. 628 (1998).

Treatment Plan Never Offered to Incarcerated Parent — Termination of Parental Rights Improper Absent Plan: Father had been incarcerated for more than 1 year, so pursuant to subsection (4)(b) of this section, the District Court terminated the father's parental rights on the grounds that: (1) a treatment plan was impractical in light of his incarceration; (2) the date of his release from prison was unknown; and (3) he had shown minimal interest in his child. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that neither the Department nor the social worker involved in the case ever presented or examined the possibility of a treatment plan with the father; therefore, the practicality of a treatment plan could not be determined when a treatment plan had never been offered or discussed. Failure to demonstrate the impracticality of an unoffered treatment plan constituted reversible error. In re W.Z., 285 M 16, 946 P2d 125, 54 St. Rep. 1019 (1997), distinguished in In re J.N. & A.N., 1999 MT 64, 293 M 524, 977 P2d 317, 56 St. Rep. 269 (1999), and followed in In re J.F. & C.F., 1999 MT 131, 294 M 494, 982 P2d 1011, 56 St. Rep. 528 (1999).

Complete History Relevant to Termination of Incarcerated Parent's Parental Rights: This section recognizes that a child may need help while a parent is incarcerated and that such help cannot be delayed pending the parent's release. Thus, a treatment plan is not required if the parent's incarceration for more than 1 year makes a treatment plan impractical. Further, a complete history of a parent's neglect and abuse of the children and of all attempts to comply with prior treatment plans is relevant to whether parental rights should be terminated, rather than a parent's performance only under the latest treatment plan. The primary consideration is the physical, mental, and emotional conditions and needs of the children. In re K.F.L. & N.L., 275 M 102, 910 P2d 241, 53 St. Rep. 57 (1996).

Absence of Court-Approved Treatment Plan Not Bar to Termination of Parental Rights — Warning to Follow Law in Future Cases: In proceedings to terminate a mother's parental rights, the Department prepared and executed a treatment plan, but the mother refused to sign it. The plan was filed with the court, but the judge failed to officially sign it. The court found that the mother had allowed her children to be sexually abused or exploited and terminated her parental rights. The mother appealed on the grounds that this section requires a court-approved treatment plan before parental rights may be terminated. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the termination despite the requirements of this section and warned the Department to follow the law in future cases or risk reversal of terminations. This section does not require that the parent sign the treatment plan in order for the court to approve it. In re Inquiry Into M.M., 274 M 166, 906 P2d 675, 52 St. Rep. 1170 (1995).

Failure to Complete Alcohol Treatment Programs Grounds for Termination of Parental Rights: T.M., whose mother died when he was 14 months old, was diagnosed as having fetal alcohol syndrome and required constant parental supervision. His father was repeatedly incarcerated for alcohol-related offenses and unable to take care of T.M. during those times. T.M.'s father also repeatedly failed to complete treatment programs for alcohol abuse, domestic violence, and anger management. The Supreme Court held that in applying its standard of review, the lower court's decision to terminate T.M.'s father's parental rights was not clearly erroneous given the fact that the record showed that the father had failed to complete required treatment and that it was in the best interests of the child that the father's parental rights be terminated. In re Custody of T.M., 267 M 75, 881 P2d 1333, 51 St. Rep. 952 (1994).

Failure to Complete Treatment Plan — Out-of-Home Placement for Over Two Years — Termination of Parental Rights Upheld: The District Court did not err in terminating a father's parental rights when the father failed to complete treatment recommended by psychological evaluations, failed to enter into counseling to develop effective methods of discipline and to understand the children's needs as victims of sexual abuse, and continued to deny various aspects of the mother's sexual abuse of the children. Overwhelming evidence that the father failed to comply with critical parts of the treatment plan met the statutory requirements for termination of parental rights. In re M.A.W. & K.M.W., 256 M 296, 846 P2d 985, 50 St. Rep. 64 (1993).

Appropriateness of Treatment Plan Requiring Psychological Therapy for Indigent Mother: Mother contended that the court-ordered treatment plan implemented in her case was inappropriate because the court failed to consider her financial situation when it ordered her to undergo treatment that included continuing psychotherapy, for which she was required to pay, and that her indigency thus doomed the plan to failure. Noting that the treatment plan was agreed to by the mother on advice of counsel, the Supreme Court found substantial testimony regarding failure of the treatment plan, beyond her indigency, that indicated circumstances that rendered the plan unsuccessful but not necessarily inappropriate. In re J.R. & S.D., 253 M 434, 833 P2d 1063, 49 St. Rep. 513 (1992), followed in In re Custody & Parental Rights of M.M., 271 M 52, 894 P2d 298, 52 St. Rep. 325 (1995).

Successful Treatment Plan, Not Just Compliance With Plan, Required: Parents contended their parental rights were wrongfully terminated because there was no evidence that the treatment plan failed or that their lack of fitness was unlikely to change. However, the treatment plan required not only compliance with but a successful completion of the plan, which was not accomplished. Coupled with the fact of ongoing and continuous unfitness unlikely to change within a reasonable time, termination of parental rights was proper. Operation of Treatment Plan Interrupted by Parent's Incarceration — Termination of Parental Rights Affirmed: The District Court did not err in terminating a mother's parental rights rather than awarding long-term custody to the Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) when: (1) a 6-month treatment plan had not even begun when the mother was incarcerated 4 months after approval of the plan; (2) although her incarceration may have interfered with her ability to complete the plan, her failure to timely begin the plan, coupled with her failure to complete previously assigned parenting tasks, foretold the potential failure of the plan; and (3) the mother's conduct was unlikely to change within a reasonable time. In re D.G., 244 M 17, 795 P2d 489, 47 St. Rep. 1408 (1990). See also In re R.B.O., 277 M 272, 921 P2d 268, 53 St. Rep. 640 (1996). Partial Compliance With Treatment Plan — Possibility of Change of Conduct — Parental Rights Terminated: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in terminating parental custody and transferring legal custody to the state when evidence showed that the mother only partially complied with a treatment plan and that the possibility that she might be able to change her conduct in 8 to 12 months was outweighed by the immediacy of the children's needs for stability and predictability. In re H.R.B. & K.R.B., 239 M 387, 780 P2d 1139, 46 St. Rep. 1771 (1989), followed in In re J.J.C.H. & C.M.H., 252 M 158, 827 P2d 812, 49 St. Rep. 193 (1992), and In re B.C., 283 M 423, 941 P2d 106, 54 St. Rep. 690 (1997). See also In re K.A.B., 1999 MT 71, 294 M 29, 977 P2d 997, 56 St. Rep. 297 (1999).

Failure of Parent to Complete Court-Approved Treatment Plan — Burden of Proof Met in Termination of Parental Rights: The state met the burden of proof in terminating parental rights after showing, by clear and convincing evidence, that the father of the youths in need of care did not comply with several tasks required under a court-approved treatment plan, including: (1) meeting with therapists on a scheduled basis; (2) completing a series of parenting classes; (3) establishing contact with and visiting the children; and (4) providing a home large enough to accommodate all the children. Further, the state was responsible to assist the father in establishing treatment but was not required to force him to comply with the treatment plan. In re L.W.K., D.E.K., & A.J.K., 236 M 14, 767 P2d 1339, 46 St. Rep. 145 (1989), followed in In re R.H., 250 M 164, 819 P2d 152, 48 St. Rep. 692 (1991).

Exceptions to Treatment Plan Requirement: A mother's parental rights may be extinguished without a finding that she has not complied with a court-approved treatment plan or that such plan has been unsuccessful. Exceptions in the statute allow for extinguishment of parental rights of a mentally ill person without establishing a court-approved treatment plan as long as two medical doctors testify that the parent is so severely mentally ill that she cannot assume the role of parent. In this case, three psychiatrists testified that the mother suffered from chronic schizophrenia and agreed that her history of mental illness showed little hope that she could assume her parental role. In re Baby Boy Scott, 235 M 253, 767 P2d 298, 45 St. Rep. 2362 (1988).

Failure of Rehabilitative Training as Criteria for Termination: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in terminating parental rights upon finding that despite several years of rehabilitative training to improve the mother's parenting and home management skills, she was unfit, unable, and unwilling to care for her children and failed to provide a stable home environment. In re M.J.D., C.K.D., & A.R.D., 225 M 200, 731 P2d 937, 44 St. Rep. 167 (1987), followed in In re B.T.B. & B.B., 254 M 449, 840 P2d 558, 49 St. Rep. 594 (1992), and In re J.M.W.E.H., 1998 MT 18, 287 M 239, 954 P2d 26, 55 St. Rep. 65 (1998).

Substantial Credible Evidence to Terminate Parental Rights: Evidence was held sufficient to support trial court's findings that appellant failed to comply with court-approved treatment plan and that appellant's condition which rendered her unfit to be a parent is unlikely to change within a reasonable time. Substantial credible evidence supports the findings, and they may not be set aside unless clearly erroneous. In re R.M.B., Youth in Need of Care, 213 M 29, 689 P2d 281, 41 St. Rep. 1925 (1984).

STANDARD OF REVIEW

Definition of Clear and Convincing Evidence: In the context of parental rights termination cases, clear and convincing evidence is defined as simply a requirement that a preponderance of the evidence be definite, clear, and convincing or that a particular issue be clearly established by a preponderance of the evidence or by a clear preponderance of the proof. The requirement does not call for unanswerable or conclusive evidence. In re E.A.T. & T.A.T., 1999 MT 281, 296 M 535, 989 P2d 860, 56 St. Rep. 1133 (1999). See also In re E.W., C.W., & A.W., 1998 MT 135, 289 M 190, 959 P2d 951 (1998).

Test to Determine if Findings Clearly Erroneous: The Supreme Court adopted the following test to determine whether findings used in terminating parental rights are clearly erroneous: (1) the record will be reviewed to see if the findings are supported by substantial evidence; (2) if the findings are supported by substantial evidence, the Supreme Court will determine whether the trial court misapprehended the effect of the evidence; and (3) if substantial evidence exists and the effect of the evidence has not been misapprehended, the Supreme Court may still find clear error when, although there is evidence to support it, a review of the record leaves the court with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed. Applying the test in the present case, the finding that a continued relationship between parents and children would result in continued abuse of the children was consistent with the evidence and was not clearly erroneous. In re J.S. & P.S., 269 M 170, 887 P2d 719, 51 St. Rep. 1428 (1994), following In re D.H. & F.H., 264 M 521, 872 P2d 803 (1994). Rights of C.F., H.F., & J.F., 2001 MT 19, 304 M 134, 18 P3d 1014 (2001), and In re A.C., 2001 MT 126, 305 M 404, 27 P3d 960 (2001), which overruled In re B.F., 2000 MT 231, 301 M 281, 8 P3d 790 (2000), and subsequent decisions to the extent that In re B.F. suggested that the Supreme Court should review a District Court's findings in a parental termination case to determine whether the findings are supported by clear and convincing evidence.

Failure to Complete Alcohol Treatment Programs Grounds for Termination of Parental Rights: T.M., whose mother died when he was 14 months old, was diagnosed as having fetal alcohol syndrome and required constant parental supervision. His father was repeatedly incarcerated for alcohol-related offenses and unable to take care of T.M. during those times. T.M.'s father also repeatedly failed to complete treatment programs for alcohol abuse, domestic violence, and anger management. The Supreme Court held that in applying its standard of review, the lower court's decision to terminate T.M.'s father's parental rights was not clearly erroneous given the fact that the record showed that the father had failed to complete required treatment and that it was in the best interests of the child that the father's parental rights be terminated. In re Custody of T.M., 267 M 75, 881 P2d 1333, 51 St. Rep. 952 (1994).

Standard of Review — Custody Determinations and Termination of Parental Rights:

The Supreme Court has adopted a different standard of review for nonjury findings of fact than is applied to jury verdicts. The standard set out in Interstate Prod. Credit Ass'n v. DeSaye, 250 M 320, 820 P2d 1285 (1991), is the appropriate standard to be applied to purely factual findings in a proceeding to terminate parental rights. The rule set out in In re Marriage of Burris, 258 M 265, 852 P2d 616 (1993), that the court generally will review conclusions of law to determine whether they are correct, is the appropriate basis for reviewing most conclusions of law in a termination proceeding. However, the conclusion that a child is abused or neglected involves a decision that is neither purely factual nor purely legal and is thus analogous to a District Court's determination of conscionability when reviewing marital and property settlement agreements. Thus, in challenges to a District Court's determination regarding abuse or neglect, review involves a determination as to whether there was an abuse of discretion. In re D.H. & F.H., 264 M 521, 872 P2d 803, 51 St. Rep. 386 (1994).

The same standard of review applies to both termination of parental rights and custody determinations. As set out in In re R.A.D., 231 M 143, 753 P2d 862, 45 St. Rep. 496 (1988), in both instances the District Court's decision is afforded all reasonable presumptions as to the correctness of the determination, and therefore the decision will not be disturbed on appeal unless there is a mistake of law or a finding of fact not supported by substantial evidence that would amount to a clear abuse of discretion. In re S.P., 241 M 190, 786 P2d 642, 47 St. Rep. 190 (1990), distinguished in In re D.H. & F.H., supra, and followed in In re J.J.C.H. & C.M.H., 252 M 158, 827 P2d 812, 49 St. Rep. 193 (1992), In re J.R. & S.D., 253 M 434, 833 P2d 1063, 49 St. Rep. 513 (1992), and in In re Custody & Parental Rights of M.D. 262 M 183, 864 P2d 783, 50 St. Rep. 1505 (1993).

Case Notes

No Standing by Former Parent to Object to Child's Placement or Assert Child's Rights: Once the parent-child relationship is terminated by the District Court, a former parent has no standing to object to the court's subsequent placement of the child with the Department or by adoption. Similarly, a former parent has no standing to assert a violation of the child's rights as guardian ad litem because the former parent no longer represents the child. In re E.A.T. & T.A.T., 1999 MT 281, 296 M 535, 989 P2d 860, 56 St. Rep. 1133 (1999).

Sua Sponte Modification of Postadoption Visitation Agreement Within Discretion of District Court: The rule that in the context of separation agreements made between spouses, parties cannot make binding agreements concerning the support, custody, or visitation of children applies equally to postadoption agreements made between an adopted child's birth parents and adoptive parents. The best interests of the child are paramount, and sua sponte modification of an original visitation agreement in this case was within the discretion of the District Court after determining the best interests of the adopted child. Groves v. Clark, 1999 MT 117, 294 M 417, 982 P2d 446, 56 St. Rep. 490 (1999). See also In re Marriage of Mager, 241 M 78, 785 P2d 198, 47 St. Rep. 97 (1990), and In re Marriage of Widhalm/Miller, 279 M 97, 926 P2d 748, 53 St. Rep. 1067 (1996).

Postadoption Visitation Agreement Between Natural Mother and Adoptive Parents — Responsibilities of District Court: Groves consented to the adoption of her child by the Clarks on the condition that the Clarks sign a visitation agreement allowing Groves to have specified contact with her daughter. After the document was signed and the adoption completed, the Clarks tried to terminate Groves' contact with her daughter. Groves brought an action for specific performance of the visitation agreement, but the District Court held that the agreement was void from its inception under 40-8-125 (now repealed). The Supreme Court reversed, holding that In re C.P., 221 M 180, 717 P2d 1093 (1986), was distinguishable and that the Legislature would not have enacted 40-8-136 (now repealed) if 40-8-125 (now repealed) terminated the interests of the natural parent altogether. The Supreme Court also noted that 40-8-136 (now repealed) also places a burden upon the adoptive parents and, in this case, upon the adoption agency that acted as Groves' agent, to make sure that the visitation agreement was filed in accordance with that statute. The Supreme Court also concluded that under 40-8-114 (now repealed), the District Court has a responsibility to make sure that the enforcement is in the best interests of the child. Groves v. Clark, 277 M 179, 920 P2d 981, 53 St. Rep. 703 (1996). The District Court did not err when it later modified sua sponte the parties' postadoption visitation agreement to provide weekend visitation and weekly telephone contact with the birth mother because the modification was determined to be in the best interests of the child. The finding was supported by substantial evidence, and the court did not misapprehend the effect of the evidence. Adoptive parents do not have sole discretion in deciding whether a postadoption visitation agreement should be enforced. Rather, the adoptive parents' wishes are but one factor among many to be considered in determining the child's best interests under 40-4-212. Groves v. Clark, 1999 MT 117, 294 M 417, 982 P2d 446, 56 St. Rep. 490 (1999).

Refusal to Grant Contact — Child's Best Interest: A natural mother may be allowed to maintain contact with her child after her parental rights have been extinguished only upon a showing that contact is in the child's best interest. In this case, the mother failed to present any testimony regarding the effect such contact would have upon the child. In addition, the record clearly shows that it would not be in the child's best interest to allow the mother to maintain contact with him. In re Baby Boy Scott, 235 M 253, 767 P2d 298, 45 St. Rep. 2362 (1988).

Termination of Parental Rights While Maintaining Possibility of Parental Contact — Adoption Exception: There is no apparent conflict in terminating parental rights while simultaneously maintaining the possibility of parental contact. It was within the trial judge's discretion to terminate the mother's parental rights, due to her recurring mental problems, while allowing contact with the children if the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) determined it was in the children's best interests, since the children had a psychological attachment to their mother. However, when parental rights are terminated, continuing contact is allowable only in exceptional cases. In the event of adoption, continuing contact cannot be court-ordered even with Department approval. In re Declaring V.B., T.B., D.B., & B.B. Youths in Need of Care, 229 M 133, 744 P2d 1248, 44 St. Rep. 1838 (1987), followed in In re D.G., 244 M 17, 795 P2d 489, 47 St. Rep. 1408 (1990).

Parents to Have No Visitation Rights After Termination of Parental Rights Proceeding: Neither 40-8-125 (now repealed) nor 41-3-611 provides for a retention of visitation rights by the natural parent in the event of termination of parental rights and later adoption. Rules for Local Citizen Review Boards: On February 8, 1996, the Montana Supreme Court adopted the following operating rules for local citizen review boards (See 2001 amendment, which substituted reference to a board for reference to a local citizen review board. "Board" is defined in 41-3-1003 as a citizen review board.):

Rule 1. Appointments and Vacancies

Each local citizen review board shall be composed of at least three and not more than five members appointed by the district court judge or judges. See 41-3-1003(2), MCA.

Members of a local citizen review board must be recruited from groups with special knowledge of or interest in foster care and child welfare, which may include but is not limited to adoptive parents and members of the professions of law, medicine, psychology, social work, and education. As far as practicable, members of a local citizen review board shall represent the various socioeconomic and ethnic groups of the area served. See 41-3-1003(3), MCA.

No person employed by the department of public health and human services (hereinafter referred to as the "department"), by any private agency regulated, certified, directed or licensed by or contracting with the department, or by a district court shall serve on any local citizen review board. See 41-3-1003(3), MCA.

If a vacancy occurs on a local citizen review board, a successor shall be appointed to serve the unexpired term. Members may be reappointed and shall continue to serve until a successor is appointed. See 41-3-1006, MCA. The court shall appoint a successor within thirty days from date of notification of the vacancy.

Rule 2. Officers and Employees

Each local citizen review board shall elect annually from its membership a presiding officer and vice presiding officer to serve in the absence of the presiding officer. See 41-3-1006(2), MCA. The officers of the board may be reelected. The Supreme Court Administrators office shall employ citizen review board staff who will provide support services to each local citizen review board.

Rule 3. Oath of Office

Before beginning to serve on a local citizen review board, each member shall swear or affirm to the court that the member will keep confidential the information reviewed by the board and the boards actions and recommendations in individual cases. See 41-3-1007, MCA.

Rule 4. Quorum and Substitutions

A review will generally be conducted with no less than three review board members. The sole exception will be that two members may conduct a review if they both agree to do so and if the citizen review board staff person for the review also agrees. If a member will be unable to attend a scheduled board review, he or she must notify the citizen review board staff as soon as possible. The citizen review board staff shall then obtain the attendance, if possible, of an alternate board member if one exists or the attendance of a member of a different local citizen review board appointed by the same court.

Rule 5. Duties

Board members shall attend all regularly scheduled board reviews and attend and participate in the training provided to the local citizen review boards by the citizen review board staff. The local citizen review board shall keep accurate records and retain those records on file. See 41-3-1010(7), MCA.

Rule 6. Meeting Place and Time

Each local citizen review board shall meet at the nearest department office or another place mutually agreed to by a majority of the board, as often as it considers necessary to carry out the duties of the board. See 41-3-1006(2)(b), MCA. The local citizen review board shall consult with the citizen review board staff in making these decisions.

Rule 7. Decisions of Board

Actions of a local citizen review board shall be decided by consensus or, when consensus is not possible, then by a majority vote.

Rule 8. Conflict of Interest

Whenever a member of a local citizen review board has a potential conflict of interest in a case being reviewed, the member shall declare to the local citizen review board the nature of the potential conflict prior to participating in the case review. The declaration of the member shall be recorded in the official records of the board. If, in the judgment of the majority of the local board, the potential conflict of interest may prevent the member from fairly and objectively reviewing the case, the local board may remove the member from participation in the review. See 41-3-1010(6), MCA.

Rule 9. Removal of Board Members

The court may remove a board member for: (1) non-participation in reviews or training; (2) establishing residence in a judicial district other than the one in which the person was appointed to serve on the review board; (3) violating the duty of keeping confidential the information received by the board and its actions and recommendations in individual cases; or (4) for other good cause as necessary for the administration of the program. See 41-3-1005, MCA.

Rule 10. Notice of Reviews

Citizen review board staff shall send written notice at least twelve days prior to a review of a given case to the department, any other agency directly responsible for the care or placement of the child, the parents or their attorneys, foster parents, surrogate parents, mature children or their attorneys, the court-appointed attorney, guardian ad litem or special advocate of any child, any county attorney or attorney general actively involved in the case, and other interested persons. Notice of the review may also be sent to younger children, if appropriate. Such notice shall briefly describe the review process, shall indicate the precise time and place of the review, and shall invite the recipients to participate in the review. The notice shall further inform these persons of their right to be accompanied by a representative. See 41-3-1004(3), MCA.

Rule 11. Case Review Information

Each local citizen review board shall have access to any records of the district court which are pertinent to the case and any records of the department or other agencies which would be admissible in a dispositional review hearing conducted pursuant to 41-3-406, MCA, including school records and reports of private service providers contained in the records of the department or other agencies. See 41-3-1008(1), MCA.

All requested records not already before the local citizen review board must be submitted by the department within seven working days after receipt of a request. A local citizen review board and the citizen review board staff shall return all records and copies received from the department to the department within seven working days after completion of the review. See 41-3-1008(2), MCA.

A local citizen review board may retain a reference copy of case material used by the board if the material is necessary for the ongoing work of the board with regard to the particular case or to other work of the board and if the confidentiality of the material is continued and protected in the same manner as other materials received from the department. Material retained by the local citizen review board is not subject to disclosure under the public records law. See 41-3-1008(3), MCA.

If a local citizen review board is denied access to requested records, it may request a hearing. The court may require the organization in possession of the records to show cause why the records should not be made available. See 41-3-1008(4), MCA.

Rule 12. Review Hearings

A local citizen review board may agree to hear any person who formally requests to be heard at a childs case review, as long as the person has some connection with or knowledge of the child or family situation. Persons receiving a notice of the hearing may be accompanied to the review by a representative of their choosing, who shall be allowed to present information to the board. See 41-3-1004(3)(c), MCA.

Other persons directly concerned with the citizen review board system or with a legitimate interest in the system may be permitted to attend a review if all interested persons present agree. The Supreme Court Administrator or citizen review board staff may attend all meetings of a citizen review board.

Before participating in a local citizen review board case review, each participant shall swear or affirm to the board that the participant will keep confidential the information disclosed by the board in the case review and to disclose it only as authorized by law. See 41-3-1010(9), MCA.

The review board acting through the presiding officer may excuse any person from any hearing on its own initiative or at the request of any participant.

In the event that a child is present to give information, the presiding officer may ask that a board member or board coordinator meet privately with the child if it is determined that this would facilitate the childs ability to communicate.

A district court judge may choose to relieve a board from reviewing a case if a complete judicial review of the case has taken place within sixty days prior to the next scheduled board review. See 41-3-1010(3), MCA.

Rule 13. Agency Attendance at Reviews

Unless excused from doing so by the local citizen review board, the department and any other agency directly responsible for the care and placement of the child shall require the presence of any employees having knowledge of the case at local board meetings. The local citizen review board may require the presence of specific employees of the department or agency at local board meetings. See 41-3-1012, MCA.

Rule 14. Review Board Findings and Recommendations

After reviewing each case, the local citizen review board shall prepare written findings and recommendations with respect to:

(1) whether reasonable efforts were made prior to the placement to prevent or to eliminate the need for removal of the child from the home and to make it possible for the child to be returned home; (2) the continuing need for and appropriateness of the placement; (3) compliance with the case plan; (4) the progress that has been made toward alleviating the need for placement; (5) a likely date by which the child may be returned home or placed for adoption; (6) other problems, solutions, or alternatives that the board determines should be explored; and (7) whether the district court should appoint an attorney, guardian ad litem or other person as special advocate to represent or appear on behalf of the child. See 41-3-1010(5), MCA.

The citizen review board staff will prepare the findings and recommendations for distribution. The citizen review board staff shall send copies of the local citizen review boards written findings and recommendations to the district court, the department, and other participants in the review. See 41-3-1010(7), MCA. The findings and recommendations shall be mailed within twenty-one days of the review.

The court shall review the findings and recommendations of the local citizen review board within ten days after receiving them. See 41-3-1013(1), MCA.

The department shall review the findings and recommendations of the local citizen review board within ten days after receiving them. The recommendations must be implemented and the case plan modified as the department considers appropriate and as resources permit. The department must give the local citizen review board written notice no later than seventeen days after receipt of the findings and recommendations, if the department does not intend to implement the recommendations. The findings and recommendations of the local citizen review board must be included as part of the case file of the department. See 41-3-1013(2), MCA.

Rule 15. Additional Procedures and Practices

The citizen review board staff may adopt such other administrative practices and procedures not inconsistent with these rules as may be necessary for the administration of the citizen review board system.

Rule 16. Local Rules Allowed

Nothing in these rules shall be construed as limiting the power of the district courts to promulgate rules that do not conflict with these rules.

CHAPTER 4
INTERSTATE PLACEMENT OF CHILDREN

Part 1
Text of Compact

41-4-101. Enactment — provisions.

Administrative Rules

ARM 37.50.901 Interstate Compact on the Placement of Children.

Case Notes

Youth Committed to Program in Nonadjacent State — School District Not Liable for Related Education Costs: The Youth Court committed a youth to a program for sexual offenders located in Minnesota. Cost was $148 a day, of which $48 were education costs, and the court assigned payment of that portion to the youth's school district. On appeal of the assignment, the Supreme Court found that 20-5-314 authorized reciprocal tuition agreements only with states adjoining Montana but found no statutory method to calculate tuition to be paid to a school in a state not adjacent to Montana. Absent specific statutory authority, the Supreme Court held that the Youth Court erred in finding the school district liable for the youth's education costs. In re W.J.H., 226 M 479, 736 P2d 484, 44 St. Rep. 817 (1987).

Definition of "Sending Agency" — Applicability: Mother argued that she should be considered the "sending agency" under Article II of this section and that she therefore had jurisdiction to effect the return of her child whom she had formally released for adoption. The Supreme Court refused to interpret the definition so broadly, holding that such an interpretation would mean that no state or private licensed adoption agency would ever be able to act with assurance that its conduct was final. In re Male Child Born July 15, 1985, to L.C., 221 M 309, 718 P2d 660, 43 St. Rep. 835 (1986).

Jurisdiction After Child Placed for Adoption Out of State: Once a parent voluntarily signed and executed a form relinquishing parental rights to an adoption agency, the adoption agency became the "sending agency" as defined in 41-4-101, Art. II, with the power to place the child for adoption out of state. The only standing the parent then had in Montana courts was to seek a revocation of the relinquishment with the adoption agency as copetitioner. Under 40-6-135(7) (now repealed), the relinquishment became irrevocable once the child was placed for adoption out of state, and Montana lost jurisdiction. In re Male Child Born July 15, 1985, to L.C., 221 M 309, 718 P2d 660, 43 St. Rep. 835 (1986).

Violation of Interstate Compact on Placement of Children — Illegal Placement as a Result — Revocation of Parents' Consent: Failure of prospective adoptive parents to notify the appropriate public authorities in writing before bringing their prospective adoptive child into Montana violated the Interstate Compact on Placement of Children. The prospective adoptive parents' status as custodians did not prevent the operation of the Compact. By virtue of the failure of the prospective adoptive parents to comply with the Compact, the placement of the child with the prospective adoptive parents in Montana constituted illegal placement under the provision of the Compact, and the failure to comply constitutes full and sufficient grounds for the revocation of the previously executed parents' consent. In re the Adoption of T.M.M., 186 M 460, 608 P2d 130 (1980).

Attorney General's Opinions

Responsibility for Tuition of Child in Legal Custody of Local Welfare Department: If a local welfare department has legal custody by a temporary or permanent order for placement of a minor child and places that child with foster parents outside the school district of residence (residence of the natural parents in most cases), tuition would have to be paid by the district of residence. If the placement of the child is outside the state, financial responsibility for school costs would rest with the sending agency under the Interstate Compact on the Placement of Children. 40 A.G. Op. 69 (1984).

Chapter 516 in second sentence, near end after "chapter 5", substituted "part 1 (Uniform Interstate Family Support Act), 41-3-411" for "(Revised Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act), 41-3-406"; and made minor changes in style.

YOUTH COURT ACT

Chapter Compiler's Comments

Section Not Codified: Section 10-1204, R.C.M. 1947, a severability clause, was not codified in the MCA. This clause has not been repealed and is still valid law. Citation may be made to sec. 4, Ch. 329, L. 1974.

Section 10-1205, R.C.M. 1947, dealing with number and gender, was not codified in the MCA, as it was redundant with 1-2-105. This clause has not been repealed and is still valid law. Citation may be made to sec. 5, Ch. 329, L. 1974.

Youth Court — Lack of Jurisdiction to Determine Place and Length of Commitment: B.L.T., a 15-year-old youth, was charged with theft, escape, and criminal mischief. The Youth Court ordered that B.L.T. be committed to the custody of the Department of Family Services (now Department of Corrections), with placement at Pine Hills until he reached the age of 18. The Supreme Court noted that 41-5-103 defines "legal custody" as including the right to determine "with whom the youth shall live and for what period". The Supreme Court noted that even though the Youth Court has continuing jurisdiction over a youth under 41-5-205, placement by the Youth Court is not tantamount to a sentence of imprisonment because the purpose of the Montana Youth Court Act is rehabilitation rather than punishment in a penal institution. This purpose is consistent with 41-5-523 (renumbered 41-5-1512), which allows the Department of Family Services (now Department of Corrections) to determine the place and length of placement of the youth. The Youth Court therefore had no authority to commit to Pine Hills for a specific period of time. In re B.L.T., 258 M 468, 853 P2d 1226, 50 St. Rep. 617 (1993).

Youth Not Denied Equal Protection by Sentencing System More Severe Than System Imposed on Adults: A youth has not been denied her right to equal protection of the law by imposition of a term of commitment upon her that is longer than the criminal sentence an adult would receive for the same act. Adults and minors are not similarly situated with respect to state sentencing laws because: (1) the purpose of their detention is not the same, that of the adult offender being both retributional and rehabilitational; and (2) the physical liberty interests of minors and adults are qualitatively different. In re C.S., 210 M 144, 687 P2d 57, 41 St. Rep. 970 (1984), followed in In re T.A.S., 244 M 259, 797 P2d 217, 47 St. Rep. 1590 (1990).

Juvenile — Traffic Violation — Guilty Plea — Ability to Waive Rights: The provisions of the Youth Court Act do not apply to traffic violations. The youth who was accused of failure to drive in a careful and prudent manner was not subject to a jail sentence if found guilty. He therefore did not have the right to counsel and could knowledgeably waive his rights without the presence of counsel or his parents. State ex rel. Maier v. City Court, 203 M 443, 662 P2d 276, 39 St. Rep. 1560 (1982).

Case Notes

Similar Purposes of Adult and Youth Sentencing Statutes Regarding Public Safety and Rehabilitation: In its transfer order, the Youth Court concluded that adult sentencing policies are similar to the sentencing purposes of the Montana Youth Court Act in that both are designed to ensure rehabilitation, accountability, and protection of the community. Spina contended that the conclusion was a misstatement of the law because the declaration of purpose in the Montana Youth Court Act does not promote accountability. The Supreme Court held that, although not identical, the statutes have similar purposes, including holding individuals accountable for their actions through the imposition of restitutionary measures. St. v. Spina, 1999 MT 113, 294 M 367, 982 P2d 421, 56 St. Rep. 467 (1999).

Youth Legally Capable of Committing Crime — Jurisdiction When Crime Disclosed After Majority: The District Court has jurisdiction to try an individual charged at age 22 for felonies allegedly committed at age 15, as provided in the court's constitutional grant of jurisdiction over all felonies. The Youth Court Act does not contain any direct statement or implication that the Legislature intended to set the minimum age of criminal responsibility at 16, making a 15-year-old incapable of committing a crime. The primary purposes of statutes defining a "delinquent youth" and providing for transfer to District Court are to clarify that delinquency proceedings are noncriminal and to prohibit prosecution of youths in District Court while they are youths. State ex rel. Elliot v. District Court, 211 M 1, 684 P2d 481, 41 St. Rep. 1184 (1984).

Predetention Hearing: The facts of this case did not demonstrate a violation of this statute by the youth court's denial of assistance of available counsel in a predetention hearing. In re Marten, 174 M 343, 570 P2d 1122 (1977).

Dispositional Stage — Fitness of Parents: At the dispositional stage the concern for the best interests of the youth and community is paramount. The court need not, therefore, make specific findings as to the fitness of the parents. In re Geary, 172 M 204, 562 P2d 821 (1977).

Repeal of Conflicting Laws: By the enactment of Ch. 227, L. 1943 (now repealed), and its amendments covering juveniles and creating juvenile courts, the Legislature intended to repeal all prior laws in conflict therewith and amended the general criminal code insofar as it conflicts with the statutes relating to juveniles. State ex rel. Dahl v. District Court, 134 M 395, 333 P2d 495 (1958).

Disqualification of Judge: Section 93-901, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), which governed the removal of judges in civil actions and matters, applies to juvenile delinquency proceedings as it is the legislative intent that delinquency proceedings are to be treated as civil proceedings. State ex rel. Ostoj v. McClernan, 129 M 160, 284 P2d 252 (1955).

Paternal Nature of Proceedings: Proceedings under the juvenile delinquency law, section 10-601, et seq., R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), are in no sense criminal, as the law does not contemplate punishment for an offense committed by an erring minor. The law is no more than an administrative police regulation for the saving of the child and the protection of society. In administering it the courts act more in a paternal than in a judicial capacity, and the proceedings to be conducted under the act are exclusive. State ex rel. Palagi v. Freeman, 81 M 132, 262 P 168 (1927).

1991 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 799, L. 1991, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because [section 14] [41-5-1008, renumbered 41-5-1908] grants the board of crime control authority to adopt rules necessary to implement provisions of this bill.

It is the intent of the legislature, in enacting this bill, to provide alternatives to the detention of youth in adult jails in order to meet the requirements of Senate Bill No. 38, which prohibits the detention of youth in adult jails.

In order to ensure that alternatives to jail are established, the legislature intends that each county have the primary responsibility to provide youth detention services, as required by [section 2] [41-5-810, renumbered 41-5-1803]. In addition, in order to stimulate the development of needed services, the legislature intends to provide state grants authorized in [section 8] [41-5-1002, renumbered 41-5-1902], using state and federal funds, to assist counties in providing a spectrum of services for the detention and care of youth. These services are intended to include but are not limited to youth detention facilities, short-term detention centers, holdovers, attendant care, home detention, and programs for the transportation of youth to regional detention facilities.

The legislature intends that counties receiving state grants should share in the costs of services in order to prevent excessive utilization of services and to give counties a financial incentive to hold down program costs. For this reason, [section 10] [41-5-1004, renumbered 41-5-1904] requires that state grants be provided on a matching basis or, if in a block grant, based on a percentage of the approved cost of services.

In order to discourage the use of secure detention and to promote the use of less costly, nonsecure community-based programs, the legislature intends to provide state grants to counties at a higher rate of payment for such services, including holdovers, attendant care, and other alternatives to secure detention.

The legislature further intends that, as a condition of receiving state grants under [section 8] [41-5-1002, renumbered 41-5-1902], each county shall develop a written plan for providing youth detention services, including alternatives to secure detention. The development of county plans is required to ensure that formal planning does, in fact, occur and to make certain that state grants are not provided for services that are not well planned in advance.

As a further condition of receiving state grants under [section 8] [41-5-1002, renumbered 41-5-1902], each county shall, within a reasonable period of time, demonstrate compliance or substantial compliance with state law and policies contained in the Montana Youth Court Act relating to the detention and placement of youth. The legislature intends that the board of crime control review and monitor counties receiving grants under [section 8] [41-5-1002, renumbered 41-5-1902] to assure compliance or substantial compliance with the Montana Youth Court Act.

Finally, the legislature intends that the board of crime control adopt rules as authorized in [section 14] [41-5-1008, renumbered 41-5-1908]. In adopting rules, the board may:

(1) establish requirements for approved holdovers consistent with the definition of holdovers provided in 41-5-103(13);

(2) designate geographical areas of the state that are eligible for creation of a youth detention region under [section 4] [41-5-812, renumbered 41-5-1805]. In designating these areas, the board shall use available state data showing the number of youth held in detention in each county of the state.

(3) adopt procedures governing the distribution and allocation of funds in accordance with [sections 10 and 11] [41-5-1004 and 41-5-1005, renumbered 41-5-1904 and 41-5-1905];

(4) provide a system to review and monitor counties under [section 9] [41-5-1003, renumbered 41-5-1903] to assure that counties receiving grants are in compliance or substantial compliance with the Montana Youth Court Act;

(5) provide standards for determining compliance or substantial compliance with the Montana Youth Court Act pursuant to [section 9] [41-5-1003, renumbered 41-5-1903]. These standards should be based upon comparable standards for compliance with sections 223(a)(12) and 223(a)(14) of the federal Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974.

(6) establish a process for providing notice and fair hearings required under [section 9] [41-5-1003, renumbered 41-5-1903] in order to terminate state grants to counties that fail to attain compliance or substantial compliance with the Montana Youth Court Act."

Case Notes

Youth Court — Lack of Jurisdiction to Determine Place and Length of Commitment: B.L.T., a 15-year-old youth, was charged with theft, escape, and criminal mischief. The Youth Court ordered that B.L.T. be committed to the custody of the Department of Family Services (now Department of Corrections), with placement at Pine Hills until he reached the age of 18. The Supreme Court noted that this section defines "legal custody" as including the right to determine "with whom the youth shall live and for what period". The Supreme Court noted that even though the Youth Court has continuing jurisdiction over a youth under 41-5-205, placement by the Youth Court is not tantamount to a sentence of imprisonment because the purpose of the Montana Youth Court Act is rehabilitation rather than punishment in a penal institution. This purpose is consistent with 41-5-523 (renumbered 41-5-1512), which allows the Department of Family Services (now Department of Corrections) to determine the place and length of placement of the youth. The Youth Court therefore had no authority to commit to Pine Hills for a specific period of time. In re B.L.T., 258 M 468, 853 P2d 1226, 50 St. Rep. 617 (1993).

Youth Properly Adjudicated Delinquent Improperly Committed to Correctional Facility: H.F. violated the terms of her probation by violating curfew and using alcohol. She was adjudged a delinquent youth and placed in the custody of the Department of Family Services (now Department of Corrections) until age 19. H.F. was also placed in a youth correctional facility on the basis of being a serious juvenile offender. The Supreme Court held that the youth had properly been designated a delinquent youth and placed in the Department's custody. However, the acts that constituted a violation of her probation were not the serious acts set out in the statutory definition of a serious juvenile offender. Therefore, the Youth Court was without authority to place her in a correctional facility. In re H.F., 242 M 381, 791 P2d 53, 47 St. Rep. 826 (1990).

Youth Violating Probation Conditions: H.F.'s mother filed a complaint charging the youth with ungovernable behavior. H.F. entered into a consent agreement that established 13 rules of probation. The youth subsequently violated several of the rules, was adjudicated a delinquent youth, and was committed to the Department of Family Services (now Department of Corrections) until the age of 19. The Supreme Court held that H.F. had been properly designated a delinquent youth because one of the statutory grounds for such adjudication is violation of parole. In re H.F., 242 M 381, 791 P2d 53, 47 St. Rep. 757 (1990).

"Delinquent Youth" — Felony Basis: The Youth Court's finding that the youth had committed a deliberate homicide, although based entirely on circumstantial evidence, was supported by substantial evidence in the record and therefore was sufficient to support a finding that he was a delinquent youth within the meaning of 41-5-103. St. v. Twoteeth, 219 M 101, 711 P2d 789, 42 St. Rep. 1873 (1985).

Youth Legally Capable of Committing Crime — Jurisdiction When Crime Disclosed After Majority: The District Court has jurisdiction to try an individual charged at age 22 for felonies allegedly committed at age 15, as provided in the court's constitutional grant of jurisdiction over all felonies. The Youth Court Act does not contain any direct statement or implication that the Legislature intended to set the minimum age of criminal responsibility at 16, making a 15-year-old incapable of committing a crime. The primary purposes of statutes defining a "delinquent youth" and providing for transfer to District Court are to clarify that delinquency proceedings are noncriminal and to prohibit prosecution of youths in District Court while they are youths. State ex rel. Elliot v. District Court, 211 M 1, 684 P2d 481, 41 St. Rep. 1184 (1984).

Youth in Need of Supervision (Now Youth in Need of Intervention) Who Violates Probation by Truancy Adjudged Delinquent Youth: The Montana Youth Court Act, which allows a youth in need of supervision (now youth in need of intervention) who has violated probation to be adjudged a delinquent youth, is not unconstitutional as violative of the due process, equal protection, or cruel and unusual punishment provisions of the United States and Montana Constitutions. The Supreme Court rejected appellant's assertion that a juvenile status offender who violated the terms of her probation by truancy should not be considered a delinquent youth and subjected to greater punishment for the same conduct which originally gave the Youth Court authority to designate her a youth in need of supervision (now youth in need of intervention). In re C.H., 210 M 184, 683 P2d 931, 41 St. Rep. 997 (1984).

"Delinquent Youth": The Youth Court's finding that the youth had committed a burglary, a charge which the youth admitted and which was supported by the evidence, was sufficient to support a finding that he was a delinquent youth within the meaning of 41-5-103. In re V.R.B., 201 M 127, 653 P2d 133, 39 St. Rep. 2001 (1982).

Dispositional Stage — Fitness of Parents: At the dispositional stage the concern for the best interests of the youth and community is paramount. The court need not, therefore, make specific findings as to the fitness of the parents. In re Geary, 172 M 204, 562 P2d 821 (1977).

Citation to Parents: Although youths admitted violations contained in the petition while on the stand, court was without jurisdiction to order commitment where second hearing proceeded upon citation to parents that was not in compliance with section 10-606, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed). St. v. Johnson, 141 M 1, 374 P2d 504 (1962).

Criminal Court Jurisdiction: The words "and carrying a deadly weapon or weapons with intent to assault" do not modify robbery or any of the other specifically listed crimes; therefore, as to the crime of robbery, possession of a weapon need not be charged. State ex rel. Keast v. District Court, 136 M 367, 348 P2d 135 (1959). (Dissenting opinion, 136 M 367, 348 P2d 135 (1959).)

Age Controlling Element: The controlling element in juvenile laws is age, not minority. Section 12276, R.C.M. 1921 (now repealed), relating to juvenile delinquents, reveals the legislative intention to include rather than exclude married minors. Marriage releases a child from parental authority, but it does not change the status of a child from that of a minor to that of an adult. State ex rel. Foot v. District Court, 77 M 290, 250 P 973, 49 ALR 398 (1926).

Attorney General's Opinions

Delinquent Youth Charge for Probation Violation: A youth in need of supervision (now youth in need of intervention) who violates probation could be charged by petition as a delinquent youth under the definition of a delinquent youth in this section and could then be committed for a period of more than 6 months. This is an alternative to a revocation proceeding under 41-5-533 (renumbered 41-5-1431). 40 A.G. Op. 74 (1984).

County Power — "Big Brothers and Big Sisters": Counties may contract with Big Brothers and Big Sisters organizations to furnish adult companionship, guidance, and counseling to needy and troubled children. 37 A.G. Op. 105 (1978).

Rather, pursuant to 41-5-111 and this section, the Board of County Commissioners is required to fund the legal defense expenses of an indigent youth against whom a petition has been filed in Youth Court. 48 A.G. Evidence and Disposition — Admission in Criminal Proceeding — Reversible Error: On appeal by defendant following his conviction, the Supreme Court held that evidence given in a Youth Court proceeding against a juvenile and evidence of the disposition of the juvenile in such a proceeding are to be excluded for all purposes. It was reversible error requiring a new trial when, upon cross-examination of defendant's character witness, the prosecutor asked the witness if he knew of a charge of attempted rape when defendant was 15 years old and service of 6 months' probation. The questions of the prosecutor in regard to the juvenile proceedings were evidence and inadmissible. St. v. Holzworth, 201 M 54, 651 P2d 1255, 39 St. Rep. 1949 (1982).

No Absolute Right to Counsel at Placement Hearing — Due Process: A delinquent youth was not denied due process when, pursuant to 41-5-523 (renumbered 41-5-1512), he was placed in a youth incarceration facility without an adversarial hearing to decide his placement. Separation of Powers — Commitment by Youth Court: Pursuant to 41-5-523 (renumbered 41-5-1512), the Youth Court committed a delinquent youth to the Department of Family Services

(now Department of Corrections) for placement in an appropriate facility. The youth appealed the placement, contending that the judiciary is the proper decisionmaking body for the placement of delinquent youths. In response to the youth's allegation that it is a violation of the separation of powers clause of the state constitution for the Department to make the placement decision, the Supreme Court held that there is no violation because the statute provides authority to the Youth Court to decide the commitment of delinquent youths and youths in need of supervision (now youth in need of intervention) and that authority is not diminished through granting the Department placement power. The court has the authority to review the placement decision to determine if it is in the best interests of the minor. In re Peterson, 235 M 313, 767 P2d 319, 46 St. Rep. 13 (1989).

Case Notes

Direct Filing of Information in District Court Rather Than Filing in Youth Court Violative of Due Process — Probable Cause Hearing Required: Pursuant to 41-5-206, Butler, a youth, was charged in District Court with attempted deliberate homicide and attempted robbery. Butler moved to have the District Court declare 41-5-206 unconstitutional on grounds that it violated his right to due process by allowing the prosecution to file an information directly in District Court rather than Youth Court without first affording him a hearing. The motion was denied, and Butler appealed. Although it is within the province of the prosecution to move the District Court for leave to file an information in that court if the youth has attained a certain age and is alleged to have committed certain unlawful conduct, the prosecution's discretion ends at that point. Absent a pure prosecutorial waiver system, the ultimate decision rests with the District Court, which must make specific findings that there is probable cause to believe the youth committed the offense and that, because of the seriousness of the offense, the case should be filed in District Court. In Butler's case, the District Court based its decision solely on the affidavit of the prosecution and Butler did not have the opportunity, with assistance of counsel, to challenge the specific findings of the court. Although declining to declare the entire statute unconstitutional, the Supreme Court cited Kent v. U.S., 383 US 541, 16 L Ed 2d 84, 86 S Ct 1045 (1966), in holding that because the decision in this regard is potentially critically important to the youth, under the 14th amendment to the United States Constitution, Butler's right to due process requires that the District Court hold a hearing when rendering a decision under 41-5-206(3). St. v. Butler, 1999 MT 70, 294 M 17, 977 P2d 1000, 56 St. Rep. 291 (1999), followed and applied retroactively in St. v. O'Neill, 1999 MT 224, 296 M 71, 985 P2d 154, 56 St. Rep. 886 (1999).

Termination of Youth Court Jurisdiction — No Bar to Jurisdiction of District Court: The defendant was under 18 years of age when the crime of which he was accused was committed. When the defendant was 20 years old he confessed, and the County Attorney filed a petition in the Youth Court, seeking a declaration that the defendant was a delinquent youth and requesting authority to incarcerate him. The defendant turned 21 before the motion was ruled on. He then was charged with deliberate homicide in District Court. The defendant contended that when the Youth Court lost jurisdiction over him under 41-5-205, the District Court did not have jurisdiction because once jurisdiction has attached under 41-5-203, the District Court can never assume jurisdiction over the offense underlying the Youth Court's proceeding absent transfer under 41-5-206, which did not occur here. The Supreme Court held that on termination of Youth Court jurisdiction, there was no bar to the exercise of jurisdiction by the District Court under Art. VII, sec. 4(1), Mont. Const., 3-5-302, and 46-2-201, over felony proceedings against the defendant. Exclusive original jurisdiction of the Youth Court does not divest a District Court of jurisdiction over crimes committed by a juvenile defendant. St. v. Beach, 217 M 132, 705 P2d 94, 42 St. Rep. 1080 (1985).

Youth Court — Prosecution of Felonies: In two cases pending in the Youth Court, two youths, ages 14 and 15, were charged with numerous felony counts. The State sought to arrest the proceeding in order to move that the youths be transferred to the jurisdiction of the District Court under 41-5-206. The State contends that the requirement for transfer contained in that statute effectively gives the Youth Court all jurisdiction over all felony criminal cases if the youth charged is less than 16 years old and that this provision conflicts with Art. VII, sec. 4(1), Mont. Const., which provides for District Court jurisdiction. The State also contends that this constitutional provision gives the District Court exclusive jurisdiction in all criminal cases amounting to a felony and that a youth under 16 years is legally capable of committing a felony. In denying the state's application for relief, the Supreme Court held that: (1) the term "original jurisdiction", as used in that section of the constitution, does not mean exclusive jurisdiction; and (2) felonies may be prosecuted in the Youth Court because when it acts in jurisdiction it is acting as a District Court. In re T.L.G. & M.E.H., 214 M 164, 692 P2d 1227, 41 St. Rep. 2388 (1984).

Youth Legally Capable of Committing Crime — Jurisdiction When Crime Disclosed After Majority: The District Court has jurisdiction to try an individual charged at age 22 for felonies allegedly committed at age 15, as provided in the court's constitutional grant of jurisdiction over all felonies. The Youth Court Act does not contain any direct statement or implication that the Legislature intended to set the minimum age of criminal responsibility at 16, making a 15-year-old incapable of committing a crime. The primary purposes of statutes defining a "delinquent youth" and providing for transfer to District Court are to clarify that delinquency proceedings are noncriminal and to prohibit prosecution of youths in District Court while they are youths. State ex rel. Elliot v. District Court, 211 M 1, 684 P2d 481, 41 St. Rep. 1184 (1984).

Traffic Offenses by Youths — Jurisdiction: Section 61-12-601 (now repealed), giving District Courts, Justices' Courts, and Municipal and City Courts concurrent original jurisdiction of all proceedings concerning unlawful operation of motor vehicles by persons under the age of 18, does not give jurisdiction to Youth Courts or grant the named courts jurisdiction concurrent with Youth Courts. Youth Court jurisdiction is fixed by 41-5-203, which specifically excludes traffic violations. State ex rel. Maier v. City Court, 203 M 443, 662 P2d 276, 40 St. Rep. 560 (1983).

Possession of Alcohol by Youth — Prosecutor's Choice of Forum: In light of 45-5-624, the County Attorney has sole discretion over which court (Justice's or Youth Court) hears a case involving illegal possession of alcohol by a minor. Edward v. Collings, 193 M 426, 632 P2d 325, 38 St. Rep. 1240 (1981).

Jurisdiction Over Indian Juveniles: The juvenile court did not have jurisdiction of charges of alleged acts of delinquency by enrolled Indians within the exterior boundaries of the reservation, although the tribal court had "remanded" the proceedings to juvenile court pursuant to a reservation code provision, where the State had not accepted jurisdiction through affirmative legislation and special tribal election. Blackwolf v. District Court, 158 M 523, 493 P2d 1293 (1972).

Involuntary Manslaughter: Conviction of involuntary manslaughter (now negligent homicide, 45-5-104), arising from driving an automobile while intoxicated, was proper notwithstanding defendant's contention that since he was a juvenile and "delinquent child" within the meaning of the juvenile code he could be punished only civilly for his acts and not criminally. St. v. Medicine Bull, 152 M 34, 445 P2d 916 (1968).

Right to Trial by Jury:

A child under the age of 16 years may never be tried for a law violation in the District Court. He is solely under the exclusive jurisdiction of the juvenile court. State ex rel. Dahl v. District Court, 134 M 395, 333 P2d 495 (1958). (Annotator's note: See sec. 3, Ch. 60, L. 1985, for crimes for which a child 12 years of age or more may be tried as an adult.)

Where a minor, charged with being a delinquent, made a demand for a jury trial on the day preceding the trial and at the opening of the trial, the court was without jurisdiction to try him without a jury. Application of Banschbach, 133 M 312, 323 P2d 1112 (1958).

Disqualification of Judge: Section 93-901, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), which governs the removal of judges in civil actions and matters, applies to juvenile delinquency proceedings as the legislative intent as found in the juvenile statutes indicates that delinquency proceedings are to be treated as civil proceedings. State ex rel. Ostoj v. McClernan, 129 M 160, 284 P2d 252 (1955).

Criminal Liability: It is the child as defined in section 10-602, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), to whom this part is primarily applicable and the one with whom the juvenile courts and authorities are ordinarily concerned. When such person arrives at the age of 18, he is an adult and under the criminal laws of this state is subject to the same rules of society as is any other adult no matter what his age may be. Exceptions found in this part are those regarding the person between 18 and 21 years of age, and such exceptions have to do with detention of such person and trial of such person if the offense for which he is charged occurred prior to the time he reached the age of 18. State ex rel. Bresnahan v. District Court, 127 M 310, 263 P2d 968 (1953). (See dissenting opinion in 127 M 310, 263 P2d 968 (1953).)

District Court Jurisdiction: Section 10-603, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), provided that the juvenile court shall have exclusive original jurisdiction in proceedings concerning any person under 21 years of age charged with having violated any law of the state, with specified exceptions. The District Court and not the juvenile court had jurisdiction over a defendant who was charged with attempted rape and who was under 21 but over 18 years of age at the time the alleged act was charged to have been committed. State ex rel. Bresnahan v. District Court, 127 M 310, 263 P2d 968 (1953).

(a) alternative facilities do not provide adequate security; and

(b) the youth is kept in an area that provides physical separation as well as sight and sound separation from adults accused or convicted of criminal offenses"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

Style changes were slightly different in the chapters. In each case, the codifier chose appropriate text. The composite section includes all of the offenses enumerated in subsection (1)(b) to reflect the amendments by the chapters.

(c) notice in writing of the time, place, and purpose of the hearing is given to the youth, the youth's counsel, and the youth's parents, guardian, or custodian at least 10 days before the hearing; and

(d) the court finds upon the hearing of all relevant evidence that there is probable cause to believe that:

(i) the youth committed the delinquent act alleged;

(ii) the seriousness of the offense and the protection of the community require treatment of the youth beyond that afforded by juvenile facilities; and

(iii) the alleged offense was committed in an aggressive, violent, or premeditated manner.

(2) In transferring the matter of prosecution to the district court, the court may also consider the following factors:

(a) the sophistication and maturity of the youth, determined by consideration of the youth's home, environmental situation, and emotional attitude and pattern of living;

(b) the record and previous history of the youth, including previous contacts with the youth court, law enforcement agencies, youth courts in other jurisdictions, prior periods of probation, and prior commitments to juvenile institutions. However, lack of a prior juvenile history with youth courts is not of itself grounds for denying the transfer.

(3) The court shall grant the motion to transfer if the youth was 16 years old or older at the time of the conduct alleged to be unlawful and the unlawful act would constitute deliberate homicide as defined in 45-5-102, mitigated deliberate homicide as defined in 45-5-103, or the attempt, as defined in 45-4-103, of either deliberate or mitigated deliberate homicide if the act had been committed by an adult.

WHEREAS, the Legislature finds that when these criminal street gangs establish a presence in Montana cities, the quality of Montana citizens' safety, welfare, and enjoyment of life begins to decline; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature wishes to deter the growing influx of violent criminal street gangs and criminal street gang-related activity in its communities and to protect Montana citizens from the terror associated with violent criminal street gangs; and 1987 Amendments: Chapters 370, 515, and 609 deleted former (1)(a)(ii)(F) that read: "(F) sexual intercourse without consent as defined in 45-5-503"; and in (1)(a)(ii)(I) changed reference to (1)(a)(ii)(I) to reference to (1)(a)(ii)(H).

Chapter 515 in (1)(a)(ii)(C), after "aggravated", inserted "or felony"; in (1)(a)(ii)(H), after "drugs", deleted "for profit"; in (1)(d) substituted "is probable cause" for "are reasonable grounds"; deleted former (2)(c) and (2)(d) that read: "(c) the severity of the offense;

(d) the prospects for adequate protection of the public and the likelihood of reasonable rehabilitation of the youth by the use of procedures, services, and facilities currently available to the youth court"; inserted (3) describing when court must grant motion to transfer prosecution of youth to District Court; in (4), (5), and (6) changed "court" to "youth court"; in (7)(b) substituted "order of the youth court" for "acceptance by the district court"; and in (8), after "offenses", substituted "transferred by the youth court" for "enumerated in subsection (1) of this section".

Chapter 609 near end of (8), after "proper", inserted "including a state youth correctional facility under the procedures of 53-30-212 [renumbered 52-5-111]".

1985 Amendment: Inserted (1)(a)(i) allowing the transfer to District Court of a prosecution involving a youth 12 years of age or older who is charged with sexual intercourse without consent, deliberate homicide, mitigated deliberate homicide, attempted deliberate homicide, or attempted mitigated deliberate homicide; in (1)(a)(ii)(A) substituted "negligent homicide as defined in 45-5-104" for "criminal homicide as defined in 45-5-101"; and at end of (7) inserted "however, no youth under 16 years of age may be confined in the state prison".

1981 Amendment: Inserted subsections (1)(a)(x), allowing attempt of acts enumerated to be transferred to criminal court, (2)(c), allowing court to consider severity of offense in determining transfer, and (6), referring offenses not enumerated to youth or criminal court for trial; substituted "may" for "shall" after "court" in the introductory clause of (2); added the provision relating to prior juvenile history with youth courts to the end of (2)(b).

Case Notes

Statute Allowing Transfer of Jurisdiction of Juvenile to District Court Not Violative of Constitutional Separation of Powers Doctrine: Bedwell was 17 when he was charged with burglary, theft, and misdemeanor criminal mischief. The motion to charge him as an adult under this section was granted. Bedwell moved to dismiss on grounds that this section unconstitutionally violated the separation of powers doctrine, impermissibly vesting the court with prosecutorial powers to determine the manner in which to enforce laws with respect to specified juvenile offenders, by allowing the courts discretion to decide whether a juvenile should be treated as an adult. The District Court agreed, finding that courts were allowed to indirectly determine what charges should be filed against a juvenile by determining the legal forum in which a juvenile proceeding should be prosecuted, and remanded for filing in Youth Court. The state appealed. The Supreme Court reversed. In determining whether to accept jurisdiction, a District Court is not making a prosecutorial decision on how the law should be enforced or deciding whether a prosecution should go forward or what charges should be brought. The statute merely allows District Courts a proper judicial function to exercise discretion in determining whether to accept or reject jurisdiction over juvenile offenders under specified circumstances, which does not usurp or intrude into prosecutorial duties and powers of the County Attorney or intrude a court into Executive Branch powers. Thus, this section is not violative of the separation of powers doctrine. St. v. Bedwell, 1999 MT 206, 295 M 476, 985 P2d 150, 56 St. Rep. 805 (1999).

Findings and Conclusions in Transfer Order Not in Error — Transfer Affirmed: Spina was charged with killing her father. She raised numerous arguments that certain issues were not properly considered and that the findings of fact and conclusions of law in a Youth Court transfer order were erroneous and a simple verbatim adoption of the state's proposed findings. The Supreme Court considered each argument in turn and concluded that there was probable cause to believe that Spina committed the delinquent act alleged, that the seriousness of the offense and the protection of the community required treatment of Spina beyond that afforded by juvenile facilities, and that the alleged offense was committed in an aggressive, violent, or premeditated manner. The Youth Court's failure to specifically set forth findings regarding Spina's level of maturity was not reversible error, nor was it in error in finding that Spina was in need of long-term secure care beyond age 19. The Youth Court did not abuse its discretion in transferring Spina's case to District Court. St. v. Spina, 1999 MT 113, 294 M 367, 982 P2d 421, 56 St. Rep. 467 (1999).

No Error in Youth Court Conclusion That Incarceration Not Mandatory if Youth Convicted in District Court: In its transfer order, the Youth Court concluded that transferring Spina into the adult system neither mandated incarceration nor precluded rehabilitation and that although any commitment of the youth must necessarily be to the Department of Corrections, the Department was not necessarily bound to incarcerate Spina. The Supreme Court agreed. The sentencing guidelines in 46-18-201 provide a District Court with a number of sentencing options, including imposition of a deferred or suspended sentence. The Youth Court was correct in concluding that Spina's conviction would not mandate incarceration. St. v. Spina, 1999 MT 113, 294 M 367, 982 P2d 421, 56 St. Rep. 467 (1999).

Transfer of Youth Court Case to District Court Not Violative of Equal Protection Rights: Spina argued that the statute allowing transfer of her Youth Court case to the District Court resulted in an equal protection violation because of discriminatory treatment on the basis of her gender, asserting that the transfer was primarily motivated by the lack of affordable placement options for girls in the juvenile system. However, the primary concern in Spina's case was not that placements were not available, but that the duration of placement in the juvenile system would not be long enough to rehabilitate her. Further, the quality of supervision required for a juvenile like Spina, who was charged with killing her father, was not available for male or female offenders, so the concern was not triggered by gender. State placement policy with regard to juvenile offenders convicted and sentenced as adults has no bearing on the constitutionality of the transfer statute. Hence, it is not the transfer statute that generates any alleged disparities in treatment but rather the state placement policies, and the policies were not at issue in this case. Spina's challenge of the transfer statute on equal protection grounds failed. St. v. Spina, 1999 MT 113, 294 M 367, 982 P2d 421, 56 St. Rep. 467 (1999).

Transfer of Youth Court Case to District Court Not Violative of Minor's Constitutional Rights: Spina argued that the statute allowing transfer of her Youth Court case to the District Court resulted in violation of her rights under Art. II, sec. 15, Mont. Const., which guarantees to minors the same fundamental rights afforded to adults, and under Art. II, sec. 24, Mont. Const., which guarantees the right to a fair trial. The Supreme Court considered alleged violations of the right against self-incrimination, the right to effective assistance of counsel, the right to a fair trial, and the right to a presumption of innocence, finding that Spina's arguments were without merit. The transfer statute did not violate Spina's constitutional rights. St. v. Spina, 1999 MT 113, 294 M 367, 982 P2d 421, 56 St. Rep. 467 (1999).

Direct Filing of Information in District Court Rather Than Filing in Youth Court Violative of Due Process — Probable Cause Hearing Required: Pursuant to this section, Butler, a youth, was charged in District Court with attempted deliberate homicide and attempted robbery. Butler moved to have the District Court declare this section unconstitutional on grounds that it violated his right to due process by allowing the prosecution to file an information directly in District Court rather than Youth Court without first affording him a hearing. The motion was denied, and Butler appealed. Although it is within the province of the prosecution to move the District Court for leave to file an information in that court if the youth has attained a certain age and is alleged to have committed certain unlawful conduct, the prosecution's discretion ends at that point. Absent a pure prosecutorial waiver system, the ultimate decision rests with the District Court, which must make specific findings that there is probable cause to believe the youth committed the offense and that, because of the seriousness of the offense, the case should be filed in District Court. In Butler's case, the District Court based its decision solely on the affidavit of the prosecution and Butler did not have the opportunity, with assistance of counsel, to challenge the specific findings of the court. Although declining to declare the entire statute unconstitutional, the Supreme Court cited Kent v. U.S., 383 US 541, 16 L Ed 2d 84, 86 S Ct 1045 (1966), in holding that because the decision in this regard is potentially critically important to the youth, under the 14th amendment to the United States Constitution, Butler's right to due process requires that the District Court hold a hearing when rendering a decision under subsection (3) of this section. St. v. Butler, 1999 MT 70, 294 M 17, 977 P2d 1000, 56 St. Rep. 291 (1999), followed and applied retroactively in St. v. O'Neill, 1999 MT 224, 296 M 71, 985 P2d 154, 56 St. Rep. 886 (1999).

Indian Defendant — Failure to Challenge Transfer to District Court and Failure to Reserve Right to Appeal Issues — District Court Jurisdiction Upheld: After the state filed an amended petition in Youth Court to have Spotted Blanket declared a delinquent youth and a serious juvenile offender, the state and Spotted Blanket stipulated to transferring the case to District Court. Later, Spotted Blanket objected to the jurisdiction of the District Court, arguing that the Youth Court abused its discretion in making the transfer because there was insufficient evidence that the juvenile facilities were inadequate, as required by subsection (1)(d)(ii) of this section (see 1997 amendment), and because the District Court failed to make a finding of probable cause concerning some of the counts against him, as required by the same statute. The Supreme Court declined to address those issues, noting that: (1) Spotted Blanket's notice of appeal was limited to the District Court order denying his motion to dismiss and did not include the order transferring the case to District Court; (2) Spotted Blanket never challenged the propriety of the transfer to District Court and, citing the requirements of 46-12-204, St. v. Weeks, 270 M 63, 891 P2d 477 (1995), and St. v. Swoboda, 276 M 479, 918 P2d 296 (1996), holding that claims of error not properly preserved in the trial court are barred from appellate review; (3) Spotted Blanket stipulated to the transfer and that a probable cause hearing would not be necessary; and (4) Spotted Blanket pleaded guilty to the felony counts and noting that the plea acts as a waiver of nonjurisdictional defects under the Supreme Court's prior opinions in St. v. Butler, 272 M 286, 900 P2d 908 (1995), and Stilson v. St., 278 M 20, 924 P2d 238 (1996). St. v. Spotted Blanket, 1998 MT 59, 288 M 126, 955 P2d 1347, 55 St. Rep. 253 (1998).

Lack of Testimony Regarding Inadequacy of Juvenile Facilities — Transfer to District Court Inappropriate: A Youth Court order transferring charges of attempted deliberate homicide, attempted robbery, and felony theft to the District Court was an abuse of discretion absent testimony that juvenile facilities were inadequate to deal with the youth and in light of a lack of substantial credible evidence supporting the findings of the Youth Court. An assumption that juvenile facilities are inadequate based on the mere fact that a youth is charged with a serious offense ignores the rehabilitative purpose of the Montana Youth Court Act. In re J.K.C., 270 M 342, 891 P2d 1169, 52 St. Rep. 221 (1995), distinguishing In re K.M.H., 231 M 180, 752 P2d 162 (1988), In re T.N., 267 M 81, 881 P2d 1329, 51 St. Rep. 955 (1994), and In re J.D.W., 267 M 87, 881 P2d 1324, 51 St. Rep. 958 (1994).

Error to Assume Juvenile Facilities Inadequate Based Upon Seriousness of Youth's Crimes: The Youth Court took judicial notice of the length of time that a Youth Court may commit a juvenile and ordered J.D.W.'s case transferred to District Court. The Supreme Court held that there was no testimony given by Pine Hills staff or anyone else that the average length of stay in a juvenile facility would be inadequate for rehabilitation in J.D.W.'s case and that therefore it was error for the Youth Court to assume that a juvenile facility was inadequate based solely on the seriousness of the juvenile's crimes. In re J.D.W., 267 M 87, 881 P2d 1324, 51 St. Rep. 958 (1994).

Transfer Proper When Youth Poses Threat to Community and Juvenile Facilities Inadequate: T.N. was accused of shooting his father. The District Court decided to transfer the case to adult court on the basis that a Youth Court could not order his commitment to a treatment facility for a period as long as might be needed and on the basis that the juvenile facilities were not equipped to provide the type of treatment that T.N. might need. T.N. argued that the District Court erred in transferring him because he did not pose a threat to the community. The Supreme Court held that there was no error because the record did include medical testimony that although it was unlikely that there would be another violent occurrence, it could not be ruled out and because the record supported the finding that the juvenile facilities were inadequate for the potential needs of T.N.'s rehabilitation. In re T.N., 267 M 81, 881 P2d 1329, 51 St. Rep. 955 (1994).

Decision to Transfer Within Discretion of Youth Court: The decision whether to transfer a case from Youth Court to District Court, after the statutory criteria have been considered, is within the discretion of the Youth Court. In re J.A., 255 M 214, 841 P2d 1130, 49 St. Rep. 972 (1992), followed in In re T.N., 267 M 81, 881 P2d 1329, 51 St. Rep. 955 (1994), and in In re J.D.W., 267 M 87, 881 P2d 1324, 51 St. Rep. 958 (1994). In re T.N. was followed in St. v. Spina, 1999 MT 113, 294 M 367, 982 P2d 421, 56 St. Rep. 467 (1999).

Finding of Aggressive Behavior Sufficient to Warrant Transfer to District Court: Evidence of aggressive behavior by a youth that led to the shooting of another youth constituted sufficient probable cause under the statutory criteria of this section to warrant transfer of the case to District Court. In re J.A., 255 M 214, 841 P2d 1130, 49 St. Rep. 972 (1992).

Arrest for Felony Assault (now Assault With a Weapon) and Robbery — Transfer to District Court Proper: The jurisdiction over a 17 year old was properly transferred to District Court after the Youth Court considered testimony and evidence relating to the youth's arrest for felony assault (now assault with a weapon) and robbery, prior criminal record, negative psychological evaluation, and sophistication and maturity; the seriousness of the offenses; the protection of society; and the inappropriateness of treatment in the juvenile program. In re B.J., 239 M 371, 780 P2d 1132, 46 St. Rep. 1756 (1989).

Mandatory Transfer of Prosecution of Older Youth to District Court — No Denial of Equal Protection Under U.S. or Montana Constitution: Plaintiff alleged that the automatic transfer provisions of subsection (3) of this section infringed upon a youth's rights to equal protection under the equal protection provisions of the U.S. Constitution and the Montana Constitution. The Supreme Court held that a classification based on age and gravity of the offense for automatic transfer of prosecution to District Court from Youth Court requires only a rational relationship to a legitimate state interest. The court found that interest in curbing homicides committed by teenagers and in protecting society from these violent offenders. Strict scrutiny analysis under federal equal protection is not required because procedural due process is not a fundamental right, nor is age a suspect class. Under Art. II, sec. 4, Mont. Const., the Supreme Court determined that no provision exists in the Montana Constitution that provides a youth with a fundamental right to special treatment, and thus the state's middle tier analysis is inapplicable and only a rational relationship to a legitimate state interest is required. In re Wood, 236 M 118, 768 P2d 1370, 46 St. Rep. 228 (1989).

Mandatory Transfer of Prosecution of Older Youth to District Court — Not Violation of Doctrine of Separation of Powers: The automatic transfer provisions of subsection (3) of this section, providing for the prosecution of older youth for certain offenses in District Court rather than Youth Court, are not a usurpation of the judiciary's power to hear and decide motions and is not in violation of the Montana Constitution's requirement for separation of powers. The transfer provision is within the Legislature's inherent power to create other courts under Art. VII, sec. 1, Mont. Const. The 1987 amendment providing for transfer without hearing on mitigating factors was merely a revision of protection afforded youth under earlier legislative action and not a violation of the separation of powers doctrine. In re Wood, 236 M 118, 768 P2d 1370, 46 St. Rep. 228 (1989).

Transfer of Youth to District Court for Homicide Prosecution — Age of Youth Determines Whether Hearing Necessary: For a youth between 12 years and 16 years of age charged with homicide, a hearing may be held to determine whether prosecution should be transferred to District Court. For youth 16 years old or older, no hearing is authorized, and the youth must be transferred to District Court upon a motion by the County Attorney. In re Wood, 236 M 118, 768 P2d 1370, 46 St. Rep. 228 (1989).

Youth Sixteen Years Old and Older — Mandatory Transfer of Homicide Prosecution to District Court — No Denial of Due Process: A youth does not have a constitutional due process right to a hearing to determine whether a homicide prosecution should be transferred to District Court. However, whatever criteria is set in state law for the transfer must be followed. The Supreme Court held that in a homicide prosecution, the requirement for a transfer hearing for youth between 12 years and 16 years of age and for a mandatory transfer for youth 16 years old or older is permissible. Since no irregularities in the transfer of an older youth for homicide prosecution in District Court were alleged, there was no violation of his federal due process rights. In re Wood, 236 M 118, 768 P2d 1370, 46 St. Rep. 228 (1989).

Transfer of Fifteen Year Old to District Court on Homicide Charge: Substantial credible evidence supported a Youth Court finding that a 15-year-old minor be transferred to District Court in light of the seriousness of the offense and the need to protect the community. In re K.M.H., 231 M 180, 752 P2d 162, 45 St. Rep. 526 (1988).

Termination of Youth Court Jurisdiction — No Bar to Jurisdiction of District Court: The defendant was under 18 years of age when the crime of which he was accused was committed. When the defendant was 20 years old he confessed, and the County Attorney filed a petition in the Youth Court, seeking a declaration that the defendant was a delinquent youth and requesting authority to incarcerate him. The defendant turned 21 before the motion was ruled on. He then was charged with deliberate homicide in District Court. The defendant contended that when the Youth Court lost jurisdiction over him under 41-5-205, the District Court did not have jurisdiction because once jurisdiction has attached under 41-5-203, the District Court can never assume jurisdiction over the offense underlying the Youth Court's proceeding absent transfer under 41-5-206, which did not occur here. The Supreme Court held that on termination of Youth Court jurisdiction, there was no bar to the exercise of jurisdiction by the District Court under Art. VII, sec. 4(1), Mont. Const., 3-5-302, and 46-2-201, over felony proceedings against the defendant. Exclusive original jurisdiction of the Youth Court does not divest a District Court of jurisdiction over crimes committed by a juvenile defendant. St. v. Beach, 217 M 132, 705 P2d 94, 42 St. Rep. 1080 (1985).

Prosecution of Felonies in Youth Court Proper: In cases pending in the Youth Court, two youths, ages 14 and 15, were charged with numerous felony counts. The State sought to arrest the proceeding in the Youth Court to move that the youths be transferred to the jurisdiction of the District Court under this statute. The State contends that the requirement for transfer (that a youth charged with a felony must have been 16 years of age or older at the time of the alleged unlawful conduct before the charges may be transferred to District Court) effectively gives the Youth Court all jurisdiction over all felony criminal cases if the youth charged is less than 16 years old and that this provision conflicts with Art. VII, sec. 4(1), Mont. Const., which provides for District Court jurisdiction. The State further contends that this constitutional provision gives the District Court exclusive jurisdiction in all criminal cases amounting to a felony and that a youth under 16 years is legally capable of committing a felony. In denying the state's application, the Supreme Court held that: (1) the term "original jurisdiction", as used in that section of the constitution, does not mean exclusive jurisdiction; and (2) felonies may be prosecuted in the Youth Court because when it acts in jurisdiction it is acting as a District Court. In re T.L.G. & M.E.H., 214 M 164, 692 P2d 1227, 41 St. Rep. 2388 (1984).

Accountability: The youth was charged with criminal homicide under the accountability statute. The Supreme Court rejected the youth's argument that the Youth Court could not transfer the case to the adult court because he was not charged under the criminal homicide statute, 45-5-101 (now repealed). The Supreme Court stated that there is no separate offense of accountability, only the underlying offense which has been physically committed by another but for which the youth is equally responsible. (The case was reversed on other grounds.) In re B.D.C., 211 M 216, 687 P2d 655, 41 St. Rep. 1318 (1984).

Finding Not Supported by Evidence: A petition was filed alleging a youth to be a delinquent youth, based on an allegation that the youth was guilty of criminal homicide. The Youth Court ordered a 45-day evaluation at Pine Hills, which reported to the Youth Court that Pine Hills School (now Pine Hills Youth Correctional Facility) was an appropriate placement for the youth and that the staff could help him in dealing with the problems he was having. The Youth Court later sought to transfer the case to the District Court and in its findings found that the juvenile facilities were inadequate for the youth in light of the seriousness of the offense and the need to protect the community. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that there was no evidence to support the Youth Court's adequacy of placement finding and therefore the Youth Court had no jurisdiction to transfer the case to District Court. In re B.D.C., 211 M 216, 687 P2d 655, 41 St. Rep. 1318 (1984).

Youth Legally Capable of Committing Crime — Jurisdiction When Crime Disclosed After Majority: The District Court has jurisdiction to try an individual charged at age 22 for felonies allegedly committed at age 15, as provided in the court's constitutional grant of jurisdiction over all felonies. The Youth Court Act does not contain any direct statement or implication that the Legislature intended to set the minimum age of criminal responsibility at 16, making a 15-year-old incapable of committing a crime. The primary purposes of statutes defining a "delinquent youth" and providing for transfer to District Court are to clarify that delinquency proceedings are noncriminal and to prohibit prosecution of youths in District Court while they are youths. State ex rel. Elliot v. District Court, 211 M 1, 684 P2d 481, 41 St. Rep. 1184 (1984).

Illegal Pretrial Process and Procedure — State's Right to Charge and Try Case: Youth Court petition initiating proceedings did not state the facts constituting the offense youth was charged with in ordinary and concise language so as to enable a person of common understanding to know what was intended. The petition did not include a witness list. An arrest warrant was issued out of the Youth Court, although there is no provision in the Youth Court Act for issuance of an arrest warrant. Presumably the warrant was issued under 46-6-201, but there was no showing of probable cause supported by oath or affirmation reduced to writing. The youth had already been arrested in Oklahoma at the time the warrant was issued. By what process and authority he was arrested in Oklahoma was not shown, nor was it shown he was arrested by a law enforcement officer. He was subsequently transferred to the District Court for trial as an adult and convicted of two counts of deliberate homicide. The Youth Court proceedings from issuance of the warrant for arrest onward were patently defective. However, this did not preclude the state from having him transferred to the District Court, proceeding against him, and obtaining a conviction. St. v. Woods, 203 M 401, 662 P2d 579, 40 St. Rep. 533 (1983).

Transfer From Youth Court to District Court — Youth Court Hearing — Valid Initiation of District Court Action: At Youth Court hearing at which it was decided to transfer youth to District Court for trial as an adult, testimony established probable cause for filing of an information in the District Court. This procedure satisfied the state constitutional requirement that a criminal action in the District Court be initiated either by an information after examination and commitment by a magistrate or after leave granted by the District Court. St. v. Woods, 203 M 401, 662 P2d 579, 40 St. Rep. 533 (1983).

Transfer to District Court — Hearing on Youth Court Petition Against Youth Unnecessary: The provision in 41-5-516 (now repealed) that a petition alleging delinquency or need of supervision (now intervention) shall be dismissed with prejudice if a hearing on the petition is not begun within 15 days after service does not apply when the charges are subject to transfer to the District Court and a timely motion to transfer is made. St. v. Woods, 203 M 401, 662 P2d 579, 40 St. Rep. 533 (1983).

Substantial Credible Evidence to Support Youth Court's Determination: N.C.F., a minor, is accused of shooting a 16-year-old girl in the face with a sawed-off shotgun and killing her. The State filed a motion requesting the Youth Court to waive its jurisdiction and to transfer jurisdiction to the District Court. At a hearing on the State's motion, evidence was offered that N.C.F. occasionally dry-fired a gun while it was pointed at an individual. Testimony was also offered that there was no Youth Court facility available for treatment of N.C.F., because of his size, age, independent lifestyle, and level of maturity. Based on the evidence, the Youth Court issued an order granting the State's motion. N.C.F. appealed the order. The Supreme Court found that there was substantial credible evidence to support the Youth Court's determination. In re N.C.F., 197 M 390, 643 P2d 236, 39 St. Rep. 634 (1982).

Youth Court — Holding Youth Without Arraignment Until Transfer to District Court: Defendant, age 17, was arrested and charged with homicide. Defendant refused to be interviewed by a Youth Court probation officer or a psychologist. The State moved to transfer prosecution to the District Court. Because of lack of an interview, the probation officer could not recommend for or against transfer and so advised the court. The motion was granted and defendant was ordered to be tried as an adult. Defendant contends that the cause of the transfer was his refusal to be interviewed and that the court placed on him the burden to justify continuation in Youth Court. Placing the burden on him, defendant claims, would force him to waive his right against self-incrimination. That is not the case here; the record indicates that the Youth Court considered each factor in 41-5-206. Once the Youth Court was refused the interviews, the only source of information it could rely on was that coming other than from the defendant. In doing so the Youth Court considered each of the factors set out in 41-5-206. St. v. Rodriguez, 192 M 411, 628 P2d 280, 38 St. Rep. 578F (1981).

Insanity Defense — Discretion of Judge — Attempt: A transfer hearing is not an adjudicatory stage of the juvenile process. Appellant's constitutional right to assert the insanity defense was not denied when judge failed to allow entry of the plea at the transfer hearing. The Youth Court did not abuse its discretion in transferring the matter. Lastly, the court erred in transferring charge of attempted homicide because that charge is not specifically enumerated. In re Stapelkempr, 172 M 192, 562 P2d 825 (1977).

Factors Court Must Consider — Evidence to Be Preserved For Appeal: When juvenile was arrested and charged with attempted robbery, robbery, and aggravated assault, and State attempted to waive him to adult criminal court, evidence presented at transfer hearing was insufficient to waive jurisdiction because State failed to present evidence concerning requirements in this section and cause was remanded to Youth Court. The importance of a transfer hearing demands that the Youth Court carefully consider all factors set forth in this section, and evidence relevant to each factor should be preserved in the transcript in order to permit meaningful appellate review. In re Stevenson, 167 M 220, 538 P2d 5 (1975).

Constitutional Requirements: Conventional findings of fact or an express, formal statement of the reasons for ordering the waiver and transfer to the District Court are not required; if the reasons motivating the exercise of the juvenile court's discretion in ordering the waiver and transfer are sufficiently apparent in the record to allow meaningful appellate review, constitutional requirements are satisfied. Transfer of defendant to District Court on charge of second degree assault under former law was not an abuse of discretion when at the time of the commission of the crime the defendant was a juvenile by less than 1 month, the victim was brutally assaulted without provocation, the defendant was far removed from influences of family, home, or normal adult supervision, and trial court found that the probable cause was of such a nature that failure to bring the defendant to trial on the charge of second degree assault would have failed to preserve the best and necessary interest of the people of the State of Montana. Lujan v. District Court, 161 M 287, 505 P2d 896 (1973).

Criminal Information: District Court has no jurisdiction to authorize or order the filing of a criminal information against a juvenile child of less than 16 years of age or to try such child in the District Court. State ex rel. Dahl v. District Court, 134 M 395, 333 P2d 495 (1958). (Annotator's note: Chapter 60, sec. 3, L. 1985, amended 41-5-206 to permit the transfer to District Court of criminal proceedings against youths 12 years of age or older who are charged with one of several serious crimes listed in the statute.)

Exemption of Juvenile Delinquents From Sexual Offender Registration: A juvenile who is adjudicated delinquent under the Montana Youth Court Act and whose case has not been transferred to District Court under this section is exempt from the registration requirements of the Sexual Offender Registration Act, 46-18-254 (now repealed); 46-18-255; and Title 46, ch. 23, part 5. 43 A.G. Op. 45 (1989).

1999 Amendment: Chapter 537 in middle of first sentence in (1) substituted "part 16" for "part 11". Amendment effective April 30, 1999.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 537, L. 1999, provided: "WHEREAS, juveniles who are 17 to 18 years of age frequently have difficulty completing their Youth Court sentences, particularly felony offenses, before they reach age 18; and

WHEREAS, extending juvenile jurisdiction with the possibility of an adult sanction for failure to comply with the conditions of a stayed sentence or for additional criminal behavior by the youth has been shown to be an effective incentive in other states to rehabilitate juveniles to keep them out of the adult correctional system and allow them to pay restitution, finish treatment, and complete their education; and

WHEREAS, the maximum extension or period of jurisdiction may not exceed the period of an adult sentence without violating equal protection; and

WHEREAS, limiting section 41-5-208, MCA, supervision transfers after the youth reaches the age of 18 to additional community corrections programs of the Department of Corrections subject to the same adult sentence limit on supervision will also allow juveniles to complete their sentences, to be held accountable, and to avoid an adult conviction, without violating equal protection of the laws."

Case Notes

Revocation of Juvenile Offender's Suspended Sentence and Commitment to Department Authorized: Following a dispositional hearing, the Youth Court entered an order declaring Lesmeister a delinquent youth and serious juvenile offender, transferred the 18 year old's case to District Court, and placed the youth on probation until age 25, with the entire commitment suspended upon certain conditions. One year later, on a petition filed by the Cascade County Attorney alleging numerous probation violations, the District Court revoked Lesmeister's suspended sentence and committed the youth to the Department of Corrections until age 25. On appeal, Lesmeister challenged the legality of the court's commitment to the Department, arguing that because he was not incarcerated in a youth facility when his case was transferred to the District Court, this section allowed the court to impose only the conditions prescribed under 46-18-201 through 46-18-203, which did not include a sentence to the Department of Corrections. In affirming the District Court decision, the Supreme Court ruled that state law authorizes a District Court to impose a sentence to commit an offender to the Department of Corrections when all but the first 5 years are suspended. St. v. Lesmeister, 2000 MT 318, 302 M 500, 15 P3d 392, 57 St. Rep. 1344 (2000).

Youth Court Transfer Provision Illegal Mechanism to Rectify Youth's Failure to Pay Restitution — Ex Post Facto: As a teenager, Young entered a consent decree to dispose of three felony property offenses. He was ordered to pay $3,788 in restitution while on probation, but paid only $125. Later, Young was adjudicated as delinquent and sentenced to the Department of Corrections until age 18, with conditions. Restitution was not required, but the prior restitution was reinstated. Young then committed new offenses and was institutionalized until age 19, but restitution was not made by the time that he was 19. Young's cases were then transferred to District Court pursuant to this section, and he was placed on probation until the restitution was paid. Young appealed the transfer of the case, contending that he had successfully completed a residential treatment program in Utah according to the court's disposition order and that applying this section violated state and federal constitutional ex post facto provisions because the law was not in effect when he committed any of the offenses and because applying the transfer provisions would increase the possible penalty for offenses that he previously admitted. The Supreme Court found that ex post facto application of the transfer provisions did not provide a lawful mechanism to rectify Young's failure to pay restitution. Applying the two-part test in St. v. Leistiko, 256 M 32, 844 P2d 97 (1992), the court held that the transfer provision was retrospective because it was not in effect when Young committed the offenses and that this section is more onerous than the prior law because it changed the legal consequences by allowing the Youth Court to extend probation for an additional 6 years through transfer to the District Court. Since Young had successfully completed the Utah residential treatment program and was age 20 at the time that the appeal was decided, the cases should be closed. In re Young, 1999 MT 195, 295 M 394, 983 P2d 985, 56 St. Rep. 759 (1999).

Chapter 609 at beginning of (1), after "Youth court", inserted "and youth court-related department"; near middle of (4), after "youth court", inserted "or the department"; and at beginning of (5), after "youth court", inserted "and department".

Permissible Use of Records of Juvenile Crimes — Impeachment: Before his trial on charges of sexual intercourse without consent and sexual assault, the defendant filed a motion to allow his counsel to inspect the Youth Court records of any complaining witnesses on the grounds that the records might have a bearing on the competency and veracity of those witnesses. The motion was denied, and the judge said he would examine the records to determine if any of the girls should be examined by a psychologist before testifying. The Supreme Court found that the judge's ruling denying the defendant's motion to inspect denied him the right to confront the witnesses against him. However, their review of the juvenile records convinced them that the error here was harmless. They declined to adopt a rule allowing evidence of prior juvenile convictions to be used as evidence to attack the general credibility of a witness. The permissible use of those juvenile records was confined to demonstrating, by cross-examination, a witness's bias, prejudice, or motive. It was within the discretion of the trial judge to determine competency, and his findings would not be overturned absent an abuse of discretion. St. v. Camitsch, 192 M 124, 626 P2d 1250, 38 St. Rep. 563 (1981).

Juvenile Court Records Not Criminal: Trial court was not in error in reading into the record in open court prior events of defendant's life as disclosed by his juvenile court record where the juvenile court record was not challenged by defendant or his counsel. (See sections 10-601 through 10-611, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed).) St. v. Manning, 149 M 517, 429 P2d 625 (1967).

Use of Prior Juvenile Record: The reading into the record in open court of defendant's prior juvenile record was proper where the events contained in the juvenile record were not criminal. The court after reading the written record asked if there was any legal excuse why judgment and sentence of court should not be pronounced, and no challenge to the recited juvenile record was made. (See sections 10-601 through 10-611, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed).) St. v. Manning, 149 M 517, 429 P2d 625 (1967).

(3) The putative father registry requirements apply to children born on or after October 1, 1997."

1995 Amendments — Coordination Instruction — Composite Section: Chapter 251 in (1), after "fingerprints", inserted "DNA records"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 27, 1995. The amendment in (1) was rendered void by sec. 10, Ch. 466.

Section 5, Ch. 466, L. 1995, amended this section. Chapter 466 also contained a coordination instruction in sec. 10 that provided that if both Ch. 466 and House Bill No. 551 are passed and approved and if both include a section that amends 41-5-604, then 41-5-604 (renumbered 41-5-216) is to read as provided in the coordination instruction. House Bill No. 551 was approved as Ch. 251, L. 1995. In accordance with the coordination instruction, the amendments to this section contained in sec. 5, Ch. 466, L. 1995, are therefore void (see 1995 Session Law for text). Section 10, the coordination instruction, amended 41-5-604 (renumbered 41-5-216) as follows: in (1) inserted exception clause and after "law enforcement records" deleted "except fingerprints and photographs"; in (2), after "files", inserted "not exempt from sealing under subsection (5)"; in (5) inserted "fingerprints, DNA records, photographs" and at end substituted "in any case in which the youth did not fulfill all requirements of the court's judgment or disposition" for "directly related to an offense to which access must be allowed under 41-5-601"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 14, 1995.

Chapter 481 in (5), at end, inserted "or records referred to in 45-5-624(7)"; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 528 in (1), at end of first sentence, substituted "sealed 3 years after supervision for an offense ends" for "sealed when the youth reaches the age of 18 years" and inserted second sentence allowing records to be unsealed; and made minor changes in style.

Style changes in the chapters were slightly different. In each case, the codifier chose the most appropriate.

1987 Amendment: At beginning of (1) substituted "All youth court records and law enforcement records except fingerprints and photographs" for "All court findings, orders, judgments, and the legal and social files and records of the court, probation services, and law enforcement agencies"; deleted last sentence of (4) that read: "The records of youths who were 28 years old or older on July 1, 1974, may be destroyed with the consent of the youth court judge or county attorney"; and at beginning of (5) inserted "The requirements for sealed records in", substituted "access" for "publicity", and deleted reference to subsection (2) of 41-5-601.

1981 Amendment: Inserted "or to records directly related to an offense to which publicity must be allowed under subsection (2) of 41-5-601" at the end of (5).

Case Notes

Inclusion of Juvenile Record in Presentence Report: Section 41-3-205 does not support appellant's contention that it was improper to include his juvenile record in a presentence report since that section applies only to dependence and neglect situations and not to proceedings for delinquents under the Montana Youth Court Act. Section 41-5-604 (renumbered 41-5-216) does not support appellant's contention either, because the prevention of public dissemination of a juvenile record once that individual attains an age of majority is accomplished by sealing the presentence report. St. v. Radi, 185 M 38, 604 P2d 318 (1979).

Attorney General's Opinions

Certain Youth Court Records Not Subject to Sealing Requirements: A 1987 amendment to 41-5-601 (now repealed) deleted the bar against disseminating information concerning proceedings to find a youth delinquent; further, the intent of a 1987 amendment to subsection (5) of this section (formerly 41-5-604(5)) was to not seal the records related to delinquency proceedings. The overall effect of the 1987 amendments was that Youth Court records concerning a youth proceeded against as a delinquent youth or found to be a delinquent youth are not confidential and are not subject to sealing requirements of the Montana Youth Court Act. 43 A.G. Op. 7 (1989).

Youth Court Act — Applicability to Alcohol Possession Proceedings in Other Courts: The provisions of the Montana Youth Court Act that apply to a youth charged with a violation of 45-5-624, illegal possession of alcohol, in justice's, municipal, or city court proceedings are 41-5-303 through 41-5-307 (renumbered 41-5-322, 41-5-331, 41-5-341, 41-5-344 (now repealed), and 41-5-1206), 41-5-402 (renumbered 41-5-1303), 41-5-601 (now repealed), 41-5-602 (now repealed), and this section (formerly 41-5-604). A youth charged with a violation of 45-5-624 is further entitled to the following rights in addition to those normally accorded defendants in justice's, municipal, or city court criminal proceedings: (1) service of the criminal summons on both the youth and a custodial parent or guardian; (2) advisement of the right to retained or, if appropriate, appointed counsel; and (3) waiver of the right to counsel only by both the youth and a custodial parent or guardian. 40 A.G. Part Case Notes

Holding Youth Without Appearance Until Transfer to District Court: Defendant claims he was not brought to a magistrate "without necessary delay". Defendant surrendered to the authorities and was placed in jail but was not taken before a magistrate until some 20 days later. Although defendant could show no prejudice due to this lapse of time, the Supreme Court strongly disapproved of any deliberate attempt by the State to avoid arraignment "without unnecessary delay" by first arresting and holding a juvenile under the Youth Court Act for a sustained period of time and then later attempting to prosecute the juvenile as an adult. The Supreme Court stated that if a defendant could show prejudice or a deliberate attempt by the prosecution to circumvent a speedy arraignment, they would not hesitate to fashion an appropriate remedy. Case Notes

Illegal Pretrial Process and Procedure — State's Right to Charge and Try Case: Youth Court petition initiating proceedings did not state the facts constituting the offense youth was charged with in ordinary and concise language so as to enable a person of common understanding to know what was intended. The petition did not include a witness list. An arrest warrant was issued out of the Youth Court, although there is no provision in the Youth Court Act for issuance of an arrest warrant. Presumably the warrant was issued under 46-6-201, but there was no showing of probable cause supported by oath or affirmation reduced to writing. The youth had already been arrested in Oklahoma at the time the warrant was issued. By what process and authority he was arrested in Oklahoma was not shown, nor was it shown he was arrested by a law enforcement officer. He was subsequently transferred to the District Court for trial as an adult and convicted of two counts of deliberate homicide. The Youth Court proceedings from issuance of the warrant for arrest onward were patently defective. However, this did not preclude the state from having him transferred to the District Court, proceeding against him, and obtaining a conviction. St. v. Woods, 203 M 401, 662 P2d 579, 40 St. Rep. 533 (1983).

Youth Court Act — Applicability to Alcohol Possession Proceedings in Other Courts: The provisions of the Montana Youth Court Act that apply to a youth charged with a violation of 45-5-624, illegal possession of alcohol, in justice's, municipal, or city court proceedings are 41-5-303 through 41-5-307 (renumbered 41-5-322, 41-5-331, 41-5-341, 41-5-344 (now repealed), and 41-5-1206), 41-5-402 (renumbered 41-5-1303), 41-5-601 (now repealed), 41-5-602 (now repealed), and 41-5-604 (renumbered 41-5-216). (i) when the youth is 16 years of age or older, the youth may make an effective waiver;

Case Notes

Youth Considered in Custody — Supervisory Control Appropriate When Lower Court Proceeding Under Mistake of Law: Fourteen-year-old Evans was taken by his mother to the Flathead County Sheriff's office, upon request of the Deputy Sheriff, because he had been observed talking to a child on the day of her disappearance. Evans and his mother were separated upon arrival at the office, and Evans was taken to a 9-by-9-foot windowless interrogation room with a shut door where he was questioned for 2 ½ hours by two officers wearing badges and weapons. Evans waived his Miranda rights outside the presence and without the consent of his mother and without an opportunity to discuss his rights or the waiver with counsel. The officers did not tell Evans that he could leave the interrogation room or consult with his mother, and during the course of the interview, Evans' mother was denied contact with Evans. Although initially adamantly denying involvement, the officers repeatedly suggested that Evans had "more to tell them" and mislead him into believing that the police had fingerprints from the girl's body that could be matched to his. Toward the end of the interrogation, Evans confessed that he drowned the child and was charged with her death, arrested, handcuffed, and escorted to juvenile detention without an opportunity to speak to his mother. Evans filed a motion to suppress the confession on grounds that his waiver of rights while in custody was invalid under this section. The District Court denied the motion, concluding that Evans was not in custody during the interview and that the confession was voluntary. Accepting supervisory control because the District Court was proceeding under a mistake of law, the Supreme Court, finding it difficult to imagine a more "custodial" setting, applied the factors in St. v. Staat, 251 M 1, 822 P2d 643, 48 St. Rep. 1041 (1991), and concluded that Evans was in custody during the interview, that his waiver of rights without the consent of a parent or advice of counsel was invalid under this section, and that the confession was not voluntary under the totality of the circumstances. Although the record on appeal was not sufficient to determine whether the state had other evidence sufficient to charge Evans, the case was nevertheless remanded for consideration of the evidence without the confession. Evans v. District Court, 2000 MT 38, 298 M 279, 995 P2d 455, 57 St. Rep. 175 (2000).

Transfer of Youth Court Case to District Court Not Violative of Minor's Constitutional Rights: Spina argued that the statute allowing transfer of her Youth Court case to the District Court resulted in violation of her rights under Art. II, sec. 15, Mont. Const., which guarantees to minors the same fundamental rights afforded to adults, and under Art. II, sec. 24, Mont. Const., which guarantees the right to a fair trial. The Supreme Court considered alleged violations of the right against self-incrimination, the right to effective assistance of counsel, the right to a fair trial, and the right to a presumption of innocence, finding that Spina's arguments were without merit. The transfer statute did not violate Spina's constitutional rights. St. v. Spina, 1999 MT 113, 294 M 367, 982 P2d 421, 56 St. Rep. 467 (1999).

Warrantless Entry and Arrest Valid — Subsequent Search Invalid — No Consent: While the officers' initial entry into the apartment and the subsequent arrest and seizure of marijuana on the table were valid, the so-called "consent" search of the rest of the apartment was unlawful. One renter's consent was fraudulently secured and otherwise invalid under this section (formerly 41-5-303). St. v. Allen, 188 M 135, 612 P2d 199 (1980).

1991 Amendment: In three places in (1), before "detention facility", inserted "secure" and at beginning deleted "After a probable cause hearing provided for in 41-5-303"; inserted (1)(b) concerning allegation of delinquent youth; deleted former (1)(e) that read: "(e) there is good reason to believe the youth will not appear for court proceedings as ordered"; inserted (1)(c) concerning awaiting final disposition of case; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 23, 1991.

1987 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 475 at beginning of (1) substituted "After a probable cause hearing provided for in 41-5-303, a youth may not be placed in a detention facility" for "A youth taken into custody may not be detained in a jail or other facility for detention purposes"; in (1)(a) substituted "one of the following acts" for "an act" and after "offense" deleted former (1)(a) that read: "(a) the alleged act is one of the following"; inserted (1)(d) and (1)(e) prohibiting placement of a youth in a detention facility unless his detention is required to protect persons or property or there is good reason to believe youth will not appear for court proceedings; at end of (1)(h) inserted "in the judicial district with jurisdiction over the youth"; and near beginning of (2), after "youth", deleted "taken into custody" and substituted "placed in a shelter care facility unless" for "sheltered prior to the hearing on the petition except when".

Chapter 515 at end of (1)(a) substituted "offense is one specified in 41-5-206" for "act is one of the following"; deleted former (1)(a)(i) through (1)(a)(x) that read: "(i) criminal homicide as defined in 45-5-101;

(ii) arson as defined in 45-6-103;

(iii) aggravated or felony assault as defined in 45-5-202;

(iv) robbery as defined in 45-5-401;

(v) burglary or aggravated burglary as defined in 45-6-204;

(vi) sexual intercourse without consent as defined in 45-5-503;

(vii) aggravated kidnapping as defined in 45-5-303;

(viii) possession of explosives as defined in 45-8-335;

(ix) criminal sale of dangerous drugs for profit as included in 45-9-101; or

(x) attempt as defined in 45-4-103 of any of the acts enumerated in subsections (1)(a)(i) through (1)(a)(ix)"; in (1)(b), after "correctional", inserted "or detention"; inserted (1)(d), (1)(f), and (1)(g) citing circumstances under which youth may be placed in detention facility; and in (1)(h), after "meets", inserted "additional" and after "court" inserted "in the judicial district that has current jurisdiction over him".

Chapter 610 in former (1)(a)(i) substituted "homicide as defined in 45-5-102 through 45-5-104" for "criminal homicide as defined in 45-5-101" (not codified as explained below).

In preparation of the composite of the Ch. 475, Ch. 515, and Ch. 610 amendments to this section, the Code Commissioner omitted from the composite the Ch. 475 amendment to subsection (1)(a) that referred to "one of the following acts" because the phrase referred to former (1)(a)(i) through (1)(a)(x), which were deleted by Ch. 515.

The Code Commissioner used the Ch. 515 amendment to subsection (1)(h) rather than the Ch. 475 amendment, which was similar, because the Ch. 515 amendment contained the additional qualifier of "current" jurisdiction. Any inconsistency between the official enrolled bills and the MCA is to be resolved in favor of the official enrolled bills (see 1-11-103).

1985 Amendment: In (1) substituted language relating to circumstances in which youth could be placed in a jail or detention facility for former (1) that read: "A youth taken into custody may not be detained prior to the hearing on the petition except when:

(a) his detention is required to protect the person or the property of others or of the youth;

(b) he has pending court or administrative action or is awaiting a transfer to another jurisdiction and may abscond or be removed from the jurisdiction of the court;

(c) there are not adequate assurances that the youth will appear for court when required; or

(d) an order for his detention has been made by the court".

Case Notes

Illegal Pretrial Process and Procedure — State's Right to Charge and Try Case: Youth Court petition initiating proceedings did not state the facts constituting the offense youth was charged with in ordinary and concise language so as to enable a person of common understanding to know what was intended. The petition did not include a witness list. An arrest warrant was issued out of the Youth Court, although there is no provision in the Youth Court Act for issuance of an arrest warrant. Presumably the warrant was issued under 46-6-201, but there was no showing of probable cause supported by oath or affirmation reduced to writing. The youth had already been arrested in Oklahoma at the time the warrant was issued. By what process and authority he was arrested in Oklahoma was not shown, nor was it shown he was arrested by a law enforcement officer. He was subsequently transferred to the District Court for trial as an adult and convicted of two counts of deliberate homicide. The Youth Court proceedings from issuance of the warrant for arrest onward were patently defective. However, this did not preclude the state from having him transferred to the District Court, proceeding against him, and obtaining a conviction. St. v. Woods, 203 M 401, 662 P2d 579, 40 St. Rep. 533 (1983).

Substance of Petition: The substance of the petition under section 10-605, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), must be the facts which bring the child within the provisions of section 10-602, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed). St. v. Johnson, 141 M 1, 374 P2d 504 (1962).

Insufficiency of Petition: The petition in a proceeding under Ch. 122, L. 1911 (now repealed), for the trial of an alleged juvenile delinquent, which failed to make the parents parties or allege that they were unfit guardians or that they had consented to the proceeding, was insufficient. In re Satterthwaite, 52 M 550, 160 P 346 (1916).

What Acts Disqualified Judge May Perform: After an affidavit of disqualification for imputed bias had been filed against a district judge in a juvenile proceeding, the judge was disqualified to sit or act in the pending juvenile proceeding other than to arrange the calendar, regulate the order of business, transfer the proceeding to some other court, or to call another District Judge to sit in such proceeding. 1981 Amendment: Inserted "if the parents and the youth are unable to provide counsel" near the middle of the section.

Case Notes

Adjudication and Commitment Improper When Youth Not Represented by Counsel: When youth was not represented by legal counsel at all proceedings following the filing of a petition alleging the youth to be in need of supervision (now intervention) and the right to counsel was not waived, adjudication and commitment to Mountain View School was held improper. Attorney General's Opinions

County, Not State, Required to Fund Legal Expenses of Indigent Juvenile Under Youth Court Act: Youth Court defense expenses are not included in 3-5-901 as a specific expense that the state is required to fund; thus, the Legislature did not intend the state to be responsible for funding Youth Court expenses. Rather, pursuant to 41-5-104 and 41-5-111, the Board of County Commissioners is required to fund the legal defense expenses of an indigent youth against whom a petition has been filed in Youth Court. 48 A.G. Op. 16 (2000).

Indigent Youth Entitled to Counsel — Reimbursement: When a petition is filed initiating proceedings under the Montana Youth Court Act, a youth is entitled to court-appointed counsel when the youth is indigent and the youth's parents have sufficient financial resources but refuse to employ counsel. A Youth Court may order reimbursement from nonindigent parents for expenses associated with court-appointed counsel. 42 A.G. Op. 88 (1988).

Requirement of Counsel: This section (formerly 41-5-511) limits the requirement of counsel to those proceedings in which a youth is charged as a delinquent youth because commitment for more than 6 months is possible only as a result of such an adjudication. Because a youth alleged to be in need of supervision (now intervention) cannot be committed for more than 6 months, the requirement of counsel under this section (formerly 41-5-511) does not attach in that situation. 40 A.G. Op. 74 (1984).

Attorney General's Opinions

Disposition for Probation Violation: A youth originally charged as and adjudicated a youth in need of supervision (now youth in need of intervention) who violates probation cannot be committed to the Department of Institutions (now Department of Corrections) for more than 6 months under this section (formerly 41-5-533) because such disposition was unavailable in the original adjudication. However, a youth originally charged as a delinquent youth who is placed on probation as a youth in need of supervision (now youth in need of intervention) (as provided in 41-5-103(13)(d)) may be committed for more than 6 months if adjudged a delinquent youth after violating probation. 40 A.G. Op. 74 (1984).

Alternative to Revocation Proceeding: As an alternative to a revocation proceeding, a youth in need of supervision (now youth in need of intervention) who violates probation could be charged by petition as a delinquent youth under the definition of a delinquent youth, 41-5-103(12)(b), and could then be committed for a period of more than 6 months. 40 A.G. Part 15
Formal Proceeding — Hearing — Disposition

Part Case Notes

Prejudicial Delay: When petition to adjudicate J.F., a youth in need of supervision (now youth in need of intervention), was filed August 13 and no further action was taken until October 29, the Youth Court erred either in not dismissing the petition with prejudice after 15 days from service of the petition or in not ordering a continuance. In re J.F., 219 M 140, 710 P2d 705, 42 St. Rep. 1904 (1985).

Hearing Mandate — Reasonable Attempt to Comply Required: A petition charging four youths with conspiracy to commit aggravated assault was filed on June 16, and a hearing date was set for June 27. On June 22, an order issued continuing the hearing date until July 6. While it is not apparent from the record whether the state or trial court requested the continuance, it is clear that the youths did not. On July 6, the court ordered the hearing date continued. On August 2, the state asked that a new hearing date be set. Prior to the hearing, the youths moved to dismiss the petition under this section. The trial court dismissed the petition with prejudice, and the state appealed. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, stating that the first continuance granted for unknown reasons did not meet the "interests of justice" and "due diligence" requirements of 41-5-516(2) (now repealed) and by itself was sufficient for dismissal. The court also stated that even assuming that the trial court had ordered the first two continuances sua sponte (on its own motion), the failure of the state to request a hearing for almost a month after the second order showed a lack of a reasonable attempt to comply with the hearing mandate of 41-5-516(1) (now repealed). In re L.R.T., R.A.C., T.P.V., & M.L.B., 209 M 421, 680 P2d 579, 41 St. Rep. 800 (1984).

Transfer to District Court — Hearing on Youth Court Petition Against Youth Unnecessary: The provision in 41-5-516 (now repealed) that a petition alleging delinquency or need of supervision (now intervention) shall be dismissed with prejudice if a hearing on the petition is not begun within 15 days after service does not apply when the charges are subject to transfer to the District Court and a timely motion to transfer is made. St. v. Woods, 203 M 401, 662 P2d 579, 40 St. Rep. 533 (1983).

Delinquent Youth Conviction Reversal — Inadmissible Hearsay Prejudice — Corroboration of Testimony of Others Responsible or Legally Accountable for Same Offense: After a minor was cited for running a red light and for driving without a license, the County Attorney charged he was a delinquent youth under the Youth Court Act, alleging the minor had taken the car he was found driving without the owner's consent. The minor appealed that the testimony of two police officers concerning the stolen property report was inadmissible hearsay and that his conviction declaring him a delinquent youth was improperly based on the testimony of other individuals who were legally accountable for the offense. The Montana Supreme Court found that the officers' testimony was inadmissible hearsay. The court also found that the corroborating evidence supplied by the officer who stopped the vehicle the minor was driving tended to connect the youth directly with the offense and therefore that the testimony of other minors responsible or legally accountable for the same offense was properly admitted. Despite the fact that the testimony of the other youths in the car, in conjunction with the independent corroborating evidence, could support a conviction in some cases, the reviewing court reversed the conviction. They found that the admission of the hearsay so affected the substantial rights of the accused as to require reversal. In re D.W.L., A Youth, 189 M 267, 615 P2d 887 (1980).

Due Process Required: Statutes regarding juvenile delinquency proceedings contemplate that the formalities of proceedings required by due process be granted and complied with before commitment to the State Industrial School (now Pine Hills Youth Correctional Facility). Proper service and a hearing with representation by counsel, if desired, were not granted in this case, so that commitment was improper. In re Allamaras, 139 M 130, 361 P2d 340 (1961).

Record Mandatory:

When the record does not indicate any attempt by the Youth Court to comply with the adjudicatory hearing or dispositional hearing provisions of 41-5-521 and 41-5-522 (renumbered 41-5-1502 and 41-5-1511), the proceedings were not sufficient under the Youth Court Act to constitute a proper adjudication that J.F. was a youth in need of supervision (now youth in need of intervention). In re J.F., 219 M 140, 710 P2d 705, 42 St. Rep. 1904 (1985).

The absence of a verbatim record of a dispositional hearing requires reversal. Otherwise, appeal would become an illusory right without substance. In re Geary, 172 M 204, 562 P2d 821 (1977).

"Delinquent Youth" — Felony Basis: The Youth Court's finding that the youth had committed a deliberate homicide, although based entirely on circumstantial evidence, was supported by substantial evidence in the record and therefore was sufficient to support a finding that he was a delinquent youth within the meaning of 41-5-103. St. v. Twoteeth, 219 M 101, 711 P2d 789, 42 St. Rep. 1873 (1985).

Burglary Admission — "Delinquent Youth": The Youth Court's finding that the youth had committed a burglary, a charge which the youth admitted and which was supported by the evidence, was sufficient to support a finding that he was a delinquent youth within the meaning of 41-5-103. In re V.R.B., 201 M 127, 653 P2d 133, 39 St. Rep. 2001 (1982).

Procedure to Be Adhered To: A preliminary hearing to determine whether a child is a juvenile delinquent may be conducted informally. A formal hearing, however, is required on a petition to commit a child as a juvenile delinquent. The procedures provided for civil trials must be adhered to, and there must be a stenographic record of evidence presented in juvenile court. In re Gonzalez, 139 M 592, 366 P2d 718 (1961).

When Judge May Determine Facts: Under section 10-603, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), dealing with delinquent children, only when there is no demand for a jury trial or when a jury trial has been waived may a judge determine the facts. Here, where the minor charged with being a delinquent child made a demand for a jury trial at the opening of trial as well as on the day preceding trial, the juvenile court was without jurisdiction to try him without a jury. Case Notes

Record Mandatory:

When the record does not indicate any attempt by the Youth Court to comply with the adjudicatory hearing or dispositional hearing provisions of 41-5-521 and 41-5-522 (renumbered 41-5-1502 and 41-5-1511), the proceedings were not sufficient under the Youth Court Act to constitute a proper adjudication that J.F. was a youth in need of supervision (now youth in need of intervention). In re J.F., 219 M 140, 710 P2d 705, 42 St. Rep. 1904 (1985).

The absence of a verbatim record of a dispositional hearing requires reversal. Otherwise, appeal would become an illusory right without substance. In re Geary, 172 M 204, 562 P2d 821 (1977).

Transfer of Youth From Treatment Facility to Department: Given the Youth Court's power under 41-5-523 (renumbered 41-5-1512) to place a youth in the custody of the Department of Institutions (now Department of Corrections) and in a youth care facility, the court's order that the youth be transferred automatically from a treatment center to the custody of the Department of Institutions (now Department of Corrections) was a proper disposition. The Youth Court held a dispositional hearing and issued an order directing that temporary custody of the youth be placed in the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Corrections) for treatment. The court is not required to hold another hearing before the youth is placed in the custody of the Department of Institutions (now Department of Corrections). St. v. Twoteeth, 219 M 101, 711 P2d 789, 42 St. Rep. 1873 (1985).

Dispositional Order to Be Supported by Findings: A youth admitted the commission of a burglary, and the evidence strongly supported his admission. The Youth Court ordered that the youth be committed to the Department of Institutions (now Department of Corrections) but did not enter findings of fact supporting its order of commitment. The Supreme Court remanded to the Youth Court for entry of findings. In re V.R.B., 201 M 127, 653 P2d 133, 39 St. Rep. 2001 (1982).

Dispositional Stage — Fitness of Parents: At the dispositional stage the concern for the best interests of the youth and community is paramount. The court need not, therefore, make specific findings as to the fitness of the parents. In re Geary, 172 M 204, 562 P2d 821 (1977).

Due Process: Even though a hearing may be informal, the requirements of due process must be met; where there was no sworn testimony, no proof, no representation by counsel, no proper citation to the parent, and no hearing in fact, an order of commitment to the State Industrial School (now Pine Hills Youth Correctional Facility) was reversible. In re Allamaras, 139 M 130, 361 P2d 340 (1961), explained in In re Gonzalez, 139 M 592, 366 P2d 718 (1961).

Informal Hearing:

Sections 10-605 and 10-611, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), had to be read together, and the informal manner in which a hearing could be conducted as provided in section 10-611 referred to the preliminary inquiry provided for in section 10-605. In re Gonzalez, 139 M 592, 366 P2d 718 (1961).

An informal trial is improper when the hearing is upon a petition of County Attorney charging a minor child, 16 years of age, with being a delinquent child, which could result in commitment. In re Gonzalez, 139 M 592, 366 P2d 718 (1961).

Stenographic Record of Evidence: Proceeding upon a petition of County Attorney charging minor with being a delinquent child, resulting in commitment of child to the State Industrial School (now Pine Hills Youth Correctional Facility), was remanded to District Court where no stenographic record had been made of the evidence presented in the juvenile court. In re Gonzalez, 139 M 592, 366 P2d 718 (1961).

Application of Section: The prohibition in section 10-611, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), which prohibited the "disposition of a delinquent child or evidence given in the court" from being used as evidence in any other case or proceeding against the child, applies only where the child is a party in a later proceeding; where the child is a witness in a later case, evidence of contradictory statements made in the juvenile court may be used for the purpose of impeachment. St. v. Searle, 125 M 467, 239 P2d 995 (1952).

Section 1, Ch. 161, L. 1999, was not codified because of its temporary nature. Amendment effective March 24, 1999.

Extension of Termination Date: Section 2, Ch. 161, L. 1999, amended sec. 82, Ch. 550, L. 1997, by extending the termination date for the pilot program imposed by Ch. 550 to December 31, 2000. Effective March 24, 1999.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 4, Ch. 161, L. 1999, provided: "[This act] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to all occurrences after January 1, 1999."

1997 Amendments: Chapter 185 inserted (12) allowing confiscation of a youth's driver's license; in (2)(c), after "execution of", substituted "sentences" for "sentence" (voided by Ch. 550 amendments); and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 375 in (1)(d), after "register as a", substituted "sexual or violent offender under 46-23-504" for "sex offender pursuant to 46-18-254 and 46-23-506" (voided by Ch. 550 amendment).

Chapter 550 in introduction substituted "If a youth is found to be a youth in need of intervention or to have violated a consent adjustment" for "If a youth is found to be a delinquent youth or a youth in need of supervision"; deleted (1)(a) that read: "(a) retain jurisdiction in a disposition provided under subsection (1)(b) or (1)(d)"; in (1) inserted "The youth court shall retain jurisdiction in a disposition under this subsection"; deleted (1)(c) and (1)(d) that read: "(c) subject to subsections (1)(n)(i), (2)(a), (2)(b), and (6), sentence a youth to one of the state youth correctional facilities established under 52-5-101 and, as part of the sentence, deny the youth eligibility for release without the express approval of the sentencing judge until the youth reaches 18 years of age. A youth may not be sentenced to a state youth correctional facility unless the department informs the judge that space is available for the youth at that facility. The sentencing judge may not place limitations on the release unless recommended by the youth placement committee.

(d) require a youth found to be delinquent to register as a sex offender pursuant to 46-18-254 and 46-23-506"; in (2), in first and third sentences, substituted "place the youth in a residence" for "place the youth in an in-state residence"; in (3), in first sentence, inserted "for the purposes of funding a private, out-of-home, residential placement subject to the conditions in 41-5-1522"; deleted (1)(f)(ii) that read: "(ii) in the case of a delinquent youth who is determined by the court to be a serious juvenile offender, the judge may specify that the youth be placed in a state youth correctional facility if the judge finds that the placement is necessary for the protection of the public. The court may order the department to notify the court within 5 working days before the proposed release of a youth from a youth correctional facility. Once a youth is committed to the department for placement in a state youth correctional facility, the department is responsible for determining an appropriate date of release into an appropriate placement"; in (4) substituted "order restitution for damages that result from the offense for which the youth is disposed by the youth or by the person that contributed to the delinquency of the youth" for "order restitution by the youth or the youth's parents"; deleted (1)(h) that read: "(h) impose a fine as authorized by law if the violation alleged would constitute a criminal offense if committed by an adult"; in (9), in last sentence, substituted "subsection (3) of this section" for "subsection (1)(f)"; in (10), at beginning, inserted "subject to the provisions of 41-5-1504" and substituted "finds that the youth is found to be suffering from a mental disorder, as defined in 53-21-102, and who meets the criteria in 53-21-126(1)" for "finds that the youth is seriously mentally ill as defined in 53-21-102" and deleted second sentence that read: "The youth is entitled to all rights provided by 53-21-114 through 53-21-119"; deleted (1)(n)(i) and (1)(n)(ii) that read: "(i) A youth adjudicated mentally ill or seriously mentally ill as defined in 53-21-102 may not be committed or sentenced to a state youth correctional facility.

Placement is subject to the following limitations:

(a) A youth in need of supervision or adjudicated delinquent for commission of an act that would not be a criminal offense if committed by an adult may not be placed in a state youth correctional facility.

(b) A youth may not be held in a state youth correctional facility for a period of time in excess of the maximum period of imprisonment that could be imposed on an adult convicted of the offense or offenses that brought the youth under the jurisdiction of the youth court. This section does not limit the power of the department to enter into an aftercare agreement with the youth pursuant to 52-5-126.

(c) A youth may not be placed in or transferred to a penal institution or other facility used for the execution of sentence of adults convicted of crimes.

(3) A youth placed in a state youth correctional facility or other facility or program operated by the department or who signs an aftercare agreement under 52-5-126 must be supervised by the department. A youth who is placed in any other placement by the department, the youth court, or the youth court's juvenile probation officer must be supervised by the probation officer of the youth court having jurisdiction over the youth under 41-5-205 whether or not the youth is committed to the department. Supervision by the youth probation officer includes but is not limited to:

(a) submitting information and documentation necessary for the person, committee, or team that is making the placement recommendation to determine an appropriate placement for the youth;

(b) securing approval for payment of special education costs from the youth's school district of residence or the office of public instruction, as required in Title 20, chapter 7, part 4;

(c) submitting an application to a facility in which the youth may be placed; and

(d) case management of the youth.

(4) The youth court may order a youth to receive a medical or psychological evaluation at any time prior to final disposition if the youth waives the youth's constitutional rights in the manner provided for in 41-5-303. The county determined by the court as the residence of the youth is responsible for the cost of the evaluation, except as provided in subsection (5). A county may contract with the department or other public or private agencies to obtain evaluation services ordered by the court.

(5) The youth court shall determine the financial ability of the youth's parents to pay the cost of an evaluation ordered by the court under subsection (4). If they are financially able, the court shall order the youth's parents to pay all or part of the cost of the evaluation.

(6) The youth court may not order placement or evaluation of a youth at a state youth correctional facility unless the youth is found to be a delinquent youth or is alleged to have committed an offense that is transferable to criminal court under 41-5-206.

(7) An evaluation of a youth may not be performed at the Montana state hospital unless the youth is transferred to the district court under 41-5-206, 41-5-208, or 41-5-1105.

(8) An order of the court may be modified at any time. In the case of a youth committed to the department, an order pertaining to the youth may be modified only upon notice to the department and subsequent hearing.

(9) Whenever the court commits a youth to the department, it shall transmit with the dispositional judgment copies of medical reports, social history material, education records, and any other clinical, predisposition, or other reports and information pertinent to the care and treatment of the youth.

(10) If a youth is committed to the department, the court shall examine the financial ability of the youth's parents or guardians to pay a contribution covering all or part of the costs for the care, commitment, and treatment of the youth, including the costs of necessary medical, dental, and other health care.

(11) If the court determines that the youth's parents or guardians are financially able to pay a contribution as provided in subsection (10), the court shall order the youth's parents or guardians to pay an amount based on the uniform child support guidelines adopted by the department of public health and human services pursuant to 40-5-209.

(12) (a) Except as provided in subsection (12)(b), contributions ordered under this section and each modification of an existing order are enforceable by immediate or delinquency income withholding, or both, under Title 40, chapter 5, part 4. An order for contribution that is inconsistent with this section is nevertheless subject to withholding for the payment of the contribution without need for an amendment of the support order or for any further action by the court.

(b) A court-ordered exception from contributions under this section must be in writing and be included in the order. An exception from the immediate income withholding requirement may be granted if the court finds there is:

(i) good cause not to require immediate income withholding; or

(ii) an alternative arrangement between the department and the person who is ordered to pay contributions.

(c) A finding of good cause not to require immediate income withholding must, at a minimum, be based upon:

(i) a written determination and explanation by the court of the reasons why the implementation of immediate income withholding is not in the best interests of the youth; and

(ii) proof of timely payment of previously ordered support in cases involving modification of contributions ordered under this section.

(d) An alternative arrangement must:

(i) provide sufficient security to ensure compliance with the arrangement;

(ii) be in writing and be signed by a representative of the department and the person required to make contributions; and

(iii) if approved by the court, be entered into the record of the proceeding.

(13) Upon a showing of a change in the financial ability of the youth's parents or guardians to pay, the court may modify its order for the payment of contributions required under subsection (11).

(14) (a) If the court orders the payment of contributions under this section, the department shall apply to the department of public health and human services for support enforcement services pursuant to Title IV-D of the Social Security Act.

(b) The department of public health and human services may collect and enforce a contribution order under this section by any means available under law, including the remedies provided for in Title 40, chapter 5, parts 2 and 4"; inserted (13) allowing contribution for costs; inserted (14) allowing contribution for victim's counseling costs; inserted (15) allowing deferment of sentence during placement evaluation; inserted (16) allowing placement in youth assessment center; inserted (17) allowing participation in mediation; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 375, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, the Legislature finds that the danger of recidivism posed by sexual and violent offenders and the protection of the public from these offenders is of paramount concern to government and the people; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature further finds that law enforcement agencies' efforts to protect their communities, conduct investigations, and apprehend sexual and violent offenders is impaired by the lack of information about offenders who live within their jurisdictions; and

WHEREAS, the system of registering sexual and violent offenders provides law enforcement with information critical to preventing victimization and to resolving incidents of sexual or violent offenses promptly, including notification of the public when necessary to the continued protection of the community; and

WHEREAS, persons who have committed a sexual or violent offense have a reduced expectation of privacy because of the public's interest in safety; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature finds that releasing information about sexual or violent offenders to law enforcement agencies and, under certain circumstances, providing access to limited information about certain sexual offenders to the general public will further the primary governmental interest of protecting specific vulnerable groups and the public in general from potential harm.

THEREFORE, it is the policy of the State of Montana to assist local law enforcement agencies' efforts in protecting their communities by requiring that sexual or violent offenders register and to authorize the release of necessary and relevant information about sex offenders to the public."

1997 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 375, L. 1997, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill in order to provide guidance for rules adopted under [section 12] [46-23-509] concerning the qualifications of sexual offender evaluators and concerning evaluations of sexual offenders. The legislature intends that sexual offender evaluators possess education and experience similar to the education and experience requirements of therapists certified by the Montana sex offender treatment association. The legislature further intends that rules for evaluating the risk of repeat offenses by sexual offenders include the following factors:

(1) whether the sexual offender has a mental abnormality;

(2) whether the sexual offender's conduct is repetitive and compulsive;

(3) whether drugs or alcohol played a part in the offense or offenses;

(4) whether the sexual offender served the maximum term for the offense or offenses;

(5) whether the offense or offenses involved a child;

(6) the age of the sexual offender at the commission of the offense or offenses;

(7) the relationship between the sexual offender and the victim or victims;

(8) whether the offense or offenses involved use of a weapon;

(9) the number, date, and nature of prior offenses;

(10) conditions of release that minimize risk of another offense, including whether the sexual offender is under supervision or receiving counseling and treatment;

(11) physical conditions that minimize the risk of another offense, such as advanced age or debilitating illness of the sexual offender;

(12) whether psychological or psychiatric profiles of the sexual offender indicate a risk of recidivism;

(13) the sexual offender's response to and participation in treatment;

(14) recent behavior of the sexual offender;

(15) recent threats or gestures by the sexual offender against persons; and

(16) a review of any victim impact statements."

Applicability: Section 18, Ch. 375, L. 1997, provided: "The provisions of [this act] relating to registration apply to:

(1) sexual offenders who are sentenced or who are in the custody or under the supervision of the department of corrections on or after July 1, 1989; and

Amendment effective July 1, 1992.

Chapter 696 in (1)(b)(ii), (2)(a), and (2)(b), before "youth correctional facility", inserted "state"; inserted (8) through (12) ((10) through (14) in version effective July 1, 1992) regarding determination of the financial ability of parents or guardians to contribute to costs for care, commitment, and treatment of a youth and regarding methods of contribution for those costs; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Applicability: Section 15, Ch. 105, L. 1991, provided: "[This act] applies to sentences imposed after [the effective date of this act] [effective October 1, 1991]."

1989 Amendments: Chapter 172 in (1)(b) substituted language authorizing Youth Court to commit youth to Department upon court determination for former language requiring Department, after commitment of youth and consideration of committee recommendations, to determine appropriate placement, supervision, and rehabilitation; in (1)(b)(i), after "supervision", deleted language prohibiting placement of youth in state youth correctional facility and in two places substituted "youth" for "child"; in (1)(b)(ii), after "who is", inserted "determined by the court to be", after "placed in" substituted "a youth correctional facility" for "physical confinement in an appropriate facility only", and after "such" substituted "placement" for "confinement"; deleted (1)(b)(iii) prohibiting court from holding youth in confinement longer than sentence imposed on convicted adult; deleted (1)(b)(iv) referring to disposition of youth under supervision of probation officer; deleted (1)(c) concerning Departmental approval for further youth care, treatment, or evaluation; in (1)(i) inserted language authorizing court to order further care, treatment, evaluation, or relief funded upon Departmental approval; in (2) inserted introductory clause requiring Department to determine placement and rehabilitation program for youth committed to Department; inserted (2)(a) through (2)(c) establishing limitation on youth placement; inserted (3) requiring Departmental supervision upon placement; deleted former (4) prohibiting commitment or transfer of youth to penal institution or adult facility; in (7), after "court", substituted "commits a youth to the" for "vests legal custody in an agency, institution, or"; and deleted former (7) describing form for order of commitment to Department. Amendment effective March 20, 1989.

Chapter 210 inserted (1)(j) relating to committing the youth to a mental health facility. Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

Chapter 434 in (4), near beginning after "custody", inserted "and before final disposition", near end of first sentence, after "evaluated", deleted "by the department", and substituted last sentence relating to County Commissioners' responsibility for cost of evaluation and authority to contract for services for "The department shall determine the place and manner of evaluation." Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Chapter 616 in former (1)(c) (deleted by Ch. 172 but substantively identical to codified part of subsection (1)(i)), at end of first sentence, inserted exception clause providing that youth may not be placed in residential treatment facility by Youth Court but only by Department. Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

1987 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 370 in (2), before "waiver", inserted "a".

Chapter 515 in (1) changed "court" to "youth court"; deleted former (1)(e) that read: "(e) such further care and treatment or evaluation that the court considers beneficial to the youth"; in (1)(d), after "youth", inserted "or his parents"; and inserted (1)(e) through (1)(j) relating to disposition of delinquent youth or youth in need of supervision.

Chapter 609 throughout section substituted references to Department of Family Services (Department now defined as Department of Corrections) for references to Department of Institutions; in (1), after "making", inserted "any of"; deleted former (1)(b) and (1)(c) that read: "(b) place the youth for substitute care into a youth care facility as defined in 41-3-1102 or a home approved by the court;

(c) place the youth in a private agency responsible for the care and rehabilitation of such a youth"; in (1)(b) substituted present language, regarding commitment of youth to Department for determination of appropriate placement, supervision, and rehabilitation program, for former text that read: "transfer legal custody to the department of institutions provided, however, that"; in first sentence of (1)(b)(i), after "such", substituted "commitment" for "transfer of custody", after "facility" deleted remainder of sentence that read: "and such custody may not continue for a period of more than 6 months without a subsequent court order after notice and hearing", and inserted last two sentences requiring court to determine whether continuation in home is contrary to best interest of child; inserted (1)(b)(ii) through (1)(b)(iv) placing conditions on Department's treatment of youth committed to Department; at beginning of (1)(c) inserted "order" and after "evaluation" substituted "that does not obligate funding from the department without the department's approval" for "that the court considers beneficial to the youth"; in (2), after "45 days", deleted "of evaluation at a reception and evaluation center for youths" and inserted second sentence requiring Department to determine place and manner of youth evaluation; deleted former (4) that read: "(4) If the court finds that placement in a youth care facility other than a youth group home or youth foster home is necessary and in the best interests of the youth and the community, the court shall determine if the youth can receive appropriate treatment in a youth care facility located in Montana as follows:

(a) If the court finds the youth can receive appropriate treatment in a youth care facility located in Montana that will accept the youth, the court may not place the youth in a youth care facility located outside this state unless an out-of-state facility can provide appropriate treatment that:

(i) can be obtained at a cost less than that offered by any available facility in this state; and

(ii) is available in closer proximity to the youth's place of residence than any facility located in this state.

(b) When the department of social and rehabilitation services is ordered to pay the costs of caring for the child in a youth care facility other than a youth foster home or youth group home, the court shall provide the department at least 5 days' written notice and opportunity to be heard before ordering the placement of the youth"; and made minor changes in phraseology.

In preparation of the composite of the Ch. 515 and Ch. 609 amendments to this section, the Code Commissioner codified the Ch. 609 amendment to subsection (1)(c) (former subsection (1)(e)) despite the fact that Ch. 515 deleted former subsection (1)(e) because the Ch. 609 amendment is a complete substitution of the former language.

1986 Amendment: Deleted in second version language relating to 60-day evaluation period, requiring a determination that the youth is seriously mentally ill, and concerning procedures upon a finding of serious mental illness.

Effective Date: The 1986 amendment will be effective on the date the deed of sale of the Montana Youth Treatment Center from the Board of Land Commissioners is delivered to a buyer. (Deed delivered January 1, 1987.)

Repealer: Section 15, Ch. 14, Sp. L. June 1986, also repealed sections 53-21-164, 53-21-501, 53-21-502, and 53-21-505, effective upon the sale.

1985 Amendments: Chapter 531 inserted (7) relating to placement in out-of-state treatment facility.

Chapter 612 in (2) near end, after "youths", deleted "except that if the evaluation is to be done at the Montana youth treatment center, the commitment provisions of 53-21-505 must be followed and no evaluation of a youth may be done at Montana state hospital"; inserted (3) through (6) relating to an evaluation to determine whether a youth is seriously mentally ill; and deleted former (6) that read: "Except as provided in 53-21-507, if the custody of a youth is transferred to the department of institutions under subsection (1), the youth may not be committed to the Montana youth treatment center unless the commitment provisions of 53-21-505 are followed."

1983 Amendments: Chapter 129, after (1)(e), inserted "or"; and in (4), inserted second sentence relating to modification of court order.

Chapter 233 deleted former (2)(b), which read: "in the case of a delinquent youth 16 years or older whom the court considers a suitable person for placement at a youth forest camp, notify the director of the department of institutions of the finding. The director of the department of institutions shall then designate to the court the facility to which the youth shall be delivered for evaluation. The court may then commit the youth to the department of institutions for a period not to exceed 45 days for the purpose of evaluation as to the youth's suitability for placement and order the youth delivered for evaluation to the youth facility designated by the director. If after the evaluation the department of institutions reports to the court that such child is suitable for placement in a youth forest camp and if there is space available at a camp, the court may then commit such child directly to the youth forest camp under the terms of commitment of this chapter. If the department of institutions reports and states the reasons to the court why the youth is not suitable for placement, the youth shall be returned to the court for such further disposition as the court may consider advisable under the provisions of this chapter. The costs of transporting the youth to the designated youth facility for evaluation and cost of returning the youth to the court shall be borne by the county of residence of the youth."; and at end of (3), deleted "except as provided by subsection (2)(b)".

Chapter 363, at end of (2), inserted exception clause and Ch. 361 substituted "Montana state hospital" for "Warm Springs state hospital" in that clause; Ch. 363 inserted (6).

Chapter 465 made the following changes: in (1)(b), substituted present language for "place in a licensed foster home or a home approved by the court"; at end of (1)(c), deleted "including but not limited to a district youth guidance home"; and at end of (1)(e), deleted "consistent with subsection (1)(d) of this section".

Case Notes

Transfer of Youth Court Case to District Court Not Violative of Minor's Constitutional Rights: Spina argued that the statute allowing transfer of her Youth Court case to the District Court resulted in violation of her rights under Art. II, sec. 15, Mont. Const., which guarantees to minors the same fundamental rights afforded to adults, and under Art. II, sec. 24, Mont. Const., which guarantees the right to a fair trial. The Supreme Court considered alleged violations of the right against self-incrimination, the right to effective assistance of counsel, the right to a fair trial, and the right to a presumption of innocence, finding that Spina's arguments were without merit. The transfer statute did not violate Spina's constitutional rights. St. v. Spina, 1999 MT 113, 294 M 367, 982 P2d 421, 56 St. Rep. 467 (1999).

Placement of Youth With Noncustodial Parent as Condition of Probation Reversed: A.Z.Y. was found by the Youth Court to be a delinquent youth, was placed on probation under the supervision of the Youth Court Probation Department, and, as a condition of probation under this section (formerly 41-5-523), was released to the custody of his father with the condition that he live with his father in Seattle, Washington. The Supreme Court held that A.Z.Y.'s father's home was not A.Z.Y.'s home within the meaning of this section (formerly 41-5-523) and that as a result of 1987 amendments to the Montana Youth Court Act, the Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) was to control the placement of a delinquent youth placed other than in the youth's home. For these reasons, the Supreme Court held that the Youth Court exceeded its authority in placing A.Z.Y. in his father's home as a condition of probation. In re A.Z.G., 273 M 525, 905 P2d 1098, 52 St. Rep. 1108 (1995).

Statute Not Vague or Unconstitutionally Broad: This section (formerly 41-5-523) is not unconstitutionally broad on its face in giving the power to the Department of Family Services (now Department of Corrections) to make placements of youth committed to its custody and care by a Youth Court. Further, this section (formerly 41-5-523) clearly outlines the options and limitations in disposition available to a Youth Court and clearly places limits on the Department in its placement and rehabilitation of youth committed to its custody and care; therefore, the statute is not vague. In re T.A.S., 244 M 259, 797 P2d 217, 47 St. Rep. 1590 (1990).

Youth Properly Adjudicated Delinquent Improperly Committed to Correctional Facility: H.F. violated the terms of her probation by violating curfew and using alcohol. She was adjudged a delinquent youth and placed in the custody of the Department of Family Services (now Department of Corrections) until age 19. H.F. was also placed in a youth correctional facility on the basis of being a serious juvenile offender. The Supreme Court held that the youth had properly been designated a delinquent youth and placed in the Department's custody. However, the acts that constituted a violation of her probation were not the serious acts set out in the statutory definition of a serious juvenile offender. Therefore, the Youth Court was without authority to place her in a correctional facility. In re H.F., 242 M 381, 791 P2d 53, 47 St. Rep. 826 (1990).

Youth Incorrectly Placed in Correctional Facility: H.F.'s mother filed a complaint charging the youth with ungovernable behavior. H.F. entered into a consent agreement that established 13 rules of probation. The youth subsequently violated several of the rules, was adjudicated a delinquent youth, was committed to the Department of Family Services (now Department of Corrections) until the age of 19, and was ordered placed in a secure correctional facility. The Supreme Court ruled that although the youth was correctly designated delinquent, her only offenses were status offenses. Under this section (formerly 41-5-523), because she could not be imprisoned for the violations, she could not be placed in a correctional facility. In re H.F., 242 M 381, 791 P2d 53, 47 St. Rep. 757 (1990).

Commitment to Pine Hills Remanded — Lack of Alcohol Dependency Treatment Program: Based on curfew violations, the District Court ordered a youth committed to Pine Hills School (now Pine Hills Youth Correctional Facility) for the protection of the public and its property. However, the record showed the youth needed alcohol dependency treatment, which was unavailable at Pine Hills. The Supreme Court reversed the commitment and remanded for consideration of a less restrictive alternative that would allow for treatment. In re J.F., 241 M 434, 787 P2d 364, 47 St. Rep. 420 (1990).

No Absolute Right to Counsel at Placement Hearing — Due Process: A delinquent youth was not denied due process when, pursuant to this section (formerly 41-5-523), he was placed in a youth incarceration facility without an adversarial hearing to decide his placement. Beyond commitment of the youth by the Youth Court, the delinquent youth has no absolute right to counsel at the placement hearing. However, the youth is not without due process rights at the hearing stage. A youth placement committee created by 41-5-525 (renumbered 41-5-121) makes a recommendation to the Department of Family Services (now Department of Corrections), which can accept or reject the recommendation under 41-5-527 (renumbered 41-5-123). In addition, the Youth Court can modify that decision if placement is not in the best interests of the child. In re Peterson, 235 M 313, 767 P2d 319, 46 St. Rep. 13 (1989).

Separation of Powers — Commitment by Youth Court: Pursuant to this section (formerly 41-5-523), the Youth Court committed a delinquent youth to the Department of Family Services (now Department of Corrections) for placement in an appropriate facility. The youth appealed the placement, contending that the judiciary is the proper decisionmaking body for the placement of delinquent youths. In response to the youth's allegation that it is a violation of the separation of powers clause of the state constitution for the Department to make the placement decision, the Supreme Court held that there is no violation because the statute provides authority to the Youth Court to decide the commitment of delinquent youths and youths in need of supervision (now youth in need of intervention) and that authority is not diminished through granting the Department placement power. The court has the authority to review the placement decision to determine if it is in the best interests of the minor. In re Peterson, 235 M 313, 767 P2d 319, 46 St. Rep. 13 (1989).

Transfer of Youth From Treatment Facility to Department: Given the Youth Court's power under 41-5-523 (renumbered 41-5-1512) to place a youth in the custody of the Department of Institutions (now Department of Corrections) and in a youth care facility, the court's order that the youth be transferred automatically from a treatment center to the custody of the Department of Institutions (now Department of Corrections) was a proper disposition. The Youth Court held a dispositional hearing and issued an order directing that temporary custody of the youth be placed in the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Corrections) for treatment. The court is not required to hold another hearing before the youth is placed in the custody of the Department of Institutions (now Department of Corrections). St. v. Twoteeth, 219 M 101, 711 P2d 789, 42 St. Rep. 1873 (1985).

Youth Not Denied Equal Protection by Sentencing System More Severe Than System Imposed on Adults: A youth has not been denied her right to equal protection of the law by imposition of a term of commitment upon her that is longer than the criminal sentence an adult would receive for the same act. Adults and minors are not similarly situated with respect to state sentencing laws because: (1) the purpose of their detention is not the same, that of the adult offender being both retributional and rehabilitational; and (2) the physical liberty interests of minors and adults are qualitatively different. In re C.S., 210 M 144, 687 P2d 57, 41 St. Rep. 970 (1984), followed in In re T.A.S., 244 M 259, 797 P2d 217, 47 St. Rep. 1590 (1990).

Attorney General's Opinions

Indigent Youth Entitled to Counsel — Reimbursement: When a petition is filed initiating proceedings under the Montana Youth Court Act, a youth is entitled to court-appointed counsel when the youth is indigent and the youth's parents have sufficient financial resources but refuse to employ counsel. A Youth Court may order reimbursement from nonindigent parents for expenses associated with court-appointed counsel. 42 A.G. Op. 88 (1988).

Commitment Procedures to Be Followed in Committing Mentally Ill Youth — Private Mental Health Facilities Not Precluded: This section (formerly 41-5-523) does not authorize the Youth Court or the Department of Family Services (now Department of Corrections) to commit a mentally ill or seriously mentally ill youth to a mental health treatment facility without following the commitment procedures set out in Title 53, ch. 21, part 1. There is, however, no statutory preclusion of commitment of a youth to private mental health facilities. 42 A.G. Op. 59 (1988).

2001 Amendment: Chapter 587 in (1)(b) near beginning of first sentence substituted "41-5-1512(1)(o)(i)" for "41-5-1512(15)(a)" and inserted third sentence providing that provisions of 41-5-355 relating to alternative placements apply to placements under subsection (1)(b); inserted (3) prohibiting court from ordering local government entity to pay for care, treatment, intervention, or placement, but allowing order for local government entity to pay for evaluation and in-state transportation of youth; and inserted (4) prohibiting court from ordering state government entity from paying for care, treatment, intervention, placement, or evaluation that results in account deficit for district without cost containment review panel approval. Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 532 in (1)(b) at beginning of first sentence inserted "subject to 41-5-1504, 41-5-1512(15)(a), and 41-5-1522" and at end substituted "and recommend to the department that the youth not be released until the youth reaches 18 years of age" for "or in a correctional facility or a program operated by the department" and inserted second sentence concerning placement of youth adjudicated delinquent; deleted former (1)(c) that read: "(c) subject to 41-5-1504, 41-5-1512(15)(a), and 41-5-1522, sentence a youth to one of the state youth correctional facilities established under 52-5-101 and, as part of the sentence, deny the youth eligibility for release without the express approval of the sentencing judge until the youth reaches 18 years of age. A youth may not be sentenced to a state youth correctional facility unless the department informs the judge that space is available for the youth at that facility. Except as provided in subsection (2), the sentencing judge may not place limitations on the release unless recommended by the youth placement committee. The court may not place a youth adjudicated delinquent in a state youth correctional facility for an offense that would be a misdemeanor if committed by an adult, unless the court finds that the youth presents a danger to public safety and that the placement is recommended by a mental health professional after evaluation of the youth";

near end of first clause of (1)(c) substituted "sexual or violent offender" for "sex offender"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

Intervention in Delinquency Pilot Program: Section 73, Ch. 550, L. 1997, was not codified in the MCA because of its temporary nature. Under this section, the Department of Corrections is to gather information regarding the placement of youthful offenders and present a proposal to the 56th Legislature.

Part 16
Extended Jurisdiction Prosecution Act

Part Compiler's Comments

Effective Date: Section 10, Ch. 438, L. 1995, provided: "[This act] [Title 41, ch. 5, part 11, renumbered Title 41, ch. 5, part 16] is effective on passage and approval." Approved April 14, 1995.

Part Case Notes

Unconstitutionality of Act Requires Striking of Adult and Juvenile Dispositions: W.G. pleaded guilty to several felony charges. The District Court adjudicated W.G., a delinquent youth under 45-5-103, and found on its own motion that 41-5-1102, et seq. (renumbered Title 41, ch. 5, part 16), the Extended Jurisdiction Prosecution Act (EJPA), applied to the case of W.G. Accordingly, the District Court sentenced W.G. as a minor to the custody of the Department of Corrections until his 21st birthday under supervised probation, required that he attend a chemical dependency program, and required that he pay one-half the total restitution and that W.G.'s mother pay the other one-half of the restitution. The District Court then sentenced W.G. as an adult to 5 concurrent years on each of two counts and stayed the execution of those sentences on condition of no new offenses. Because the Supreme Court held in In re S.L.M., 287 M 23, 951 P2d 1365 (1997), that the EJPA was unconstitutional, the state argued that both minor and adult adjudications must be vacated and the case remanded for resentencing, while W.G.'s counsel argued that the adult adjudication only must be struck and that the juvenile adjudication must be implemented. The Supreme Court held that, in as much as the juvenile adjudication was made in conjunction with and in contemplation of the adult adjudication, both adjudications must be stricken and that W.G. must be resentenced. In re W.G., 1999 MT 2, 293 M 16, 973 P2d 217, 56 St. Rep. 9 (1999).

Imposition of Both Juvenile and Adult Sentences — Level of Constitutional Scrutiny: Imposition of both juvenile and adult sentences under the Extended Jurisdiction Prosecution Act infringed upon the juvenile's physical liberty. Physical liberty is a fundamental right under the Montana Constitution. Therefore, the court must apply strict scrutiny analysis to the claim that the Act violates the Montana Constitution's equal protection and rights of minors clauses by subjecting the juvenile to a longer period of incarceration than an adult committing the same offense, and there must be a compelling state interest sufficient to justify the Act. In re S.L.M., 287 M 23, 951 P2d 1365, 54 St. Rep. 1480 (1997).

Unconstitutional to Impose Both a Juvenile and an Adult Sentence Upon Youth: The 1995 amendments to the purpose section of the Montana Youth Court Act made the Act espouse much more preventative, if not punitive, goals because the Act was amended to seek to prevent delinquency through imposition of enforceable and immediate consequences upon juveniles and to establish programs of detention and community protection. Obviously, it is no longer accurate to reason, as the Supreme Court did in In re C.H., 210 M 184, 683 P2d 931 (1984), that the Act's infringements upon juveniles' physical liberty are legitimate means of enhancing their protections within the meaning of Art. II, sec. 15, Mont. Const., providing that minors have all the fundamental rights of Art. II unless specifically precluded by laws that enhance the protection of minors. Moreover, it is no longer accurate to state, as the court did in In re C.S., 210 M 144, 687 P2d 57 (1984), that a Youth Court disposition is strictly for rehabilitation, not retribution. Indeed, the Extended Jurisdiction Prosecution Act (EJPA), by requiring the Youth Court to impose an adult sentence in addition to a juvenile sentence, with the adult portion stayed pending successful completion of the juvenile portion, goes beyond mere rehabilitation of a juvenile and injects the specter of retribution. Thus, the EJPA, on its face, violates the equal protection clause of Art. II, sec. 4, Mont. Const., by treating juveniles more harshly than adults. The EJPA also violates Art. II, sec. 15, by reducing, rather than enhancing, juveniles' rights as compared to adults' rights. The state has no compelling state interest in treating a juvenile as an adult and restricting the juvenile's physical liberty beyond the restrictions that are imposed upon an adult who commits the same offense as the juvenile. Furthermore, the paternalistic rationale of parens patriae does not apply to distinguish between the treatment of a juvenile and an adult when a juvenile is no longer sentenced solely as a juvenile, but as an adult as well. Although the EJPA is subject to a severability clause, the sentencing portion of the EJPA is necessary to its integrity; thus, the remaining provisions of the EJPA cannot be saved by the severability clause. In re S.L.M., 287 M 23, 951 P2d 1365, 54 St. Rep. 1480 (1997). See also, as to the remedy for sentencing pursuant to the unconstitutional Extended Jurisdiction Prosecution Act, In re W.G., 1999 MT 2, 293 M 16, 973 P2d 217, 56 St. Rep. 9 (1999).

Youth's Standing to Challenge Imposition of Both Juvenile and Adult Sentence: Youth given both juvenile and adult sentences under the Extended Jurisdiction Prosecution Act, with the adult portion stayed pending successful completion of the juvenile portion, who were not the subject of a proceeding to revoke the stay, had standing to challenge the Act on the ground that the Act subjected them to a longer period of incarceration than that permitted for an adult who committed the same offense. There was a threatened injury to the youth's civil rights, and they suffered a legitimate and realistic fear that the adult sentence would be carried out if they violated the juvenile sentence. In re S.L.M., 287 M 23, 951 P2d 1365, 54 St. Rep. 1480 (1997).

Part Attorney General's Opinions

County Reimbursement by Board of Crime Control for Indian Youth Placed in Regional Detention Facility by Tribal Court: Title 18, ch. 11, the State-Tribal Cooperative Agreements Act, includes broad authority for counties to enter into agreements with tribes for the delivery of services to their citizens. Although tribes have jurisdiction over tribal member youth, those youth remain citizens of Montana as well as citizens of the tribes, and if the tribes do not provide services, such as youth detention facilities, those tribal youth are nevertheless entitled to be offered state services in the same manner as any other Montana youth. The fact that a tribal court adjudicates the youth does not necessarily disqualify the youth from the receipt of state services. In the present case, Blaine County entered into an agreement with the Fort Belknap Tribe to allow detention in the Blaine County youth detention facility of youth determined by the tribal court to be in need of detention, and Blaine County included the tribal youth population in its survey of youth to be served. The youth detention services were appropriately covered in the county's grant application. Thus, when the county applies for reimbursement for each youth served, regardless of whether the youth is a tribal member or not, the Montana Board of Crime Control is required to reimburse the county for detention costs for the youth, including tribal youth served in a regional detention facility pursuant to an order of a tribal court. 49 A.G. 1999 Amendment: Chapter 536 at end inserted "including the requirement that a youth detention facility provide an educational program for youth in need of that service". Amendment effective April 29, 1999.

1991 Amendment: Deleted (2) that read: "(2) procedures for distributing funds for detention facilities and services as provided in 41-5-315 and 41-5-316"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

1989 Amendment: In introductory clause substituted "The department shall adopt rules" for "The department of family services shall make rules"; and inserted (2) relating to procedures for distributing funds for detention facilities and services.

1989 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 434, L. 1989, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because [sections 12 and 13] [41-5-315 and 41-5-316, both repealed] require the department of family services [now department of corrections] to adopt rules governing procedures for distributing funds to counties for juvenile detention facilities and services. The rules must require a county applying for funds to provide necessary information to enable the department to determine the financial and administrative feasibility of establishing or acquiring the desired detention facility or services. In addition, the rules must require a county to submit information regarding the safety and habitability of the facility and its compliance with state and federal requirements, such as availability of medical and educational services and physical recreation."

1987 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 475, L. 1987, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because section 5 [41-5-809, renumbered 41-5-1802] allows the department of institutions [now department of corrections] to adopt rules for the licensing of detention facilities.

Currently, Montana statutes make no provision for the licensing of juvenile detention facilities. There are presently two counties in the process of establishing detention facilities who need assurance that their facilities will meet minimum established standards on program operations and environmental conditions.

It is anticipated that the rules developed under this act will establish minimum standards for juvenile detention facilities. These standards should govern such matters as the capacity of the facility, its location, design, construction, equipment and operation, fire and safety precautions, medical services, qualifications and number of personnel, and the quality of services provided to the juveniles.

The rules should contain a procedure for notifying the appropriate officials of compliance or deficiencies. If the facility is found deficient, a procedure for remedying those deficiencies should be included with specific time limitations.

It is anticipated the state will conduct annual inspections of each facility and may require written reports containing such information as the agency may need to set and enforce its standards."

Coordination Instruction: Section 15, Ch. 475, L. 1987, transferred rulemaking authority under this section from the Department of Institutions to the Department of Family Services (now Department of Corrections) if House Bill No. 325 was passed and approved. House Bill No. 325 passed and was approved as Ch. 609, L. 1987, April 24, 1987.

Chapter 536 in (1) inserted second sentence defining services; and inserted (4) concerning youth detention facility contracting with a school district for an education program. Amendment effective April 29, 1999.

1991 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 799, L. 1991, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because [section 14] [41-5-1008, renumbered 41-5-1908] grants the board of crime control authority to adopt rules necessary to implement provisions of this bill.

It is the intent of the legislature, in enacting this bill, to provide alternatives to the detention of youth in adult jails in order to meet the requirements of Senate Bill No. 38, which prohibits the detention of youth in adult jails.

In order to ensure that alternatives to jail are established, the legislature intends that each county have the primary responsibility to provide youth detention services, as required by [section 2] [41-5-810, renumbered 41-5-1803]. In addition, in order to stimulate the development of needed services, the legislature intends to provide state grants authorized in [section 8] [41-5-1002, renumbered 41-5-1902], using state and federal funds, to assist counties in providing a spectrum of services for the detention and care of youth. These services are intended to include but are not limited to youth detention facilities, short-term detention centers, holdovers, attendant care, home detention, and programs for the transportation of youth to regional detention facilities.

The legislature intends that counties receiving state grants should share in the costs of services in order to prevent excessive utilization of services and to give counties a financial incentive to hold down program costs. For this reason, [section 10] [41-5-1004, renumbered 41-5-1904] requires that state grants be provided on a matching basis or, if in a block grant, based on a percentage of the approved cost of services.

In order to discourage the use of secure detention and to promote the use of less costly, nonsecure community-based programs, the legislature intends to provide state grants to counties at a higher rate of payment for such services, including holdovers, attendant care, and other alternatives to secure detention.

The legislature further intends that, as a condition of receiving state grants under [section 8] [41-5-1002, renumbered 41-5-1902], each county shall develop a written plan for providing youth detention services, including alternatives to secure detention. The development of county plans is required to ensure that formal planning does, in fact, occur and to make certain that state grants are not provided for services that are not well planned in advance.

As a further condition of receiving state grants under [section 8] [41-5-1002, renumbered 41-5-1902], each county shall, within a reasonable period of time, demonstrate compliance or substantial compliance with state law and policies contained in the Montana Youth Court Act relating to the detention and placement of youth. The legislature intends that the board of crime control review and monitor counties receiving grants under [section 8] [41-5-1002, renumbered 41-5-1902] to assure compliance or substantial compliance with the Montana Youth Court Act.

Finally, the legislature intends that the board of crime control adopt rules as authorized in [section 14] [41-5-1008, renumbered 41-5-1908]. In adopting rules, the board may:

(1) establish requirements for approved holdovers consistent with the definition of holdovers provided in 41-5-103(13);

(2) designate geographical areas of the state that are eligible for creation of a youth detention region under [section 4] [41-5-812, renumbered 41-5-1805]. In designating these areas, the board shall use available state data showing the number of youth held in detention in each county of the state.

(3) adopt procedures governing the distribution and allocation of funds in accordance with [sections 10 and 11] [41-5-1004 and 41-5-1005, renumbered 41-5-1904 and 41-5-1905];

(4) provide a system to review and monitor counties under [section 9] [41-5-1003, renumbered 41-5-1903] to assure that counties receiving grants are in compliance or substantial compliance with the Montana Youth Court Act;

(5) provide standards for determining compliance or substantial compliance with the Montana Youth Court Act pursuant to [section 9] [41-5-1003, renumbered 41-5-1903]. These standards should be based upon comparable standards for compliance with sections 223(a)(12) and 223(a)(14) of the federal Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974.

(6) establish a process for providing notice and fair hearings required under [section 9] [41-5-1003, renumbered 41-5-1903] in order to terminate state grants to counties that fail to attain compliance or substantial compliance with the Montana Youth Court Act."

Effective Date: Section 30, Ch. 799, L. 1991, provided that this section is effective July 1, 1991.

County Reimbursement by Board of Crime Control for Indian Youth Placed in Regional Detention Facility by Tribal Court: Title 18, ch. 11, the State-Tribal Cooperative Agreements Act, includes broad authority for counties to enter into agreements with tribes for the delivery of services to their citizens. Although tribes have jurisdiction over tribal member youth, those youth remain citizens of Montana as well as citizens of the tribes, and if the tribes do not provide services, such as youth detention facilities, those tribal youth are nevertheless entitled to be offered state services in the same manner as any other Montana youth. The fact that a tribal court adjudicates the youth does not necessarily disqualify the youth from the receipt of state services. In the present case, Blaine County entered into an agreement with the Fort Belknap Tribe to allow detention in the Blaine County youth detention facility of youth determined by the tribal court to be in need of detention, and Blaine County included the tribal youth population in its survey of youth to be served. The youth detention services were appropriately covered in the county's grant application. Thus, when the county applies for reimbursement for each youth served, regardless of whether the youth is a tribal member or not, the Montana Board of Crime Control is required to reimburse the county for detention costs for the youth, including tribal youth served in a regional detention facility pursuant to an order of a tribal court. 49 A.G. As a further condition of receiving state grants under [section 8] [41-5-1002, renumbered 41-5-1902], each county shall, within a reasonable period of time, demonstrate compliance or substantial compliance with state law and policies contained in the Montana Youth Court Act relating to the detention and placement of youth. The legislature intends that the board of crime control review and monitor counties receiving grants under [section 8] [41-5-1002, renumbered 41-5-1902] to assure compliance or substantial compliance with the Montana Youth Court Act.

Finally, the legislature intends that the board of crime control adopt rules as authorized in [section 14] [41-5-1008, renumbered 41-5-1908]. In adopting rules, the board may:

(1) establish requirements for approved holdovers consistent with the definition of holdovers provided in 41-5-103(13);

(2) designate geographical areas of the state that are eligible for creation of a youth detention region under [section 4] [41-5-812, renumbered 41-5-1805]. In designating these areas, the board shall use available state data showing the number of youth held in detention in each county of the state.

(3) adopt procedures governing the distribution and allocation of funds in accordance with [sections 10 and 11] [41-5-1004 and 41-5-1005, renumbered 41-5-1904 and 41-5-1905];

(4) provide a system to review and monitor counties under [section 9] [41-5-1003, renumbered 41-5-1903] to assure that counties receiving grants are in compliance or substantial compliance with the Montana Youth Court Act;

(5) provide standards for determining compliance or substantial compliance with the Montana Youth Court Act pursuant to [section 9] [41-5-1003, renumbered 41-5-1903]. These standards should be based upon comparable standards for compliance with sections 223(a)(12) and 223(a)(14) of the federal Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974.

(6) establish a process for providing notice and fair hearings required under [section 9] [41-5-1003, renumbered 41-5-1903] in order to terminate state grants to counties that fail to attain compliance or substantial compliance with the Montana Youth Court Act."

Part 19
State Grants for Youth Detention Services

Part Compiler's Comments

1991 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 799, L. 1991, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because [section 14] [41-5-1008, renumbered 41-5-1908] grants the board of crime control authority to adopt rules necessary to implement provisions of this bill.

It is the intent of the legislature, in enacting this bill, to provide alternatives to the detention of youth in adult jails in order to meet the requirements of Senate Bill No. 38, which prohibits the detention of youth in adult jails.

In order to ensure that alternatives to jail are established, the legislature intends that each county have the primary responsibility to provide youth detention services, as required by [section

2] [41-5-810, renumbered 41-5-1803]. In addition, in order to stimulate the development of needed services, the legislature intends to provide state grants authorized in [section 8] [41-5-1002, renumbered 41-5-1902], using state and federal funds, to assist counties in providing a spectrum of services for the detention and care of youth. These services are intended to include but are not limited to youth detention facilities, short-term detention centers, holdovers, attendant care, home detention, and programs for the transportation of youth to regional detention facilities.

The legislature intends that counties receiving state grants should share in the costs of services in order to prevent excessive utilization of services and to give counties a financial incentive to hold down program costs. For this reason, [section 10] [41-5-1004, renumbered 41-5-1904] requires that state grants be provided on a matching basis or, if in a block grant, based on a percentage of the approved cost of services.

In order to discourage the use of secure detention and to promote the use of less costly, nonsecure community-based programs, the legislature intends to provide state grants to counties at a higher rate of payment for such services, including holdovers, attendant care, and other alternatives to secure detention.

The legislature further intends that, as a condition of receiving state grants under [section 8] [41-5-1002, renumbered 41-5-1902], each county shall develop a written plan for providing youth detention services, including alternatives to secure detention. The development of county plans is required to ensure that formal planning does, in fact, occur and to make certain that state grants are not provided for services that are not well planned in advance.

As a further condition of receiving state grants under [section 8] [41-5-1002, renumbered 41-5-1902], each county shall, within a reasonable period of time, demonstrate compliance or substantial compliance with state law and policies contained in the Montana Youth Court Act relating to the detention and placement of youth. The legislature intends that the board of crime control review and monitor counties receiving grants under [section 8] [41-5-1002, renumbered 41-5-1902] to assure compliance or substantial compliance with the Montana Youth Court Act.

Finally, the legislature intends that the board of crime control adopt rules as authorized in [section 14] [41-5-1008, renumbered 41-5-1908]. In adopting rules, the board may:

(1) establish requirements for approved holdovers consistent with the definition of holdovers provided in 41-5-103(13);

(2) designate geographical areas of the state that are eligible for creation of a youth detention region under [section 4] [41-5-812, renumbered 41-5-1805]. In designating these areas, the board shall use available state data showing the number of youth held in detention in each county of the state.

(3) adopt procedures governing the distribution and allocation of funds in accordance with [sections 10 and 11] [41-5-1004 and 41-5-1005, renumbered 41-5-1904 and 41-5-1905];

(4) provide a system to review and monitor counties under [section 9] [41-5-1003, renumbered 41-5-1903] to assure that counties receiving grants are in compliance or substantial compliance with the Montana Youth Court Act;

(5) provide standards for determining compliance or substantial compliance with the Montana Youth Court Act pursuant to [section 9] [41-5-1003, renumbered 41-5-1903]. These standards should be based upon comparable standards for compliance with sections 223(a)(12) and 223(a)(14) of the federal Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974.

(6) establish a process for providing notice and fair hearings required under [section 9] [41-5-1003, renumbered 41-5-1903] in order to terminate state grants to counties that fail to attain compliance or substantial compliance with the Montana Youth Court Act."

County Reimbursement by Board of Crime Control for Indian Youth Placed in Regional Detention Facility by Tribal Court: Title 18, ch. 11, the State-Tribal Cooperative Agreements Act, includes broad authority for counties to enter into agreements with tribes for the delivery of services to their citizens. Although tribes have jurisdiction over tribal member youth, those youth remain citizens of Montana as well as citizens of the tribes, and if the tribes do not provide services, such as youth detention facilities, those tribal youth are nevertheless entitled to be offered state services in the same manner as any other Montana youth. The fact that a tribal court adjudicates the youth does not necessarily disqualify the youth from the receipt of state services. In the present case, Blaine County entered into an agreement with the Fort Belknap Tribe to allow detention in the Blaine County youth detention facility of youth determined by the tribal court to be in need of detention, and Blaine County included the tribal youth population in its survey of youth to be served. The youth detention services were appropriately covered in the county's grant application. Thus, when the county applies for reimbursement for each youth served, regardless of whether the youth is a tribal member or not, the Montana Board of Crime Control is required to reimburse the county for detention costs for the youth, including tribal youth served in a regional detention facility pursuant to an order of a tribal court. 49 A.G. Nondelinquent Youth Charged With Crime in Another State: Because Montana has not adopted Art. XVIII of the Interstate Compact on Juveniles, which provides that the Compact applies to juveniles charged with being delinquent by reason of violation of any criminal law, a youth who has not run away, escaped, or been adjudged delinquent is outside the scope of the Interstate Compact on Juveniles in Montana. A juvenile residing in Montana, and charged with a crime in another state, may be extradited under the Uniform Criminal Extradition Act, Title 46, ch. 30. The soundest policy is to extradite any juvenile charged with a crime in another state, regardless of whether a juvenile court or an adult court has final jurisdiction. 41 A.G. Op. 24 (1985).

Case Notes

Jurisdiction Over Runaway Juvenile: The broad language of 41-6-105 granting the courts of Montana the authority to "do all things appropriate" to carry out the purposes of the Interstate Compact on Juveniles should include the power to place a runaway youth in a private home on determining that the juvenile should not be returned to the requisitioning state. Here, the juvenile properly filed a petition for protection of the court, as a youth in need of care, and later changed it to request placement with her grandparents, so that the District Court properly had jurisdiction. Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 98, L. 1993, provided: "WHEREAS, the family is the basic institution in society through which our children's sense of well-being and self-esteem are developed and nurtured; and

WHEREAS, because our entire society benefits when families function well, it is in society's best interest to ensure that public policies and programs support and strengthen family life; and

WHEREAS, in fiscal year 1992, 3,310 Montana children and youth were removed from their families and placed in foster homes, group homes, and residential treatment facilities at a cost to the state of more than $16 million; and

WHEREAS, because of the high level of expenditures required to provide out-of-home placement, many experts now question whether public revenue spent for room, board, and related costs might be more wisely spent providing services specifically needed to enable a family to continue functioning as a family; and

WHEREAS, mounting evidence demonstrates that efforts that are made to support and strengthen vulnerable families before a crisis occurs can substantially contribute to family health and stability and prevent future long-term governmental costs; and

WHEREAS, because even with a reformed service system for families, some parents will not be available or able to protect or care adequately for their children, a range of out-of-home services should be available for these children and their families; and

WHEREAS, state and local policymakers increasingly are examining entire state systems for serving troubled children and families and are developing a more comprehensive approach to the multifaceted problems they face; and

WHEREAS, just as families nurture and sustain their members, healthy communities do the same for their member children and families; and

WHEREAS, because family services should be rooted in local communities and reflect local needs, characteristics, and resources, services should be provided as close as possible to the home community of the child or family and families should be fully involved in the planning and delivery of those services; and

WHEREAS, promoting family well-being and assuring children's safety must be the concern of all community sectors."

ADOPTION

Title Compiler's Comments

Source: Some of the sections in chapters 1 through 7 of this title are based upon the Uniform Adoption Act, adopted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws in 1994 and found in 9 U.L.A. 1 (pocket part). The 1994 version of the Uniform Adoption Act has been enacted only in Vermont. In Montana, fewer than two dozen of the 115 sections of the 1994 Uniform Adoption Act have been enacted in whole or in part in this title. For that reason, the Commissioners' prefatory note to the 1994 Uniform Adoption Act has not been included because most of that note is inapplicable to the few 1994 Uniform Adoption Act sections included in this title. For the sections in this title in which all or a large part of the sections of the 1994 Uniform Adoption Act is like the Montana enactment and the comments of the Commissioners, if any, are therefore helpful, the Commissioners' comments accompanying the sections of the 1994 Uniform Adoption Act enacted in Montana are included under the catchline "1994 Commissioners' Comment", the section of the 1994 Uniform Adoption Act from which the Montana language is derived is cited under the heading "Compiler's Comments" as the "Source", and any differences between the 1994 Uniform Adoption Act and the version of the particular section of the 1994 Uniform Act enacted in Montana are explained under the heading "Compiler's Comments" and the catchline "Changes From 1994 Uniform Act". Even for many of those sections of the 1994 Uniform Adoption Act enacted in Montana, the Montana sections contain variations, omissions, and additional matter. For those sections that resemble the 1994 Uniform Adoption Act only in some minor way and for which the comments of the Commissioners, if any, are therefore unhelpful, the 1994 Commissioners' comments to the Uniform Act have not been included and the 1994 Uniform Act is not cited as the source, but similarities between the language of the 1994 Uniform Act and the statutory section are noted under the compiler's comments catchline "Similarities With 1994 Uniform Act".

Some sections of this title are also based upon former Title 40, ch. 8, repealed by Ch. 480, L. 1997. Title 40, ch. 8, enacted part of the 1953 Uniform Adoption Act. Montana never enacted the 1969 Revised Uniform Adoption Act. In those instances in which all or a major part of a section of the 1953 Uniform Adoption Act was enacted in Montana, the appropriate section of the 1953 Uniform Act is cited as the source, with or without changes, and any Commissioners' comments published with the 1953 Uniform Adoption Act have been retained under the catchline "1953 Commissioners' Comment", even though changes to the 1953 Act, as previously adopted in Montana, may have been made by Ch. 480, L. 1997. If no Commissioners' comment, source note, or comparison to the 1994 Uniform Act is provided, the compiler has made the judgment that any resemblance of the Montana statute to either the 1953 Uniform Act or the 1994 Uniform Act is so small that the inclusion of any comparison or source note would not be helpful to the reader and in fact may be misleading.

Some of the sections in this title are also based upon former sections of Title 40, ch. 6, the Montana version of the Uniform Parentage Act, 9B U.L.A. 287, which have been repealed or amended by Ch. 480, L. 1997. When meaningful parts of Title 40, ch. 6, have been retained, although amended, applicable portions of the Commissioners' comments to the Uniform Parentage Act that were originally published for the repealed sections have also been retained under the catchline "Commissioners' Comment" and the appropriate section of the Uniform Parentage Act is cited as the source.

Chapter 8 of this title concerning licensing of adoption agencies succeeded Title 52, ch. 2, part 4, repealed by sec. 171, Ch. 480, L. 1997. When appropriate, annotations formerly published for Title 52, ch. 2, part 4, have been transferred to chapter 8 of this title.

Chapter 10 of this title concerning subsidized adoptions was transferred from Title 52, ch. 2, part 5, by the Code Commissioner pursuant to sec. 174, Ch. 480, L. 1997. Because the MCA sections were transferred as a whole to this title, all annotations previously published for Title 52, ch. 2, part 5, were also transferred as a whole to this title.

DECISIONS AFTER 1997 GENERAL REVISION

Postadoption Visitation Agreement — District Court Responsibilities: The District Court did not err when it modified sua sponte the parties' postadoption visitation agreement to provide weekend visitation and weekly telephone contact with the birth mother because the modification was determined to be in the best interests of the child. The finding was supported by substantial evidence, and the court did not misapprehend the effect of the evidence. Adoptive parents do not have sole discretion in deciding whether a postadoption visitation agreement should be enforced. Rather, the adoptive parents' wishes are but one factor among many to be considered in determining the child's best interests under 40-4-212. Groves v. Clark, 1999 MT 117, 294 M 417, 982 P2d 446, 56 St. Rep. 490 (1999).

Sua Sponte Modification of Postadoption Visitation Agreement Within Discretion of District Court: The rule that in the context of separation agreements made between spouses, parties cannot make binding agreements concerning the support, custody, or visitation of children applies equally to postadoption agreements made between an adopted child's birth parents and adoptive parents. The best interests of the child are paramount, and sua sponte modification of an original visitation agreement in this case was within the discretion of the District Court after determining the best interests of the adopted child. DECISIONS PRIOR TO 1997 GENERAL REVISION

Postadoption Visitation Agreement Between Natural Mother and Adoptive Parents — Responsibilities of District Court: Groves consented to the adoption of her child by the Clarks on the condition that the Clarks sign a visitation agreement allowing Groves to have specified contact with her daughter. After the document was signed and the adoption completed, the Clarks tried to terminate Groves' contact with her daughter. Groves brought an action for specific performance of the visitation agreement, but the District Court held that the agreement was void from its inception under 40-8-125 (now repealed). The Supreme Court reversed, holding that In re C.P., 221 M 180, 717 P2d 1093 (1986), was distinguishable and that the Legislature would not have enacted 40-8-136 (now repealed) if 40-8-125 (now repealed) terminated the interests of the natural parent altogether. The Supreme Court also noted that 40-8-136 (now repealed) also places a burden upon the adoptive parents and, in this case, upon the adoption agency that acted as Groves' agent, to make sure that the visitation agreement was filed in accordance with that statute. The Supreme Court also concluded that under 40-8-114 (now repealed), the District Court has a responsibility to make sure that the enforcement is in the best interests of the child. Groves v. Clark, 277 M 179, 920 P2d 981, 53 St. Rep. 703 (1996).

Procedures to Be Rigorously Followed: While there is some overlap in the various statutory schemes governing the termination of parental rights and the custody of children as to general subject matter, each is used for a distinct purpose and sets forth specific procedures which must be rigorously followed before a valid judgment or order may be issued, to insure that the minors involved receive the full protection of these laws. Case Notes

Criteria for Intervention in Adoption Proceeding — Unfounded and Untimely Motion to Intervene Properly Denied: Couple A adopted a child through a judicial decree in the District Court of the Twenty-First Judicial District. Couple B also wanted to adopt the child and filed a motion, in the District Court of the Twelth Judicial District where they lived, to intervene and set aside the final decree of adoption, despite the fact that some 6 months had passed since the final adoption decree was issued. Initially, neither District Court was aware of the competing adoption petitions. The Department of Public Health and Human Services had been reviewing both couples as potential adoptive resources at the same time and ultimately determined that because the child had formed a strong bond during placement with couple A for nearly 2 years, it would be in the child's best interests to be adopted by couple A. Couple B contended that the child was a member of their extended family and that the Department should have given them priority as adoptive parents. The Twenty-First District Court held that couple B had no standing to intervene as a matter of right pursuant to Rule 24(a), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), and that permissive intervention under Rule 24(b), M.R.Civ.P., was untimely and would undermine the purpose of adoption to the detriment of the child. Couple B's motion to set aside the final decree pursuant to Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., was also denied on grounds that as nonparties to couple A's adoption petition, couple B had no standing to make the motion and that, in any case, it was untimely because it was made more than 180 days after the final decree. Couple B appealed the denial of both motions, arguing first that they had a legal interest by virtue of the family placement preference in the Indian Child Welfare Act (ICWA) and legislative and Departmental policies favoring adoptive placement with extended family members. The Supreme Court noted that a mere claim of interest is insufficient to support intervention as a matter of right and that a party seeking intervention must make a prima facie showing of a direct, substantial, legally protectable interest in the proceedings. No such showing was made here because the child was not Indian and therefore not subject to the ICWA, nor did the relationship of second cousins meet the definition of extended family member. Couple B next argued that they should have been allowed to intervene under the permissive standard of Rule 24(b), M.R.Civ.P., because the competing adoption petitions had common issues of law and fact. Couple B contended that their delay should be excused by their reliance on misrepresentations made by the Department. The Supreme Court agreed that the Department could have taken a more forthright approach and saved all the parties considerable time and expense, but couple B bore the responsibility for ensuring the timely filing of the motion to intervene. The Supreme Court noted that timeliness is a threshold issue when intervention is sought and that, although none of the factors are dispositive, most courts look to four factors in considering whether a motion to intervene is timely filed: (1) the length of time that the intervenor knew or should have known of its interest in the case before moving to intervene; (2) prejudice to the original parties, if intervention is granted, resulting from the intervenor's delay; (3) prejudice to the intervenor if the motion is denied; and (4) any unusual circumstances mitigating for or against a determination that the application is timely. The Supreme Court considered each factor in detail. Although the third factor weighed in favor of couple B, because denial of the motion to intervene effectively precluded any hope of their adoption of the child, the other factors weighed strongly against them. The District Court made a reasoned analysis when it determined that the motion to intervene was untimely and did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion. Last, because couple B did not address the threshold issues of Rule 60(b) on appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that denial of the motion to set aside the final adoption decree on grounds of standing and timeliness was proper. Jurisdiction Based on Presence of Child in Montana: In a case in which the natural parents were residents of Wyoming but the child was born in Montana and present in Montana, the District Court had jurisdiction in an action to terminate parental rights under the abuse and neglect statutes, based on the presence of the child in Montana. In re Parental Rights of Baby Girl W., 249 M 206, 814 P2d 976, 48 St. Rep. 643 (1991).

No Requirement That Jurisdiction of Dissolution Proceedings Also Be Adoption Venue: A petition for adoption was filed in the same judicial district as the parents' dissolution of marriage but did not come before the same judge. The father argued that only the court having jurisdiction over the dissolution proceedings should be able to consider a petition to terminate his parental rights. The Supreme Court found no such jurisdictional requirement under 40-8-107 (now repealed). In re Adoption of S.E., 232 M 31, 755 P2d 27, 45 St. Rep. 843 (1988).

Venue Determined by Filing of Adoption Petition: Where adoption petition was filed in District Court of Lincoln County, State Welfare Department (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) was ordered to investigate petitioners' home and to file a report, and the Department did file such report to the court after which it filed petition in District Court of Missoula County to have the child, who had been taken from Lincoln County and placed in a foster home in Missoula County, declared dependent and neglected and to award permanent custody to the Department, jurisdiction was in the District Court in Lincoln County, and District Court in Missoula County did not have jurisdiction and would be required to dismiss the petition before it. State ex rel. Habeck v. District Court, 157 M 231, 484 P2d 272 (1971).

Jurisdiction: Section 40-8-107 (now repealed) relates to venue and not jurisdiction; even though only one of joint petitioners in an adoption proceeding was resident of county in which proceeding was held, that was sufficient to confer jurisdiction. In re Adoption of Curtis, 143 M 330, 390 P2d 209 (1964).

Rights and Obligations of Stepfather — Equitable Adoption Not Recognized: Pierce sought custody of his spouse's child in connection with a dissolution of marriage. Pierce never formally adopted the child, but argued that an equitable adoption existed giving him standing to seek custody. The court reaffirmed the law that equitable adoption is not recognized in Montana. To adopt a child, the correct statutory procedures must be followed, and followed rigorously. Pierce had no standing to contest the custody of the child, nor had he any obligation to that child. Pierce v. Pierce, 198 M 255, 645 P2d 1353, 39 St. Rep. 914 (1982).

DECISIONS AFTER 1997 GENERAL REVISION

No Standing by Former Parent to Object to Child's Placement or Assert Child's Rights: Once the parent-child relationship is terminated by the District Court, a former parent has no standing to object to the court's subsequent placement of the child with the Department or by adoption. Similarly, a former parent has no standing to assert a violation of the child's rights as guardian ad litem because the former parent no longer represents the child. In re E.A.T. & T.A.T., 1999 MT 281, 296 M 535, 989 P2d 860, 56 St. Rep. 1133 (1999).

DECISIONS PRIOR TO 1997 GENERAL REVISION

Absence of Department Adoption Placement and Written Consent by Department Head — Adoption Order Improper: Under 40-8-108 (now repealed), a court is not included in the list of entities that may place a child for adoption. Therefore, it was improper for a District Court to order a child's placement in the absence of a placement for adoption by the appropriate state agency and the written consent to adoption executed by the executive head of the Department. In re F.H., 272 M 342, 901 P2d 96, 52 St. Rep. 791 (1995). See also In re Adoption of Hall, 173 M 142, 566 P2d 401 (1977).

Award of Permanent Legal Custody — Authority of Court to Award Custody — Best Interests of Child Standard: The Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) filed a petition requesting the court to terminate parental rights of Mary Ann G. and to grant the Department permanent legal custody of J.J.G., with the right to consent to adoption. Former foster parents of J.J.G. filed a petition seeking permanent custody of the child. The court dismissed the foster parents' petition on grounds that the court could only review the placement actions of the Department but could not make the permanent placement itself. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the lower court erred when it concluded that the foster parents were without legal authority to seek custody of the child and that the lower court had no option other than to grant custody to the Department. The District Court has discretionary authority to transfer legal custody to any qualified individual, including nonrelatives, in order to protect the welfare of the child. In re J.J.G., 266 M 274, 880 P2d 808, 51 St. Rep. 793 (1994), followed in In re E.A.T. & T.A.T., 1999 MT 281, 296 M 535, 989 P2d 860, 56 St. Rep. 1133 (1999).

ADOPTION OF CHILD

Chapter Official Comments

It is the theory of this act that the adoption proceedings should be based on consent. Only then can the adoption court devote its entire attention to the inquiry whether the adoptive home will serve the best interests of the child and whether the child is properly placed in the adoptive home.

Under this theory controversies respecting the termination of parental rights should be settled in other proceedings in a court with jurisdiction of the parties before the adoption proceedings are brought. Once the parental rights are terminated the adoption court in the adoption proceedings has no other function in this respect except to recognize that the parental rights have been legally terminated by consent or by the order of a court of competent jurisdiction, followed by consent of a person, agency or court having authority to consent.

It has been suggested that a procedure should be provided in the adoption act to terminate parental rights where the consent cannot be obtained. Aside from the jurisdictional and procedural difficulties this would entail, it is subject to a basic policy objection. The issues to be tried in a controversy over the termination of parental rights, i e., the degree of unfitness of a parent, are quite different than the inquiry properly before an adoption court. The two should not be mixed. The trial of controversial issues over parental rights should not cast an influence in the adoption proceedings where the sole inquiry should be the future best interests of the child.

Consequently, the determination of parental rights is left to be settled under the laws of the various states, and until terminated, by consent or by a court order in a court having jurisdiction of the parties under laws providing therefor, there can be no adoption proceedings.

The formalities, other than writing, which should be required in respect to the execution of consents in the instances covered by paragraphs (1) and (2) [42-2-301(1) and (2), 42-2-302, and 42-2-608(1)] are subjects on which opinions differ widely and it does not seem that uniformity is essential. Accordingly, the bracketing in the last paragraph of the section has been used to indicate that the matter is left open and to suggest, without limitation, certain options that may commend themselves to legislative authority.

1997 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 480, L. 1997, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because the bill gives the department of public health and human services authority to adopt administrative rules. The rules must provide procedures for the putative father registry, including methods of notification, filing, and accessing information. The department shall adopt rules for licensing child-placing agencies. To the extent feasible, the rules should incorporate existing procedures. The needs of the child in the adoption proceeding must be the primary focus of the rules."

(2) A petition for adoption filed prior to October 1, 1997, is governed by the law in effect at the time the petition was filed.

(3) The putative father registry requirements apply to children born on or after October 1, 1997."

Official Comments

1994 Commissioners' Comment: The provisions of the Indian Child Welfare Act (ICWA), including the provisions that determine whether a tribal or a state court has exclusive or concurrent jurisdiction, preempt this Act whenever an adoptive placement, a consent or relinquishment, a proceeding to terminate parental rights, or an adoption proceeding pertains to an "Indian child." The ICWA defines "Indian child" as an unmarried individual under 18 who is either a member of an Indian tribe or eligible for membership by virtue of being the biological child of a tribal member; 25 U.S.C. §1903(3). A parent or guardian executing a consent or relinquishment under this Act must state that the minor adoptee is not within ICWA's definition of Indian child, Section 2-406(d)(5) [not enacted in Montana], and the court, when granting an adoption, has to indicate if ICWA is applicable to the proceeding, and if so, that its requirements were met. See Section 3-703(a)(8) [not enacted in Montana].

Insufficient Good Cause to Allow Deviation From Adoption Placement Standards of Indian Child Welfare Act: When the Indian child in this matter was 12 weeks old, she was admitted to the hospital with 16 fractured ribs in various stages of healing and several bruises. The attending physician determined that the injuries were a result of abuse, and the child was placed in foster care with a non-Indian family. The District Court held that the child's extraordinary physical and emotional needs constituted good cause to deviate from the Indian Child Welfare Act of 1978 (ICWA) placement provisions regarding adoptive placement with tribal extended family members. The District Court decided that the federal statutory factors were merely examples rather than an exhaustive list of circumstances of good cause and instead applied the Montana best interests of the child standard, concluding that nine extraordinary physical and emotional needs existed, including the child's strong emotional bond with the non-Indian foster family, that warranted deviation from the ICWA. The Supreme Court reversed, finding that the District Court's conclusion was an incorrect application of the law. The ICWA guidelines in 25 U.S.C. 1915(a) provide that a determination of good cause to avoid the placement preferences must be based on one or more of three stated factors, which are the only circumstances constituting good cause. The ICWA guidelines will be strictly applied and liberally construed in favor of a result that is consistent with the preferences in that Act. The emotional attachment between a non-Indian custodian and an Indian child does not necessarily outweigh the interests of the tribe and the child in having the child raised in an Indian community, nor does the child's emotional attachment to foster parents constitute an extraordinary emotional need sufficient to establish good cause to avoid the ICWA placement preferences. In re C.H., 2000 MT 64, 299 M 62, 997 P2d 776, 57 St. Rep. 300 (2000). See also In re Custody of S.E.G., 521 NW 2d 357 (Minn. 1994).

Waiver of Indian Child Welfare Act by Failure of Tribe to Intervene Prior to Termination of Proceeding: In an action by the state to terminate the parental rights of an Indian parent and to place the child, eligible for tribal enrollment, in foster care, the tribe was notified from the outset of the proposed action and did not intervene for a transfer of jurisdiction until after the proceeding had been completed in the state court. The Supreme Court held that although the state proceeding was required by federal law to be transferred to tribal court upon intervention of the tribe, the tribe, when it had notice of the proceeding, had to intervene while there was still a proceeding pending, otherwise the tribe would be considered to have declined transfer of jurisdiction. In re A.P., 1998 MT 176, 289 M 521, 962 P2d 1186, 55 St. Rep. 715 (1998).

No Waiver of Indian Child Welfare Act by Failure of Tribe to Promptly Intervene in Adoption — "Indian Child" Determinable by Tribal Action Following BIA Determination: The Department of Family Services (now the Department of Public Health and Human Services) notified the Turtle Mountain Band of Chippewa (the tribe) several times that the Department sought to terminate the parental rights to Jessica, a minor of one-eighth Indian blood. However, the tribe took no action. The parental rights were subsequently terminated, and the Department commenced adoption proceedings. Just prior to the District Court's determination of Jessica's custody, the tribe sought to intervene, but the District Court determined that the tribe had waived its right to intervention by the nearly 2-year period of inaction following notice by the state to the tribe. The Supreme Court held that there was no requirement in the Indian Child Welfare Act of 1978 that the tribe intervene promptly and that for this reason, the tribe should be allowed to intervene. The Supreme Court also held that the District Court was incorrect in concluding that it would make no difference what the tribe's position was on the issue of whether Jessica was an "Indian child" because the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) decision could be impeached by action of the tribe either before or after the BIA determination. In re Adoption of Riffle, 273 M 237, 902 P2d 542, 52 St. Rep. 954 (1995). On remand, the District Court concluded that the tribe's determination that Jessica was an Indian child and a member of the tribe was conclusive and that the ICWA applied to Jessica's adoption. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the tribe is the ultimate authority on eligibility for tribal membership and that enrollment of the child in the tribe was not required as long as the tribe recognized Jessica as a member. Enrollment is a common but not exclusive evidentiary means of determining membership in a tribe, but enrollment and membership are not synonymous. Given the tribe's determination that Jessica was an Indian child, the District Court properly concluded that the tribe's determination was conclusive and that the adoptive placement preferences found at 25 U.S.C. 1915 of the ICWA applied, including the placement preference with Jessica's uncle who met the definition of "extended family member". Jessica's best interests were served by placement with her uncle, and her constitutional rights were not violated through the application of the ICWA. In re Adoption of Riffle, 277 M 388, 922 P2d 510, 53 St. Rep. 723 (1996).

Applicability of Indian Child Welfare Act to Adoption Anonymity Considerations — Conformity With Act Required: Baby Girl Jane Doe was born at the Northern Montana Hospital in Havre. She was of Indian descent and eligible for membership in the Chippewa Cree Tribe on the Rocky Boy's Reservation. After the child's birth, her mother refused to sign the birth certificate, indicated her intent to relinquish the child to the Hill County Department of Family Services, and left the hospital. The Department filed for an order terminating parental rights and giving the Department the right to consent to the child's adoption. The tribe intervened and moved for disclosure of the mother's identity in order to ensure that any child placement conformed to the preferences provided in the federal Indian Child Welfare Act of 1978 (ICWA). The District Court denied the motion based on the mother's stated preference for anonymity. On appeal, the tribe asserted that its right to intervene and advocate enforcement of the ICWA was meaningless when the first preference under the ICWA is for placement with the child's extended family, yet the court would not reveal the identity of the natural parent. The Supreme Court cited Miss. Band of Choctaw Indians v. Holyfield, 490 US 30, 104 L Ed 2d 29, 109 S Ct 1597 (1989), in holding that, absent good cause to the contrary, the ICWA mandates that adoptive placements be made preferentially with: (1) members of the child's extended family; (2) other members of the same tribe; or (3) other Indian families. Permitting individual tribal members to avoid tribal exclusive jurisdiction by the simple expedient of giving birth off the reservation would to a large extent nullify the purpose of the ICWA. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court and ordered that the tribe be informed of the identity of the mother and her extended family, respecting her right to privacy to the extent possible without interfering with the tribe's rights under the ICWA. In re Baby Girl Jane Doe, 262 M 380, 865 P2d 1090, 50 St. Rep. 1555 (1993).

Exclusive Jurisdiction Over Indian Child Under Indian Child Welfare Act: Provisions of the Indian Child Welfare Act of 1978 (25 U.S.C. 1901, et seq.) concerning jurisdiction over Indian child custody proceedings place exclusive jurisdiction in the Indian tribe if an Indian child is a ward of the tribal court, regardless of the residence or domicile of the child. In this adoption proceeding, it was error on the part of the District Court to determine that Montana had concurrent jurisdiction over the child at issue because the tribal court previously had found her a ward of the tribal court. In re M.R.D.B., 241 M 455, 787 P2d 1219, 47 St. Rep. 303 (1990).

Right to Intervene in Adoption of Indian Child — State Commitment to Indian Child Welfare Act: Prior to birth, Nellie Silk, paternal aunt of M.E.M., expressed an interest in caring for the child because she was aware of the parents' problems with parenting; however, after the child was born he was placed in foster care by the Hill County Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (SRS). Upon learning of the placement, Silk wrote to SRS requesting custody. SRS responded that placement with Silk would be inappropriate because of SRS efforts to reintegrate the family, but that Silk would be considered if adoption were to occur. After parental rights were terminated (see In re M.E.M., 209 M 192, 679 P2d 1241, 41 St. Rep. 636 (1984)), Silk was not informed of the proceedings, of M.E.M.'s availability for adoption, or of M.E.M.'s preadoptive placement with a non-Indian family. Silk's subsequent petition for adoption and motion to intervene were denied by the District Court. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that Silk had an interest in adoption stemming from the Indian Child Welfare Act of 1978 (ICWA), 25 U.S.C. 1901, et seq., and that the state had a strong and independent commitment to the principles embodied in the ICWA. Silk also had a right to intervene under Rule 24(a), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), and although the District Court had ruled that her motion was not timely, the Supreme Court held that the motion must be granted in light of the fact that she was kept in ignorance and could not have been more diligent or earlier in her petition or motion. In re M.E.M., 223 M 234, 725 P2d 212, 43 St. Rep. 1684 (1986), followed in In re Adoption of Riffle, 273 M 237, 902 P2d 542, 52 St. Rep. 954 (1995). See also In re K.H. & K.L.E., 1999 MT 128, 294 M 466, 981 P2d 1190, 56 St. Rep. 515 (1999).

Jurisdiction: When the adoptive parents, adopted child, and natural parent were enrolled members of the Northern Cheyenne Tribe and resided on its Reservation, the District Court had jurisdiction notwithstanding ordinance granting tribal court jurisdiction. State ex rel. Firecrow v. District Court, 167 M 139, 536 P2d 190 (1975), reversed in Fisher v. District Court, 424 US 382, 96 S Ct 943, 47 L Ed 2d 106 (1976), wherein it was held that the tribal court has exclusive subject matter jurisdiction over petition for adoption of minor Indian child by two Indian adults living on reservation.

DECISIONS PRIOR TO 1997 GENERAL REVISION

Absence of Department Adoption Placement and Written Consent by Department Head — Adoption Order Improper: Under 40-8-108 (now repealed), a court is not included in the list of entities that may place a child for adoption. Therefore, it was improper for a District Court to order a child's placement in the absence of a placement for adoption by the appropriate state agency and the written consent to adoption executed by the executive head of the Department. In re F.H., 272 M 342, 901 P2d 96, 52 St. Rep. 791 (1995). See also In re Adoption of Hall, 173 M 142, 566 P2d 401 (1977).

Natural Father's Consent to Adoption Not Required When Evidence Clear He Abandoned Child: The father had only visited with his daughter twice and called her on the telephone twice in 8 years and during that time never paid support. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's finding that the record contained clear and convincing evidence that the natural father had willfully abandoned his daughter, and therefore his consent to the child's adoption by her grandparents was not required. Adoption of C.R.D., 240 M 106, 782 P2d 1280, 46 St. Rep. 1979 (1989).

Best Interest of Child:

If the statutory requirements for consent to adoption are met, the best interests of the child become the paramount consideration. In re Adoption of S.T.V., 226 M 18, 733 P2d 841, 44 St. Rep. 425 (1987).

In adoption cases the initial threshold requirement is statutory compliance with consent requirements because of the harshness of terminating parental rights. In re Adoption of Smigaj, 171 M 531, 560 P2d 141 (1977).

Part 4
Voluntary Relinquishment and Consent to Adopt

Part Official Comments

Subsection (a) [40-6-128, now repealed] provides that a father whose identity is presumed under Section 4 [40-6-105] or whose paternity has been formally ascertained, must be given notice of an adoption proceeding relating to his child.

Subsection (b) [40-6-128, now repealed] deals with the case in which the father has not been formally ascertained and the mother seeks to surrender the child for adoption. In the light of the U.S. Supreme Court's decisions in Stanley v. Illinois, 92 S.Ct. 1208 (1972); Rothstein v. Lutheran Social Services of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan, 92 S.Ct. 1488 (1972) and Vanderlaan v. Vanderlaan, 92 S.Ct. 1488 (1972) and related state court decisions, it is considered essential that the unknown or unascertained father's potential rights be terminated formally in order to safeguard the subsequent adoption.

Subsections (c) through (f) [40-6-126 through 40-6-129, now repealed] provide a procedure by which the court may ascertain the identity of the father and permit speedy termination of his potential rights if he shows no interest in the child. If, on the other hand, the natural father or a man representing himself to be the natural father claims custodial rights, the court is given authority to determine custodial rights. It is contemplated that there may be cases in which the man alleging himself to be the father is so clearly unfit to take custody of the child that the court would proceed to terminate his potential parental rights without deciding whether the man actually is the father of the child. If, on the other hand, the man alleging himself to be the father and claiming custody is prima facie fit to have custody of the child, an action to ascertain paternity is indicated, unless a voluntary acknowledgment can be obtained in accordance with Section 4(a)(5) [40-6-105(1)(e)] of this Act.

Subsection (e) [40-6-128, now repealed] raises serious constitutional questions in that it attempts to cut off after a given period any claim seeking to reopen a judgment terminating parental rights. While of questionable constitutionality, such a provision is not without precedent. A similar provision is contained in Section 15(b) of the revised Uniform Adoption Act, approved by the Commissioners on Uniform State Laws in 1969, and other similar provisions are contained in the adoption acts of a number of states. Moreover, it must be considered that the case of adoption differs from other situations. The parent's claim to his child can hardly be compared to a person's claim to property. The Supreme Court itself recognized that the interest of the child is heavily involved in these cases when remanding the Rothstein case to the Wisconsin Supreme Court, requiring that the court give "due consideration [to] the completion of the adoption proceedings and the fact that the child has apparently lived with the adoptive family for the intervening period of time." Cf. Armstrong v. Manzo, 380 U.S. 545 (1965).

Subsection (f) seeks to conform to the following footnote in Stanley v. Illinois:

"We note in passing that the incremental cost of offering unwed fathers an opportunity for individualized hearings on fitness appears to be minimal. If unwed fathers, in the main, do not care about the disposition of their children, they will not appear to demand hearings. If they do care, under the scheme here held invalid, Illinois would admittedly at some later time have to afford them a properly focused hearing in a custody or adopting proceeding.

Extending opportunity for hearing to unwed fathers who desire and claim competence to care for their children creates no constitutional or procedural obstacle to foreclosing those unwed fathers who are not so inclined. The Illinois law governing procedure in juvenile cases . . . provides for personal service, notice by certified mail or for notice by publication when personal or certified mail service cannot be had or when notice is directed to unknown respondents under the style of 'all whom it may concern.' Unwed fathers who do not promptly respond cannot complain if their children are declared wards of the State. Those who do respond retain the burden of proving their fatherhood."

This footnote might be interpreted to require publication in all cases in which a child with unascertained paternity is surrendered for adoption. The Committee considered, however, that there will be many such cases in which it will be highly probable that publication will not lead to the identification of the father. In view of that and the fact that in nearly all cases publication will lead to substantial embarrassment for the mother, the Committee thought it appropriate to allow the court to determine whether, in the particular circumstances of each case, publication would be likely to lead to the identification of the father. One serious consequence that might result from an indiscriminate publication requirement is that some mothers may be caused to withhold their children from adoption even where adoption would be in the child's best interest.

DECISIONS PRIOR TO 1997 GENERAL REVISION

Inapplicability to Dissolution Proceedings: Former section 40-6-135 (now repealed) related to relinquishment of parental rights in adoption situations and did not apply to marriage dissolution proceedings. In re Marriage of McKinnon, 251 M 347, 825 P2d 551, 49 St. Rep. 69 (1992).

Constitutionality — Contest of Voluntariness of Release: The natural mother argued that 40-6-124 (now repealed, see similarity to repealed section compiler's comment) required her to obtain the consent of the prospective adoptive parents before filing an action to set aside her parental release for involuntariness. This, she argued, effectively precluded her from contesting the validity of the parental release, thereby depriving her of due process of law. The court did not read 40-6-124 as prohibiting an action to contest the voluntariness of the release unless the consent of the person to whom the child has been released was first obtained. The procedure contained in subsection (7) was required only when there was no issue of voluntariness of the parental release. In re Adoption of B.G.B., 183 M 347, 599 P2d 375 (1979).

Official Comments

1994 Commissioners' Comment: This section helps clarify the distinction between consents and relinquishments and between direct and agency placements. A parent or guardian who makes a direct placement of a minor for adoption must execute a consent for the adoption to go forward. If the parent or guardian prefers, instead, to have an agency place the minor and consent to the minor's adoption, the parent or guardian has to relinquish all rights with respect to the minor to the agency. From then on, the agency acts in lieu of the parent or guardian: it acquires custody of the minor and the authority to place the child for adoption pursuant to the procedures in Sections 2-103 and 2-104 [neither enacted in Montana]. An agency may also acquire the right to place the minor for adoption pursuant to a court order.

DECISIONS PRIOR TO 1997 GENERAL REVISION

Jurisdiction After Child Placed for Adoption Out of State: Once a parent voluntarily signed and executed a form relinquishing parental rights to an adoption agency, the adoption agency became the "sending agency" as defined in 41-4-101, Art. II, with the power to place the child for adoption out of state. The only standing the parent then had in Montana courts was to seek a revocation of the relinquishment with the adoption agency as copetitioner. Under 40-6-135(7) (now repealed), the relinquishment became irrevocable once the child was placed for adoption out of state, and Montana lost jurisdiction. In re Male Child Born July 15, 1985, to L.C., 221 M 309, 718 P2d 660, 43 St. Rep. 835 (1986).

Violation of Interstate Compact on Placement of Children — Illegal Placement as a Result — Revocation of Parent's Consent: Failure of prospective adoptive parents to notify the appropriate public authorities in writing before bringing their prospective adoptive child into Montana violated the Interstate Compact on Placement of Children. The prospective adoptive parents' status as custodians did not prevent the operation of the Compact. By virtue of the failure of the prospective adoptive parents to comply with the Compact, the placement of the child with the prospective adoptive parents in Montana constituted illegal placement under the provisions of the Compact, and the failure to comply constitutes full and sufficient grounds for the revocation of the previously executed "parent's consent". In re the Adoption of T.M.M., 186 M 460, 608 P2d 130 (1980).

Revocation of Consent by Court — Exception: Although a Missouri court having custody of children revoked its original consent on the ground it did not have jurisdiction due to a lack of proper notice to natural parents, 40-8-112 (now repealed) made that consent irrevocable. The only exception to 40-8-112 (now repealed) is upon a finding by the court that the best interests of the child would be served by allowing revocation of consent. In re Adoption of Conley v. Walden, 171 M 58, 555 P2d 960 (1976).

Strict Compliance Required for Effective Revocation of Consent: Mother, after executing affidavit of waiver and consent to adoption, could not effectively revoke that consent by letter addressed to County Department of Public Welfare without following the procedure prescribed by 40-8-112 (now repealed). Application of Hendrickson, 159 M 217, 496 P2d 1115 (1972).

Official Comments

1994 Commissioners' Comment: This section specifies the general legal consequences of a consent or relinquishment and is consistent with the Act's intention to keep track of a minor and assign responsibility for the minor's care and support throughout the adoption process. If executed in substantial compliance with this Part, either document is final and irrevocable except under limited circumstances and entitles the prospective adoptive parents in a direct placement and the agency in an agency placement to the custody of the minor and requires them to provide support and care for the minor. The section also specifies the extent to which further notice of the adoption proceeding is or is not waived by a consent or relinquishment.

DECISIONS PRIOR TO 1997 GENERAL REVISION

Termination of Parental Rights When Relinquishment Form Executed: A parent argued that under the definition of "placement for adoption" in 40-8-103 (now repealed), placement was improper since the adoption agency had not secured a termination order from District Court prior to placing the child out of state. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that the definition did not require a judicial termination order but only that parental rights had been terminated. The court held that parental rights were terminated when the relinquishment form was executed. In re Male Child Born July 15, 1985, to L.C., 221 M 309, 718 P2d 660, 43 St. Rep. 835 (1986).

Finding of Abuse, Neglect, or Dependency Necessary Before Consideration of Best Interests of the Child: M.G.M. was born out of wedlock and had little contact with her natural father until the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) placed M.G.M. in a foster home and terminated her mother's parental rights. The Department then sought to terminate the father's parental rights. To terminate his parental rights, the court must first find that the child is abused, neglected, or dependent. Only when such a finding has been made can the court apply the best interests of the child test. DECISIONS AFTER 1997 GENERAL REVISION

Proper Termination of Parental Rights Based on Conviction for Sexual Assault of Child and Sexual Intercourse Without Consent With Child: Snyder pleaded guilty to sexual assault on a child and sexual intercourse without consent with a child based on his involvement with three young girls. His marriage was dissolved 6 months later and custody was awarded to his former wife, who remarried and then petitioned for termination of Snyder's parental rights so that their son could be adopted by her new husband. The petition was granted, and Snyder appealed. The plain language of 42-2-608 provides that the court may terminate a parent's rights and make the child available for adoption if a parent is convicted of sexual assault on a child or sexual intercourse without consent with a child. There is no statutory requirement that the sexual assault on a child or sexual intercourse without consent with a child has been committed on the adoptee. The trial court did not err when it held that clear and convincing evidence supported the termination of the father's parental rights based on his prior convictions. DECISIONS AFTER 1997 GENERAL REVISION

Proper Termination of Parental Rights Based on Conviction for Sexual Assault of Child and Sexual Intercourse Without Consent With Child: Snyder pleaded guilty to sexual assault on a child and sexual intercourse without consent with a child based on his involvement with three young girls. His marriage was dissolved 6 months later and custody was awarded to his former wife, who remarried and then petitioned for termination of Snyder's parental rights so that their son could be adopted by her new husband. The plain language of this section provides that the court may terminate a parent's rights and make the child available for adoption if a parent is convicted of sexual assault on a child or sexual intercourse without consent with a child. There is no statutory requirement that the sexual assault on a child or sexual intercourse without consent with a child has been committed on the adoptee. The trial court did not err when it held that clear and convincing evidence supported the termination of the father's parental rights based on his prior convictions. In re Adoption of Snyder, 2000 MT 61, 299 M 40, 996 P2d 875, 57 St. Rep. 288 (2000), following In re J.N. & A.N., 1999 MT 64, 293 M 524, 977 P2d 317, 56 St. Rep. 269 (1999).

Factors in Whether Nonconsenting Parent Able to Contribute to Support of Child: In determining whether a parent who does not consent to adoption of a child is able to contribute to support of the child, the District Court shall consider the following factors: (1) the parent's ability to earn income; (2) the parent's willingness to earn an income and support the child; (3) the availability of employment; and (4) the parent's use of funds to provide that parent with only the bare necessities before contributing to child support. In re Adoption of C.R.N., 1999 MT 92, 294 M 202, 979 P2d 210, 56 St. Rep. 388 (1999).

Termination of Parental Rights and Adoption Not to Be Accomplished in Same Action: The District Court entered an order terminating the mother's parental rights and allowing the adoption of her children without her consent based upon the fact that her rights had been terminated. The Supreme Court reversed on the basis that the statute allowing for adoption without a parent's consent contemplated that the parent's rights had been terminated by a separate action at some point in the past. In re Adoption of Jane, John, & Mary Doe, 277 M 251, 921 P2d 875, 53 St. Rep. 631 (1996).

Absence of Department Adoption Placement and Written Consent by Department Head — Adoption Order Improper: Under 40-8-108 (now repealed), a court is not included in the list of entities that may place a child for adoption. Therefore, it was improper for a District Court to order a child's placement in the absence of a placement for adoption by the appropriate state agency and the written consent to adoption executed by the executive head of the Department. In re F.H., 272 M 342, 901 P2d 96, 52 St. Rep. 791 (1995). See also In re Adoption of Hall, 173 M 142, 566 P2d 401 (1977).

Inability to Contribute Financial Support to Child Not Abandonment — No Prior Judicial Termination of Parental Rights — Third-Party Petition to Adopt Properly Dismissed: Parents of S.P.M. were divorced and granted joint custody of the child. After a period of time, the father took sole custody after a Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) worker filed a report concluding that the mother's new partner was abusing the child. The original joint custody decree was not modified. The father and child moved out of state for 4 years. On their return, the mother petitioned for custody and visitation. In response, the father's new wife petitioned to adopt the child. The District Court dismissed the wife's petition on the grounds that the mother's consent to adoption was required and that the mother had not abandoned the child. The 6-month requirement for abandonment in 41-3-102 applies only to the willful surrender of custody, and even though the mother had not supported the child for 4 years, this did not constitute abandonment when the mother was not capable of providing financial support. Determination of neglect necessitates a proceeding separate from a consent for adoption hearing. Issues in controversy over termination of parental rights are different from inquiry before an adoption court, and the two inquiries should not be mixed. Adoption of S.P.M., 266 M 269, 880 P2d 297, 51 St. Rep. 808 (1994).

Elements of Parent-Child Relationship in Evaluation of Best Interest of Child: A natural parent's rights cannot be terminated under 40-8-111 (now repealed) independent of the determination that adoption is appropriate. Adoption is not appropriate unless it is found to be in the child's best interest. In evaluating the child's best interest, the court should consider benefits of the child's relationship with the natural parent in addition to the benefits derived from financial support. In re Adoption of V.R.O. & V.N.O., 250 M 517, 822 P2d 83, 48 St. Rep. 946 (1991).

Findings Insufficient on Ability to Pay Support — Remand: The order granting a partial summary judgment terminating parental rights based on lack of support during the year prior to filing of the petition listed the following facts in support of the determination that the parent was able to provide support: (1) the parent owned certain assets, including real property, musical equipment, two vehicles, rifles, chain saws, and a truck topper; (2) the parent received a $24,000 lump-sum workers' compensation settlement during the time in question; and (3) the parent did not come into court to attempt to modify the payments but simply chose not to pay support. However, it was not clear whether the assets were convertible to cash that could be used to pay support or whether any of the workers' compensation settlement remained available for this use. Further, the findings did not include discussion on the parent's income or ability to earn income during the relevant period or on the cost of providing himself with the necessities of life and were therefore insufficient as to the issue of the ability to pay child support, warranting remand. In re Adoption of V.R.O. & V.N.O., 250 M 517, 822 P2d 83, 48 St. Rep. 946 (1991). See also In re Adoption of Jane, John, & Mary Doe, 277 M 251, 921 P2d 875, 53 St. Rep. 631 (1996).

De Minimis Support Payments During Year Prior to Petition for Adoption — Parental Rights Terminated: Father maintained his consent was required for adoption of his children by their stepfather because father paid $180 in support during the year preceding stepfather's petition for adoption. Father was obligated to pay $375 a month and to maintain insurance on the children during that year. The Supreme Court noted that any payment of support must first be applied to satisfy the earliest arrearage before it is applied to the support owed during the year before the filing of the petition and that payments made after the filing of the petition may not be applied to the preadoption year. Considering that father's payments were de minimis at best and that he had not maintained insurance, termination of his parental rights was proper. A challenge of the constitutionality of the termination of parental rights based on nonsupport, as authorized by 40-8-111 (now repealed), was dismissed on procedural grounds. In re Adoption of C.J.H., W.L.H., & T.A.H., 246 M 52, 803 P2d 214, 47 St. Rep. 2258 (1990).

Lack of Court Order Requiring Support — Mere Inquiry Insufficient to Toll Statute: The absence of a child support order does not absolve a parent of the legal duty to support a child, nor is mere inquiry regarding child support sufficient to toll the statutory support requirement of 40-8-111 (now repealed). In re Adoption of D.J.V., 244 M 209, 796 P2d 1076, 47 St. Rep. 1522 (1990), followed in In re Adoption of J.M.H. & S.B.H., 264 M 381, 871 P2d 1326, 51 St. Rep. 290 (1994), and In re Adoption of C.R.N., 1999 MT 92, 294 M 202, 979 P2d 210, 56 St. Rep. 388 (1999).

Caring for One of Three Children Constituting Nonsupport: The lower court terminated the natural father's parental rights without his consent on the basis that he had not paid support for more than 1 year. The Supreme Court affirmed the termination, holding that the fact that the father had cared for one of his three children did not constitute compliance with the dissolution order. In re Adoption of R.M., 241 M 111, 785 P2d 709, 47 St. Rep. 124 (1990).

Service on Party's Attorney Sufficient Notice: The trial court terminated the natural father's parental rights without his consent on the basis that he had not paid child support for a period of 1 year. The father argued that he had left the state prior to the finalization of the decree and never learned of his support obligation. The Supreme Court affirmed the termination and ruled that service on the father's attorney was sufficient notice, even though the attorney did not know of the father's whereabouts. In re Adoption of R.M., 241 M 111, 785 P2d 709, 47 St. Rep. 124 (1990), followed in In re Adoption of J.M.H. & S.B.H., 264 M 381, 871 P2d 1326, 51 St. Rep. 290 (1994), holding that natural father, who was notified of the hearing, waived due process claims by failing to attend or send a representative to the "best interest" hearing.

Court Need Find Only One Substitute for Consent to Proceed With Adoption: The Supreme Court held that the lower court had to find only one of the statutorily enumerated substitutes for consent in order to proceed with an adoption. There was clear evidence of abandonment, therefore the court did not have to consider the sufficiency of the evidence concerning nonsupport or the validity of the guardians' consent to the adoption. Adoption of C.R.D., 240 M 106, 782 P2d 1280, 46 St. Rep. 1979 (1989), followed in In re L.E.B., 259 M 492, 856 P2d 1382, 50 St. Rep. 895 (1993).

Natural Father's Consent to Adoption Not Required When Evidence Clear He Abandoned Child: The father had only visited with his daughter twice and called her on the telephone twice in 8 years and during that time never paid support. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's finding that the record contained clear and convincing evidence that the natural father had willfully abandoned his daughter, and therefore his consent to the child's adoption by her grandparents was not required. Adoption of C.R.D., 240 M 106, 782 P2d 1280, 46 St. Rep. 1979 (1989).

Question of Abandonment Not Within Subject Matter Jurisdiction Regarding Modification: Husband was served a petition for adoption of his children by wife's new husband. The petition alleged abandonment. The District Court improperly considered the question of abandonment during the postdissolution hearing, which centered around the issues of visitation and unpaid child support. The question was outside the scope of issues included within the original dissolution decree, was to be decided by the court hearing the adoption proceedings, and should have been dismissed under Rule 12(h)(3), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). In re Marriage of Callahan, 233 M 465, 762 P2d 205, 45 St. Rep. 1639 (1988).

Purview of Court to Evaluate Conflicting Testimony — Equitable Estoppel Not Bar to Claim of Failure to Pay Support: Father claimed he had not made support payments because mother told him she wanted to make it on her own, that she was not worried about payments while he was unemployed, that she had refused his offer of money from the sale of property, and that for these reasons she was estopped from consenting to termination of his parental rights. Mother testified she told father that support payments must be made through the Clerk of Court and that she expected payments while he was working. It was entirely within the court's purview to rely on mother's testimony, and the claim of failure to support was not barred by equitable estoppel. In re Adoption of S.E., 232 M 31, 755 P2d 27, 45 St. Rep. 843 (1988).

Standard of Proof — Clear and Convincing Evidence: The natural father erroneously characterized the determination of whether his parental rights should be terminated as a "best interest of the child" question. The "best interest" test is applied after parental rights have been terminated to determine whether the adoption should be allowed. Rather, the standard of proof under 40-8-111 (now repealed) is clear and convincing evidence. In re Adoption of S.E., 232 M 31, 755 P2d 27, 45 St. Rep. 843 (1988), followed in In re Adoption of J.B.T. & W.D.T., 250 M 205, 819 P2d 178, 48 St. Rep. 793 (1991).

Termination of Parental Rights of Joint Custody: Father argued that parental rights of a parent with joint custody could not be terminated under 40-8-111 (now repealed); however, the provisions allowing termination upon failure to support are not limited to a particular type of custodial status. Any parent who is able but does not support a child for 1 year forfeits the right to withhold consent to adoption. In re Adoption of S.E., 232 M 31, 755 P2d 27, 45 St. Rep. 843 (1988).

Adoption Proceeding Not to Be Thwarted by Refusal of Natural Parent to Consent: A putative father argued that 40-8-111 (now repealed) did not apply because it required that a petition for adoption be filed and no petition had been filed at the time he was asked for his consent. He never paid any support for the child, but contended that a formal petition would have put him on notice of the proceeding, thus allowing him to make support payments. The Supreme Court found that this argument was circuitous and that to accept it would allow any natural parent to thwart a legitimate adoption proceeding merely by refusing consent so that no valid petition for adoption could be filed. In re Adoption of R.G.C., 228 M 345, 742 P2d 471, 44 St. Rep. 1586 (1987).

Best Interest Test Properly Applied: A putative father contended that 40-6-130 (now repealed) required a finding as to his fitness as a parent before a determination could be made as to what was best for the child. While proof of abuse or neglect is required to terminate a parent's rights in a proceeding involving a youth in need of care, in adoption proceedings the standard to be applied, as outlined in 40-6-130 (now repealed), is the best interest of the child. In re Adoption of R.G.C., 228 M 345, 742 P2d 471, 44 St. Rep. 1586 (1987).

Measurement of Support Period: In adoption proceedings under 40-8-109 (now repealed), the provisions of 40-8-111 (now repealed) relating to the 1-year period of support should be measured against the commencement of the adoption proceedings rather than against the date of the petition for adoption. In re Adoption of R.G.C., 228 M 345, 742 P2d 471, 44 St. Rep. 1586 (1987).

Adoption Without Consent When No Child Support Paid — Ability to Work: Natural father contended he did not pay child support for over 1 year due to physical and psychological problems. The Supreme Court affirmed adoption without consent upon finding the natural father was able to maintain employment but did not by choice, voluntarily chose a lifestyle to avoid gainful employment while allowing others to support him, and failed to apply some proceeds of a workers' compensation settlement toward his child support obligations. Further, the District Court did not err in allowing evidence concerning events outside of the 1-year period because the events were relevant to the natural father's mental and physical condition during the subject year. In re Adoption of J.M.G., J.J.G., & C.C.G., 226 M 525, 736 P2d 967, 44 St. Rep. 869 (1987).

Best Interests of Child: If the statutory requirements for consent to adoption are met, the best interests of the child become the paramount consideration. In re Adoption of S.T.V., 226 M 18, 733 P2d 841, 44 St. Rep. 425 (1987), followed in In re Adoption of V.R.O. & V.N.O., 250 M 517, 822 P2d 83, 48 St. Rep. 946 (1991).

Providing Articles of Clothing or In-Kind Payments — Support Obligation Not Satisfied: A parent's obligation to contribute to the financial support of a child is not satisfied by provision of articles of clothing or other in-kind payments. In re Adoption of K.L.J.K., 224 M 418, 730 P2d 1135, 43 St. Rep. 2297 (1986), affirming In re Adoption of S.L.R., 196 M 411, 640 P2d 886 (1982), and followed in In re L.E.B., 259 M 492, 856 P2d 1382, 50 St. Rep. 895 (1993). See also In re Adoption of J.B.T. & W.D.T., 250 M 205, 819 P2d 178, 48 St. Rep. 793 (1991), and In re Adoption of C.R.N., 1999 MT 92, 294 M 202, 979 P2d 210, 56 St. Rep. 388 (1999).

Support Other Than as Required by Decree — When Valid: The father was obligated by the decree to pay $125 child support a month for each of two children. The parents later orally agreed that each would totally support one child. The father's conduct of totally supporting one child under the agreement was held to be the equivalent of providing financial support for both children, and therefore his consent was required for adoption of the other child. In re Adoption of E.S.R., 218 M 118, 706 P2d 132, 42 St. Rep. 1448 (1985).

Support During One-Year Period Before Filing Petition: W.A.S. paid child support from the time of his divorce until June 1981, which was shortly after his former spouse remarried. No support payment was made in July 1981, but a payment made in August 1981 was applied to July. No other payment was made until December 1981, when a $450 payment was made. On December 2, 1982, a petition was filed seeking the adoption of R.A.S. by his stepfather. The court determined that the December 1981 payment applied to August, September, and October 1981 and that W.A.S. did not contribute to the support of his child during a period of 1 year before the filing of the petition for adoption. Since no contribution was made, the consent of W.A.S. was not required. In re the Adoption of R.A.S., 208 M 438, 679 P2d 220, 41 St. Rep. 451 (1984), followed in In re Adoption of C.F.B., Jr., 208 M 507, 679 P2d 777, 41 St. Rep. 498 (1984), In re Adoption of B.L.P., 224 M 182, 728 P2d 803, 43 St. Rep. 2116 (1986), In re Adoption of S.E., 232 M 31, 755 P2d 27, 45 St. Rep. 843 (1988), In re Adoption of J.B.T. & W.D.T., 250 M 205, 819 P2d 178, 48 St. Rep. 793 (1991), and in In re L.E.B., 259 M 492, 856 P2d 1382, 50 St. Rep. 895 (1993).

Finding of Abuse, Neglect, or Dependency Necessary Before Consideration of Best Interests of the Child: M.G.M. was born out of wedlock and had little contact with her natural father until the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) placed M.G.M. in a foster home and terminated her mother's parental rights. The Department then sought to terminate the father's parental rights. To terminate his parental rights, the court must first find that the child is abused, neglected, or dependent. Only when such a finding has been made can the court apply the best interests of the child test. In re M.G.M., 201 M 400, 654 P2d 994, 39 St. Rep. 2191 (1982), followed in In re J.B., 278 M 160, 923 P2d 1096, 53 St. Rep. 901 (1996).

Determination of Neglect at Custody Hearing Not Sufficient: After the death of the custodial mother, the maternal grandmother took the children into her home. The natural father petitioned to have the children restored to his custody. The grandmother requested custody and filed a petition for adoption. In a proceeding pursuant to 40-4-221, the grandmother was granted custody because the father had failed to make child support payments for more than a year and had generally neglected the children. The trial court properly dismissed the grandmother's petition for adoption for lack of jurisdiction. The determination of neglect needed to excuse the need for the father's consent to adoption under 40-8-111 (now repealed) must be made in a separate proceeding pursuant to Title 41, ch. 3, part 6. Brost v. Glasgow, 200 M 194, 651 P2d 32, 39 St. Rep. 1679 (1982).

Termination of Parent's Parental Rights for Failure to Support Child: Mother filed petition for termination of father's parental rights and replacement of him as the children's father with her second husband. Father had for the 2 years prior to the petition failed to make court-ordered child support payments, although financially able to do so. Father made two lump-sum payments after filing of the petition but was still several thousand dollars in arrears. Mother's testimony indicated she had received only $670 from father, who was supposed to make the support payments to the court. Father's testimony indicated, at best, that he contributed $2,725 to the children's support during the 2-year period, several thousand dollars less than that due. The District Court erroneously failed to terminate father's parental rights, which were terminated by Supreme Court on appeal by mother. In re Marriage of Burns, 198 M 365, 646 P2d 530, 39 St. Rep. 1059 (1982).

"If Able to Support" — Voluntary Change in Lifestyle: The nonsupporting parent was mentally and physically capable of obtaining full-time employment but refused to do so. His voluntary choice of a lifestyle was inconsistent with his responsibility to contribute to the child's support, and for the purposes of 40-8-111 (now repealed), he was able to support the child. A parent should not be able to enjoy the benefits of parental rights while voluntarily shunning the burden of parental obligation. In re the Adoption of S.L.R., 196 M 411, 640 P2d 886, 39 St. Rep. 156 (1982), followed in In re Adoption of B.L.P., 224 M 182, 728 P2d 803, 43 St. Rep. 2116 (1986), In re Adoption of K.L.J.K., 224 M 418, 730 P2d 1135, 43 St. Rep. 2297 (1986), and in In re Adoption of J.M.H. & S.B.H., 264 M 381, 871 P2d 1326, 51 St. Rep. 290 (1994). See also In re Adoption of J.B.T. & W.D.T., 250 M 205, 819 P2d 178, 48 St. Rep. 793 (1991).

Proof of Nonsupport, Abandonment, Cruelty, and Neglect Insufficient to Excuse Consent of Natural Father: Where the stepfather of two children petitioned the court to adopt those children and the children's natural father filed an objection to the petition, the District Court did not err in its refusal to excuse the requirement that consent of the natural father be obtained. The evidence submitted by the stepfather to prove nonsupport, abandonment, cruelty, and neglect of the children failed to meet the burden of proof required by 40-8-111 (now repealed), and the District Court therefore properly dismissed the petition for adoption for lack of parental consent. Other grounds for excusing consent and allegations of error were not reviewed by the Supreme Court, as they were raised for the first time on appeal. In re the Adoption of T.G.K. & J.P.K., 193 M 139, 630 P2d 740, 38 St. Rep. 1030 (1981).

Absence of Abuse or Neglect: Judgment was reversed and custody of two children taken from their maternal aunt and returned to the natural father since there was no showing that the children were abused or neglected. The District Court improperly deprived the father of custody by means of the subterfuge of a guardianship that had outlived the purpose for which it was created. In re Guardianship of Doney, 174 M 282, 570 P2d 575 (1977).

Invalid Adoption Decree: An adoption decree was invalid for lack of notice to the natural parents and the absence of consent by abandonment since only 24 days elapsed from birth to filing of the adoption petition. That being so, laches and estoppel could not save the nonexistent decree but the best interests of the child justified a permanent custody award to the defendants. In re Adoption of Hall, 173 M 142, 566 P2d 401 (1977).

Burden of Proving That Consent Not Required: When petitioner relies upon the statutory exception to consent based on failure to support, he bears the burden of proving that the parent was able to give support in addition to showing failure to contribute; the court will not waive the consent requirement if the petitioner is attempting to argue abandonment because such allegation was not contained in the petition. In re Adoption of Challeen, 172 M 362, 563 P2d 1120 (1977).

Support as Financial Support: Section 40-8-111 (now repealed) clearly means financial support where it refers to "support". In re Adoption of Smigaj, 171 M 531, 560 P2d 141 (1977), followed by In re the Adoption of S.L.R., 196 M 411, 640 P2d 886, 39 St. Rep. 156 (1982).

Collateral Attack on Adoption Decree — Res Judicata: The res judicata doctrine bars an action to void an adoption decree when the issue of the best interests of the children and the validity of the decree were litigated in a prior habeas corpus action. In re Adoption of Conley v. Walden, 171 M 58, 555 P2d 960 (1976).

In Habeas Corpus Proceeding Welfare of Child as Paramount Factor: Habeas corpus proceeding seeking custody of children is an equitable proceeding, and whether the action is treated as habeas corpus or a petition to set aside an adoption, the welfare of the child is the paramount factor. Application of Conley v. Walden, 166 M 369, 533 P2d 955 (1975).

Reliance Upon Judicial Ruling of Other States: In granting petition for adoption without consent of parents, Montana court was entitled to rely on ruling of Missouri court depriving parents of custody, and even though parents, 5 years later, persuaded the Missouri court to set aside its ruling, the Montana adoption was made in the best interest of the children and would not be set aside. Application of Conley v. Walden, 166 M 369, 533 P2d 955 (1975).

Mother to Consent Lacking Evidence of Her Ability and Failure to Support: Minor child supported during preceding 4 years by its father and aunt and uncle did not warrant order authorizing adoption of child by aunt and uncle after father's death where mother did not give consent and there was no evidence mother was able and failed to give support during that period. In re Adoption of Biery, 164 M 353, 522 P2d 1377 (1974).

Noncompliance With Procedure: Mother, after executing affidavit of waiver and consent to adoption, could not effectively revoke that consent by letter addressed to County Department of Public Welfare without following the procedure prescribed by 40-8-111 (now repealed). Application of Hendrickson, 159 M 217, 496 P2d 1115 (1972).

Estoppel: Where mother of child born out of wedlock joined in and agreed to petition allowing natural father and his wife to adopt child, mother was estopped from attacking the resulting decree of adoption 2 years later. In re Adoption of Curtis, 143 M 330, 390 P2d 209 (1964).

Case Notes

Criteria for Intervention in Adoption Proceeding — Unfounded and Untimely Motion to Intervene Properly Denied: Couple A adopted a child through a judicial decree in the District Court of the Twenty-First Judicial District. Couple B also wanted to adopt the child and filed a motion, in the District Court of the Twelth Judicial District where they lived, to intervene and set aside the final decree of adoption, despite the fact that some 6 months had passed since the final adoption decree was issued. Initially, neither District Court was aware of the competing adoption petitions. The Department of Public Health and Human Services had been reviewing both couples as potential adoptive resources at the same time and ultimately determined that because the child had formed a strong bond during placement with couple A for nearly 2 years, it would be in the child's best interests to be adopted by couple A. Couple B contended that the child was a member of their extended family and that the Department should have given them priority as adoptive parents. The Twenty-First District Court held that couple B had no standing to intervene as a matter of right pursuant to Rule 24(a), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), and that permissive intervention under Rule 24(b), M.R.Civ.P., was untimely and would undermine the purpose of adoption to the detriment of the child. Couple B's motion to set aside the final decree pursuant to Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., was also denied on grounds that as nonparties to couple A's adoption petition, couple B had no standing to make the motion and that, in any case, it was untimely because it was made more than 180 days after the final decree. Couple B appealed the denial of both motions, arguing first that they had a legal interest by virtue of the family placement preference in the Indian Child Welfare Act (ICWA) and legislative and Departmental policies favoring adoptive placement with extended family members. The Supreme Court noted that a mere claim of interest is insufficient to support intervention as a matter of right and that a party seeking intervention must make a prima facie showing of a direct, substantial, legally protectable interest in the proceedings. No such showing was made here because the child was not Indian and therefore not subject to the ICWA, nor did the relationship of second cousins meet the definition of extended family member. Couple B next argued that they should have been allowed to intervene under the permissive standard of Rule 24(b), M.R.Civ.P., because the competing adoption petitions had common issues of law and fact. Couple B contended that their delay should be excused by their reliance on misrepresentations made by the Department. The Supreme Court agreed that the Department could have taken a more forthright approach and saved all the parties considerable time and expense, but couple B bore the responsibility for ensuring the timely filing of the motion to intervene. The Supreme Court noted that timeliness is a threshold issue when intervention is sought and that, although none of the factors are dispositive, most courts look to four factors in considering whether a motion to intervene is timely filed: (1) the length of time that the intervenor knew or should have known of its interest in the case before moving to intervene; (2) prejudice to the original parties, if intervention is granted, resulting from the intervenor's delay; (3) prejudice to the intervenor if the motion is denied; and (4) any unusual circumstances mitigating for or against a determination that the application is timely. The Supreme Court considered each factor in detail. Although the third factor weighed in favor of couple B, because denial of the motion to intervene effectively precluded any hope of their adoption of the child, the other factors weighed strongly against them. The District Court made a reasoned analysis when it determined that the motion to intervene was untimely and did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion. Last, because couple B did not address the threshold issues of Rule 60(b) on appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that denial of the motion to set aside the final adoption decree on grounds of standing and timeliness was proper. Part 1
Duty of Placing Party to Disclose Information

42-3-101. Duty to disclose information — form — availability — filing.

DECISIONS AFTER 1997 GENERAL REVISION

Full and Accurate Disclosure of Adoption Information Required: The Jacksons' adoptive son required extensive medical and psychological therapy. The Jacksons sued the state, contending that the state had a legal duty to inform them of the boy's condition and of his parents' medical backgrounds and that failure to do so constituted negligent misrepresentation, negligent nondisclosure, negligence based on lack of informed consent, and negligent supervision. The state contended that the imposition of a common-law or statutory duty to disclose the background information would conflict with its duty to maintain confidentiality of the birth parents' medical records. The District Court dismissed the claims, concluding that the state owed the Jacksons no duty of care upon which the negligence claims could be premised. Citing the opinions of several courts of other states, the Supreme Court held that recognizing a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation in the adoption context would promote public policy and ensure that adoptive parents would assume parenting responsibilities in an informed manner. Anything less than the exercise of due care in the dissemination of information to prospective adoptive parents is unacceptable. Although a slight burden is imposed on the state in providing the information, that burden is justified in light of the compelling need for adoptive parents to receive all available information regarding a child who might soon be a permanent member of the family. Full disclosure of a child's medical and familial background is warranted not only to enable adoptive parents to obtain timely and appropriate medical care for the child but also to enable them to make an intelligent and informed decision to adopt. Summary judgment was reversed. (Note: See this section wherein the 1997 Legislature enacted a statutory requirement that social and medical histories of the birth families must be provided to a prospective adoptive parent.) Official Comments

1994 Commissioners' Comment: This section establishes the minimum requirements for a favorable evaluation. It focuses on factors that may warrant a determination that an individual is not suitable to become an adoptive parent — specific concerns that pose significant risks of harm to the physical or psychological well-being of a minor. A finding of unsuitability has to be supported by a written explanation of precisely how each specific concern poses a risk of harm to the minor. For example, an individual should not be disqualified solely because of low income, or because he or she lives in a small house or apartment, unless the individual's financial status or residence is so inadequate for the needs of a child that it poses a threat to the child's well-being

These provisions are not intended to preclude an agency or an independent evaluator from asking additional questions intended to gauge an individual's capacity to adopt different kinds of children. Nor are evaluators or agencies precluded from offering pre-adoption counseling to prospective adoptive parents. This section should be read in conjunction with other provisions of the Act — e.g., Sections 1-102, 2-104, 2-206 [not enacted in Montana] — that are intended to protect individuals who seek to adopt from being unreasonably or categorically excluded from consideration.

Postadoption Visitation Agreement — District Court Responsibilities: The District Court did not err when it modified sua sponte the parties' postadoption visitation agreement to provide weekend visitation and weekly telephone contact with the birth mother because the modification was determined to be in the best interests of the child. The finding was supported by substantial evidence, and the court did not misapprehend the effect of the evidence. Adoptive parents do not have sole discretion in deciding whether a postadoption visitation agreement should be enforced. Rather, the adoptive parents' wishes are but one factor among many to be considered in determining the child's best interests under 40-4-212. Groves v. Clark, 1999 MT 117, 294 M 417, 982 P2d 446, 56 St. Rep. 490 (1999).

Sua Sponte Modification of Postadoption Visitation Agreement Within Discretion of District Court: The rule that in the context of separation agreements made between spouses, parties cannot make binding agreements concerning the support, custody, or visitation of children applies equally to postadoption agreements made between an adopted child's birth parents and adoptive parents. The best interests of the child are paramount, and sua sponte modification of an original visitation agreement in this case was within the discretion of the District Court after determining the best interests of the adopted child. Groves v. Clark, 1999 MT 117, 294 M 417, 982 P2d 446, 56 St. Rep. 490 (1999). DECISIONS PRIOR TO 1997 GENERAL REVISION

Postadoption Visitation Agreement Between Natural Mother and Adoptive Parents — Responsibilities of District Court: Groves consented to the adoption of her child by the Clarks on the condition that the Clarks sign a visitation agreement allowing Groves to have specified contact with her daughter. After the document was signed and the adoption completed, the Clarks tried to terminate Groves' contact with her daughter. Groves brought an action for specific performance of the visitation agreement, but the District Court held that the agreement was void from its inception under 40-8-125 (now repealed). The Supreme Court reversed, holding that In re C.P.,

221 M 180, 717 P2d 1093 (1986), was distinguishable and that the Legislature would not have enacted 40-8-136 (now repealed) if 40-8-125 (now repealed) terminated the interests of the natural parent altogether. The Supreme Court also noted that 40-8-136 (now repealed) also places a burden upon the adoptive parents and, in this case, upon the adoption agency that acted as Groves' agent, to make sure that the visitation agreement was filed in accordance with that statute. The Supreme Court also concluded that under 40-8-114 (now repealed), the District Court has a responsibility to make sure that the enforcement is in the best interests of the child. Groves v. Clark, 277 M 179, 920 P2d 981, 53 St. Rep. 703 (1996).

Adoption Petition Not Brought in Bad Faith: The mother of a child petitioned to have her child adopted by her ex-husband. The child's father, also an ex-husband of the mother, had the petition dismissed because he had not voluntarily relinquished his parental rights. The biological father asked for sanctions against the mother and her attorney, arguing that the petition had been brought in bad faith and for an improper purpose. He argued that even a cursory reading of 40-8-109 (now repealed) would have shown that the petition could not be properly filed and that the action had only been undertaken to interfere with his visitation rights. The Supreme Court refused to impose sanctions, holding that to avoid sanctions under Rule 11, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), it is not necessary that a party be correct in his view of the law, only that he make a good faith argument in support of his view. DECISIONS PRIOR TO 1997 GENERAL REVISION

Agency's Right to Refuse Adoption Not Absolute — Jurisdiction: In cases in which agency consent is a prerequisite to adoption, the requirement of agency consent is merely an additional safeguard to the child's welfare and the District Court retains jurisdiction to review the agency's decision to determine whether it arbitrarily, capriciously, or unreasonably ignores the child's best interests. 42-4-302. Standing to adopt stepchild.

Official Comments

1994 Commissioners' Comment: In addition to permitting individuals who are within the formal definition of "stepparent" to adopt a minor stepchild under this Article, Section 4-102 [42-4-302] allows an individual who is a de facto stepparent, but is not, or is no longer, married to the custodial parent, to adopt as if he or she were a de jure stepparent. To file a petition under this Article, the de facto stepparent or "second parent" has to have the consent of the court and the custodial parent, whose parental rights will not be terminated by an adoption under this Article. In addition, for the court to grant the petition, the other requirements of this Article have to be met, including the court's determination that the adoption is in the minor adoptee's best interests. See, e.g., Adoption of B.L.V.B., 628 A.2d 1271 (Vt. 1993) (de facto stepmother allowed to adopt her unmarried partner's biological children because it "serves no legitimate state interest" to deny the children "the security of a legally recognized relationship with their second parent"). See similar analysis in Matter of Evan, 153 Misc.2d 844, 583 N.Y.S.2d 997 (Surr. 1992).

If a stepchild's noncustodial parent refuses to consent to the proposed stepparent adoption or cannot be located, an adoption petition under this Article may be joined with a petition under Article 3, Part 5 [not enacted in Montana], to terminate the parent-child relationship with the noncustodial parent. In most cases, the termination petition will allege that the noncustodial parent has failed to support and visit or communicate with the child for at least six months before the stepparent files the adoption petition, Section 3-504(c)(2) [not enacted in Montana], or that, even if the noncustodial parent had a compelling reason for failing to pay support and visit in the past, he is unlikely to perform these duties in the future, Section 3-504(d)(2) [not enacted in Montana]. Of course, the stepparent and the custodial parent may also seek to prove any of the other grounds stated in Section 3-504 [not enacted in Montana] for terminating the noncustodial parent's rights.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 257 in (1) substituted "child" for "stepchild"; and in (1)(a) near beginning before "legal" deleted "sole". Amendment effective April 5, 1999.

Changes From 1994 Uniform Act: After (1)(a) omitted "the spouse had joint legal custody of the child with the child's other parent and the child has resided primarily with the spouse and the stepparent during the 12 months next preceding the filing of the petition"; and made minor changes in style.

"This Article", referred to in the first paragraph of the Commissioners' comment, is Article 4 of the 1994 Act, composed of 13 separate sections, not all of which have been enacted in Montana.

"Article 3, Part 5", referred to in the second paragraph of the Commissioners' comment, is entitled "Petition to Terminate Relationship Between Parent and Child" and is composed of six sections, none of which have been enacted in Montana. However, sections somewhat similar to those in Article 3, Part 5, of the 1994 Act are found in Title 42, ch. 2, parts 5 and 6.

Rights and Obligations of Stepfather — Equitable Adoption Not Recognized: Pierce sought custody of his spouse's child in connection with a dissolution of marriage. Pierce never formally adopted the child, but argued that an equitable adoption existed giving him standing to seek custody. The court reaffirmed the law that equitable adoption is not recognized in Montana. To adopt a child, the correct statutory procedures must be followed, and followed rigorously. Pierce had no standing to contest the custody of the child, nor had he any obligation to that child. Pierce v. Pierce, 198 M 255, 645 P2d 1353, 39 St. Rep. 914 (1982).

1999 Amendment: Chapter 257 in (1) near middle before "parent" inserted "custodial" and at end deleted "or 42-4-305"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 5, 1999.

42-4-304. Consent to adoption — stepparent's spouse.

Official Comments

1994 Commissioners' Comment: The provisions in this and the next two sections pertaining to the consent of the stepchild's custodial parent (i.e., the stepparent's spouse) and the noncustodial parent are similar to the requirements for consent in a direct placement adoption, Article 2, Part 4 [not enacted in Montana], but are specifically tailored to the context of an adoption by a stepparent.

Compiler's Comments

1999 Amendment: Chapter 257 in (2)(a) after "custody of the" deleted "parent's"; and near middle of (2)(c)(iii) substituted "relinquishment" for "consent". Amendment effective April 5, 1999.

Changes From 1994 Uniform Act: In (1) substituted "signed in the presence of an individual authorized to take acknowledgments" for "signed or confirmed in the presence of an individual specified in Section 2-405" (not enacted in Montana); in (2) near beginning after "writing" omitted requirement that statement contain statements required in Section 2-406(a)(1) through (3) and (d)(3) through (6) of 1994 Uniform Adoption Act and may contain optional statements described in Section 2-406(f) (not enacted in Montana); in (2)(c)(ii) after "approved by the court" omitted "pursuant to Section 4-113" (not enacted in Montana) and at end omitted "the other parent remains liable for arrearages of child support unless released from that obligation by the parent executing the consent and by a government entity providing public assistance to the minor" and omitted final subsection that provided "A consent may not waive further notice of the proceedings for adoption of the minor by the stepparent"; and made minor changes in style.

The "next two sections" referred to in the 1994 Commissioners' comment are Sections 4-106, similar to 42-4-305 (now repealed), and 4-107. Section 4-107, specifying the form for a consent executed by other persons, has not been enacted in Montana.

Amendment effective April 5, 1999.

Compiler's Comments

1999 Amendment: Chapter 257 near beginning substituted "shall obtain an order of termination of parental rights of the child's noncustodial parent prior to or contemporaneously with the petition to adopt. Any necessary consents must be filed with the" for "must file a" and after "adoption" deleted "any necessary consents, any required postplacement evaluation" and in second sentence inserted "stepparent shall"; and made minor changes in style. 42-4-311. Legal consequences of adoption of stepchild.

Official Comments

1994 Commissioners' Comment: Although the legal consequences of an adoption of a stepchild are generally the same as under Sections 1-104 through 1-106 [not enacted in Montana], this section provides that the rights and duties of the adoptive parent's spouse — i.e., the child's custodial parent — are not terminated by the adoption. The child remains in all respects the child of the adoptive parent's spouse, even if the spouse is deceased, and becomes in all respects the child of the adoptive stepparent. The adopted child, the custodial parent, and the adoptive parent have rights to inheritance and intestate succession by, through, and from each other.

By contrast, except for child support arrearages, the rights and duties of the child's former noncustodial parent are terminated, including the former parent's right to inheritance or intestate succession through or from the adopted child. Nonetheless, the adopted child and the child's descendants retain the right to inheritance or intestate succession through or from the former noncustodial parent. In this respect, the Act is consistent with the provisions of the Uniform Probate Code (UPC) [Title 72, ch. 1 through 5, and ch. 16, part 6] which apply to stepparent adoptions.

Compiler's Comments

Changes From 1994 Uniform Act: In (2)(b) substituted "child" for "minor adoptee", substituted "either" for "the", and after "either parent" omitted "who is the adoptive stepparent's spouse or deceased spouse"; and after (2)(c) omitted subsection that provided "or a court order or agreement for visitation or communication with a minor adoptee which is approved by the court pursuant to Section 4-113" (not enacted in Montana).

Chapter Compiler's Comments

1997 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 480, L. 1997, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because the bill gives the department of public health and human services authority to adopt administrative rules. The rules must provide procedures for the putative father registry, including methods of notification, filing, and accessing information. The department shall adopt rules for licensing child-placing agencies. To the extent feasible, the rules should incorporate existing procedures. The needs of the child in the adoption proceeding must be the primary focus of the rules."

Applicability: Section 173, Ch. 480, L. 1997 provided: "(1) [Sections 1 through 156] [Title 42, chapters 1 through 7, and Title 52, chapter 8, part 1] apply to proceedings commenced on or after October 1, 1997.

(2) A petition for adoption filed prior to October 1, 1997, is governed by the law in effect at the time the petition was filed.

(3) The putative father registry requirements apply to children born on or after October 1, 1997."

Effective Date: Section 177, Ch. 480, L. 1997, provided: "(1) Except as provided in subsection (2), [this act] is effective October 1, 1997.

Criteria for Intervention in Adoption Proceeding — Unfounded and Untimely Motion to Intervene Properly Denied: Couple A adopted a child through a judicial decree in the District Court of the Twenty-First Judicial District. Couple B also wanted to adopt the child and filed a motion, in the District Court of the Twelth Judicial District where they lived, to intervene and set aside the final decree of adoption, despite the fact that some 6 months had passed since the final adoption decree was issued. Initially, neither District Court was aware of the competing adoption petitions. The Department of Public Health and Human Services had been reviewing both couples as potential adoptive resources at the same time and ultimately determined that because the child had formed a strong bond during placement with couple A for nearly 2 years, it would be in the child's best interests to be adopted by couple A. Couple B contended that the child was a member of their extended family and that the Department should have given them priority as adoptive parents. The Twenty-First District Court held that couple B had no standing to intervene as a matter of right pursuant to Rule 24(a), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), and that permissive intervention under Rule 24(b), M.R.Civ.P., was untimely and would undermine the purpose of adoption to the detriment of the child. Couple B's motion to set aside the final decree pursuant to Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., was also denied on grounds that as nonparties to couple A's adoption petition, couple B had no standing to make the motion and that, in any case, it was untimely because it was made more than 180 days after the final decree. Couple B appealed the denial of both motions, arguing first that they had a legal interest by virtue of the family placement preference in the Indian Child Welfare Act (ICWA) and legislative and Departmental policies favoring adoptive placement with extended family members. The Supreme Court noted that a mere claim of interest is insufficient to support intervention as a matter of right and that a party seeking intervention must make a prima facie showing of a direct, substantial, legally protectable interest in the proceedings. No such showing was made here because the child was not Indian and therefore not subject to the ICWA, nor did the relationship of second cousins meet the definition of extended family member. Couple B next argued that they should have been allowed to intervene under the permissive standard of Rule 24(b), M.R.Civ.P., because the competing adoption petitions had common issues of law and fact. Couple B contended that their delay should be excused by their reliance on misrepresentations made by the Department. The Supreme Court agreed that the Department could have taken a more forthright approach and saved all the parties considerable time and expense, but couple B bore the responsibility for ensuring the timely filing of the motion to intervene. The Supreme Court noted that timeliness is a threshold issue when intervention is sought and that, although none of the factors are dispositive, most courts look to four factors in considering whether a motion to intervene is timely filed: (1) the length of time that the intervenor knew or should have known of its interest in the case before moving to intervene; (2) prejudice to the original parties, if intervention is granted, resulting from the intervenor's delay; (3) prejudice to the intervenor if the motion is denied; and (4) any unusual circumstances mitigating for or against a determination that the application is timely. The Supreme Court considered each factor in detail. Although the third factor weighed in favor of couple B, because denial of the motion to intervene effectively precluded any hope of their adoption of the child, the other factors weighed strongly against them. The District Court made a reasoned analysis when it determined that the motion to intervene was untimely and did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion. Last, because couple B did not address the threshold issues of Rule 60(b) on appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that denial of the motion to set aside the final adoption decree on grounds of standing and timeliness was proper. In re Adoption of C.C.L.B., 2001 MT 66, 305 M 22, 22 P3d 646 (2001).

Right to Intervene in Adoption of Indian Child — State Commitment to Indian Child Welfare Act: Prior to birth, Nellie Silk, paternal aunt of M.E.M., expressed an interest in caring for the child because she was aware of the parents' problems with parenting; however, after the child was born he was placed in foster care by the Hill County Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (SRS). Upon learning of the placement, Silk wrote to SRS requesting custody. SRS responded that placement with Silk would be inappropriate because of SRS efforts to reintegrate the family, but that Silk would be considered if adoption were to occur. After parental rights were terminated (see In re M.E.M., 209 M 192, 679 P2d 1241, 41 St. Rep. 636 (1984)), Silk was not informed of the proceedings, of M.E.M.'s availability for adoption, or of M.E.M.'s preadoptive placement with a non-Indian family. Silk's subsequent petition for adoption and motion to intervene were denied by the District Court. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that Silk had an interest in adoption stemming from the Indian Child Welfare Act of 1978 (ICWA), 25 U.S.C. 1901, et seq., and that the state had a strong and independent commitment to the principles embodied in the ICWA. Silk also had a right to intervene under Rule 24(a), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), and although the District Court had ruled that her motion was not timely, the Supreme Court held that the motion must be granted in light of the fact that she was kept in ignorance and could not have been more diligent or earlier in her petition or motion. In re M.E.M., 223 M 234, 725 P2d 212, 43 St. Rep. 1684 (1986). See also In re K.H. & K.L.E., 1999 MT 128, 294 M 466, 981 P2d 1190, 56 St. Rep. 515 (1999).

Competing Petitions for Adoption: The court did not abuse its discretion by delaying determination of a jurisdictionally perfected adoption petition ready for hearing to consider subsequent petitions since the court cannot be compelled to fragment the case because of different filings and readiness for hearing of competing petitions. The best interest of the child is the paramount consideration. In re Adoption of Redcrow, 172 M 366, 563 P2d 1121 (1977).

Invalid Adoption Decree: An adoption decree was invalid for lack of notice to the natural parents and the absence of consent by abandonment since only 24 days elapsed from birth to filing

Postadoption Visitation Agreement Between Natural Mother and Adoptive Parents — Responsibilities of District Court: Groves consented to the adoption of her child by the Clarks on the condition that the Clarks sign a visitation agreement allowing Groves to have specified contact with her daughter. After the document was signed and the adoption completed, the Clarks tried to terminate Groves' contact with her daughter. Groves brought an action for specific performance of the visitation agreement, but the District Court held that the agreement was void from its inception under 40-8-125 (now repealed). The Supreme Court reversed, holding that In re C.P., 221 M 180, 717 P2d 1093 (1986), was distinguishable and that the Legislature would not have enacted 40-8-136 (now repealed) if 40-8-125 (now repealed) terminated the interests of the natural parent altogether. The Supreme Court also noted that 40-8-136 (now repealed) also places a burden upon the adoptive parents and, in this case, upon the adoption agency that acted as Groves' agent, to make sure that the visitation agreement was filed in accordance with that statute. The Supreme Court also concluded that under 40-8-114 (now repealed), the District Court has a responsibility to make sure that the enforcement is in the best interests of the child. Groves v. Clark, 277 M 179, 920 P2d 981, 53 St. Rep. 703 (1996).

Adoption by Stepparent — No Mandatory Termination of Grandparents' Visitation: There is no clear legislative intent or public policy that mandates termination of visitation for natural grandparents when a grandchild is adopted by a stepparent. Kanvick v. Reilly, 233 M 324, 760 P2d 743, 45 St. Rep. 1524 (1988).

Termination of Parental Rights While Maintaining Possibility of Parental Contact — Adoption Exception: There is no apparent conflict in terminating parental rights while simultaneously maintaining the possibility of parental contact. It was within the trial judge's discretion to terminate the mother's parental rights, due to her recurring mental problems, while allowing contact with the children if the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) determined it was in the children's best interests, since the children had a psychological attachment to their mother. However, when parental rights are terminated, continuing contact is allowable only in exceptional cases. In the event of adoption, continuing contact cannot be court-ordered even with Department approval. In re Declaring V.B., T.B., D.B., & B.B. Youths in Need of Care, 229 M 133, 744 P2d 1248, 44 St. Rep. 1838 (1987).

Parents to Have No Visitation Rights After Termination of Parental Rights Proceeding: Neither 40-8-125 (now repealed) nor 41-3-611 provides for a retention of visitation rights by the natural parent in the event of termination of parental rights and later adoption. In re C.P., 221 M 180, 717 P2d 1093, 43 St. Rep. 728 (1986).

Alternative Methods of Inheritance: Where claimant sought distribution of decedent's estate, claiming an acknowledgment in writing as required by section 91-404, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), and an adoption as provided under section 61-136, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), and offered proof of her right to inherit under both statutes, the claimant was not precluded from prevailing on the ground that she availed herself of both statutes and that they were alternate methods by which a person may become an heir. In re Glick's Estate, 136 M 176, 346 P2d 987 (1959).

Effect of Subsequent Will's Definition of "Issue" on Earlier Trust: Where testatrix included adopted grandchild in her will and therein expressly defined "issue" to include adopted children, this indicated clear intent to include adopted grandchild as "issue" in trust instrument created earlier by testatrix. Holter v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. of Helena, 135 M 27, 336 P2d 701 (1959).

Adopted Child's Right to Inherit From Natural Parent Under Former Law: Adoption of child did not destroy his status as one of the issue of his natural ancestors, nor did adopted child lose his right to inherit from his natural parent. In re Kay's Estate, 127 M 172, 260 P2d 391 (1953).

Stranger Estopped to Collaterally Attack Adoption: Where all parties to adoption proceeding for many years considered it valid and acted on belief that valid adoption had taken place, evidence of such fact was properly admitted on collateral attack by stranger to proceedings who sought to revoke letters of administration granted to deceased's adopted son, and a party thereto or one claiming under him was estopped from attacking the order collaterally some 30 years after it was made. In re Hoermann's Estate, 108 M 386, 91 P2d 394 (1939).

Inheritance Through Adoptive Parents: As against collateral heirs, an adopted child, in absence of a will, succeeds to all the estate of the person adopting. In re Pepin's Estate, 53 M 240, 163 P 104 (1917).

1995 Amendment: Chapter 546 in (2) and in (3), in two places, substituted "department of public health and human services" for "department of social and rehabilitation services". Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

1991 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 274, L. 1991, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because [section 7(3)] [42-10-127(3)] grants rulemaking authority to the department of social and rehabilitation services [now department of public health and human services] for the purpose of establishing procedures for continuing state medical assistance benefits in addition to federally aided benefits in certain cases. The legislature intends, as a matter of policy, that when the state provides medical assistance benefits in addition to the federal benefits available under an adoption assistance agreement, the benefits must continue when a child relocates to a state that has agreed under a compact to reciprocate by providing additional nonfederal coverage to children moving to Montana. It is intended that the medicaid card may be used as the identification for these services as well as for the true "medicaid" elements of the state program. It is intended that [section 7(3)] [42-10-127(3)] provide a means of improving, as far as possible, the chances for handicapped and other "hard-to-place" children to gain family settings for their development. It is intended that in those instances in which the plan for a particular child is adoption (with assistance) by parents who already live in another state or move there, the department of social and rehabilitation services [now department of public health and human services] may provide the full measure of its services to these special-needs children. It is intended that out-of-state adoptions be an additional resource for Montana children that would not be available if the department of family services [now department of public health and human services] had to rely on finding families for special-needs children on an entirely local basis."
